Wilkie Collins Is Dead

William Calderwood Collins is dead, but one expression is heard on all sides—that of regret. "Wilkie" Collins, as he was familiarly known in Sacramento, was a general favorite. The announcement of the death of no other citizen of the community could call forth more sorrowful and sympathetic remarks. For twenty-five years he had been connected with the Sacramento Evening Bee, and was one of those who ever exalted his calling, was honest with his employers, honest with the public, and honest with himself. He had a smile for everyone, and no matter how dark the clouds, he only saw the silver lining. He never intentionally wounded the feelings of anyone, and had no enemies. He used to say: "Life is too short for quarreling." Wilkie was a man of ideas, had a keen sense of humor, and withal was a graceful and fluent writer. No man in newspaper work in Northern California had a wider acquaintance with theatrical people. He knew familiarly almost every actor of note in the United States, and had during his long newspaper experience interviewed almost every star in the country. His father, the late Barney Collins, was a man of great oratorical ability, and one of the best Shakespearean scholars of his day. "Wilkie" Collins was born in Indiana in February, 1861, and was in his forty-seventh year. He came to California and to Butte County in 1879, and was apprenticed to the printing business in Chico. He commenced writing while working at the case, and soon won his way to the editorial-room. His bright, spicy and witty stories brought the local paper into State prominence, and he soon was called to a larger field. "Wilkie" Collins is survived by his mother; two brothers, Utric, a well-known actor, now in the East, and Enos; a sister, Mrs. A. B. Dorrett of Berkeley; a wife and two children, Mrs. Alice Weisman and Ray B. Collins, the latter a member of the Elleford Company. The funeral will take place at 3 p. m., Thursday, from the chapel of Clark & Booth. Interment in East Lawn cemetery.

New York's New High Art Theatre

The laying of the corner-stone of the New Theatre recently was an occasion of far-reaching interest in the art history of this city and country. So far, the theatre in the United States, and in every English-speaking country, has been primarily a place of amusement. It has been conducted, first of all, to make money, and such literary and artistic value as it has had has been incidental and has been abandoned when falling receipts showed a failing public interest. This does not mean that many of our actors have not been actuated by high artistic purposes, for many an actor has risked his hard-earned fortune in the effort to give to the public a higher class of plays than the public cared for. When the actor's savings were gone he quickly had to fall back upon such entertainment as the public was willing to pay for in the "palmy days." Shakespeare was followed by farces filled with an obvious horseplay which now finds its only place upon the vaudeville stage. But, with the opening of the New Theatre next November, it will be possible to produce plays of high literary and artistic quality without regard to whether they are popular and without involving the actors in risk. The undertaking will start with the most costly and impressive theatre in the country, and with a subscription of $3,000,000 provided for just this purpose of familiarizing Americans with a wider range of drama than is possible in the commercial theatre. Dr. Holmes once said that a lecture to be successful should contain nothing which could not reach the dulllest intelligence in thirty seconds. That requirement is much more true of plays that hope for the long runs upon which financial success depends. The New Theatre will give a hearing to plays of intellectual quality, yet to which a long run would be obviously impossible. That does not mean that the theatre is seeking uninteresting or tiresome plays. Of course, the prestige of producing a new play which shall achieve a great success would be especially valuable to the new house in its first season. But as at least two plays and one opera comique will be presented each week, there will be room for plays of more than one sort. As the poems of Browning and the novels of Meredith find publishers in the full knowledge that they cannot compete as "sellers" with the stories of John Fox, Hopkinson Smith or Mary Johnston, so at the New Theatre it will be possible to see plays which will interest six audiences without being able to attract six thousand. The effect of a high standard of quality at this theatre upon the more ambitious actors and managers is likely to be among the most useful results of the New Theatre. Actors like Sothorn and Mrs. Fiske, managers like the Frohmans, Klaw & Erlanger and Belasco are not likely to allow themselves to be outdone by the endowed venture in the adequacy of their productions, at least, while, if the New Theatre shall give popularity to plays of high intellectual quality, the private managers will naturally look for commercial success in the same direction. If the New Theatre be not wrecked upon the rock of amateurish incompetence at the start, its opening will make the year 1909 a red-letter date in American dramatic history.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Norris & Rowe Circus

By the look of things we would not be surprised if The Donaldson Lithograph Company, the heaviest creditor of the Norris & Rowe circus, would put that concern out next season, with H. S. Rowe in charge. A meeting of the creditors of the circus was held in the court-house at Santa Cruz last Monday. The proceedings were conducted by Edward Martin, referee in bankruptcy, and as a result of the conference Mr. Martin appointed Joseph S. Geisler, an experienced circus man, trustee for Norris & Rowe, fixing his bonds in the sum of $10,000.

Caruso Gives a Week's Pay

New York, Dec. 29.—Enrique Caruso will contribute a week's salary to the earthquake sufferers in Italy, his native land. Caruso is said to receive $2,500 a week at the Metropolitan Opera House.

W. B. Sollender of Bishop, Inyo County, is figuring on building a theatre for his town.

Alcazar

Another week of The Girl of the Golden West begins next Monday evening, with every indication that the drawing power of the great Belasco play has increased rather than decreased since its first presentation. It is not so much in its story as in the atmospheric effects employed and the brilliant acting of at least three members of the Alcazar company, that The Girl of the Golden West enthalls. Indeed, the narrative is little more than a series of dramatic incidents in the career of the Girl, but the clothing of each incident with a marvelous realism intensifies the general coherence, while the individual and team work of Evelyn Vaughan as the Girl, Bertram Lytell as the road agent and Will R. Walling as the sheriff compels admiring attention when it is in evidence. If fate had willed that Miss Vaughan instead of Blanche Bates create the role of the Girl, Broadway would now have another favorite, for all who have seen both actresses in the part pronounce the Alcazar's young leading woman more than equal to its every exaction. Mr. Lytell has never appeared to better advantage than as the road agent, because the role calls for the virility which is his best forte, and Mr. Walling's acting as Jack Rance is simply splendid.

Orpheum

Rare enjoyment may be anticipated from the program for the week beginning this Sunday matinee. Wilfred Clarke, a dashing light comedian, will appear in a farce of which he is the author, entitled What Will Happen Next. It has proved enormously successful in the East, where it won the unqualified praise of the most eminent critics. Mr. Clarke, who is a nephew of the great tragedian, Edwin Booth and a brother of that sterling actor Creston Clarke, will have the support of his own company. De Biere, an illusionist, will puzzle and entertain the Orpheum audiences. The Salvaggis, whirlwind dancers, are expected to prove a tremendous success. The troupe includes four women and one man, and their dancing is described as furious and strenuous. In addition to their whirlwind dancing the Salvaggis introduce characteristic Parisian, Spanish and classic numbers. Edwin Latell, an amusing comedian and a capital musician, will present a musical monologue, called Dull Care, in which he will impersonate an eccentricity named Bunion. Josie and Julia Rooney, daughters of Pat Rooney, will present an attractive offering, consisting of singing and dancing. Hibbert and Warren, two unique minstrels, will indulge in a pastime which they call The Pianist and the Dancer. Gus Hibbert is considered one of the best eccentric dancers in the country, while his partner, Fred Warren, is thoroughly at home at the piano. Eva Taylor, whose recent success in Chums is fresh in the public mind, will return for one week only, and Gus Edwards' School Boys and Girls, whose popularity is greater than ever, will conclude their engagement with this program. A new series of Orpheum motion pictures will conclude the performance.

Valencia

So great has been the glee and so many have been the laughs caused by the hundreds of funny lines and amusing situations in The College Widow that the Valencia Theatre management has decided to continue George Ade's delightful pictorial comedy for another week and the concluding performances will not be given on Sunday afternoon and evening, as was originally intended, but seven days later. Robert Warwick, handsome, big of frame and looking the half-back hero, Billy Bolton, to the very finger tips, gives a sterling performance of the part. The Widow is delightful Blanche Stoddard and she has no difficulty in giving just the correct touch to the character. Charles Dow Clark, as "Bud" Hicks, the freshman, is one of the great laughing hits of the show. W. T. Sheehan, as the trainer, Matty McGowan, is another of the irresistible mirth-provokers. The character of the waitress, Flora Wiggins, is acted by Helen Lackaye for every laugh that there is in it. Grace Travers is the real thing as the athletic girl. The College Widow will be followed by Upton Sinclair's fantastic drama in four acts, Prince Hagen, which will receive its initial production on any stage.

YEARLY STARS

Archie Boyd is Appearing With Shore Acres in Portland This Week

PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 28.—The San Francisco DRAMATIC REVIEW is entitled to congratulations for the fine Christmas number issued by them this year. It is without doubt the acme of anything along dramatic lines ever published this side of New York. On all sides I have heard nothing but words of praise for the management in placing such a fine number upon the news market. Several news agents in this city told me that they were completely sold out the day they arrived, and there have been demands ever since upon them for copies. The Heilig Theatre had Louis James in Peer Gynt for the Christmas bill. Mr. James pays us a visit regularly every season and we have come to expect great things at his hands, and we were not disappointed in his present play, although it must be admitted that, as far as the play itself is concerned, Mr. James has had better vehicles. As far as the acting is concerned, he gave us the high-class delineation we expected. Aphie James gave him first-class support, and the balance of the company was up to all demands. The scenery was as good as ever displayed in this city. Last night George Cohan's Fifty Miles from Boston was the bill. It remains for the week. It is along the line of all of Cohan's plays, and the audience seemed to like it. It ranks with Cohan's best efforts. The company was satisfactory in all respects. The songs were catchy, the stage settings elaborate and the costuming satisfactory. Charles Willard and Suzanne Westford are the best of the company, and Hazel Lowry in the soubrette role was dainty and refreshing.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—The Bakronians offered Are You a Mason yesterday to packed houses at the matinee and evening performances. This is the first time that they have essayed this piece, and they did more than good with it. The company were all well up in their roles, and for the first performance the piece went very well indeed. William Dills and Sydney Ayers as the faking Masons were right in their element and kept the audiences convulsed with laughter. They played their roles up to all requirements. Howard Russell also came in for rounds of applause for his admirable work. Of the lady folks, Mrs. Mina Gleason is entitled to the most praise for one of her usual high-class portrayals. The minor parts were ably filled by the balance of the company. Next week, Zaza.

BAKER THEATRE (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—Shore Acres is with us again this week at this theatre. It opened last night and was welcomed by a good house—I dare say many of those present had seen the play before and went again to revive the good impressions it had previously made. This year Archie Boyd is found playing the role made famous by James Hearne, and he gives a faithful presentation of the part and is a worthy successor to that capable actor. Dorothy Hearne, daughter of James Hearne, is playing the leading lady's part, Helen Barry, and no doubt has inherited some of her father's talent. The balance of the company was equal to the demands made upon them. Next week, The Devil's Auction.

ORPHEUM THEATRE (C. N. Sutton, mgr.)—The show presented at this theatre last week by Manager Sutton was up to the usual high standard we are receiving weekly at this theatre. As a consequence there has been no diminishing in the business bestowed upon this popular playhouse. Commencing this evening George Primrose and his dancing boys are the headliners; Mr. and Mrs. Gene Hughes; Three Yoscarys; Pictorial Postal Card Album; Chadwick Trio; Alice Winona; Maude Francis and company and Mlle. Pertina.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—For the second week of its engagement the new stock company offers Moths. It was presented yesterday to a good house. Orral Humphrey in the leading role gave a good performance, as did Ralph Belmont in his part. Corinee Walton displayed some good emotional work, and Lillian Griffiths was good in her character work.

STAR THEATRE (J. H. Ericson, mgr.)—Why Girls Leave Home is the bill at this theatre for this week, and at yesterday's opening the audience was packed in like sardines. This is just the kind of a piece that the patrons of this theatre desire. The company playing the piece this season is very fair, and the scenery used in the production is worthy of mention. No doubt it will do a good week's business. Next week, Jane Eyre.

GRAND THEATRE (J. H. Ericson, mgr.)—Mlle. Summerville and her trained horse is the headliner. Others on the bill are John Birch; Holmes and Holliston; James and Lucia Cooper; Payne and Lee; Brown and Hodges, and Fred Bauer.

Pantages has a company of eight people producing A Night With the Poets as their feature act for this week. Singing, dancing and high-class living pictures are all embraced in the sketch. A. W. W.

Our New Chief of Police Was Formerly an Actor

Early in the 70's Jessie Cook, now chief of police of this city, was a member of the Trio Braziers, famous grotesques and pantomimists. He was one of the end-men and conceded to be the most graceful and agile high kicker of that time. This team of performers presented a line of business that is almost unheard of at the present time. Many old-timers who attended Woodward's Gardens and the Adelphia Theatre in their palmy days will no doubt recall the act in which the new chief of police was such a clever performer.

John D. O'Hara, Late of San Francisco, Tickles Broadway With His Comedy

NEW YORK, Dec. 27.—At the Broadway Theatre last week Joseph O'Mara presented Patrick Bidwell's new romantic musical comedy, Peggy Machree, for the first time in this city. When the clever Irish actor was forced by an enthusiastic audience to make a speech at the end of the second of the three acts, he remarked that he and his company had tried to present a play that was good and clean and wholesome. Mr. O'Mara's old Irish melodies were a feature of the evening, but the honors were by no means his alone. Adrienne Augarde, the Peggy, was certainly not more than second to the actor, and Katherine Moran as Mollie Cafferty and Jennie Lamont as Peggy's foster-mother deserved applause. With sparkling music and a score of charming songs, it seemed almost a shame to give only one song to John D. O'Hara, who as a canny Scotch majordomo provided some of the best comedy Broadway has seen in many a day. But that one song was worth going to hear if there had been no others. All of Mr. O'Mara's support, including a large chorus, did excellent work, and Peggy Machree seemed on the opening night to be a success. * * * Enrico Caruso was indisposed last Monday night and the part of Manrico in Il Trovatore, which was heard for the first time this season in the Metropolitan Opera House, was sung by Riccardo Martin, the Kentucky tenor. It was his first appearance here in the role, and he shared with Mme. Eames the honors of the evening. He has done nothing better here and the audience was quick to applaud his excellent singing, especially in the Di quella pira, after which the audience recalled him half a dozen times at the close of the act. Mme. Eames's Leonora has long been recognized as one of her best parts. She was in excellent voice and sang with an abundance of dramatic power. Mme. Homer was, as last season, an admirable Azucena. Mr. Amato, who was heard for the first time here as the Count, made a good impression in the part and was heartily applauded for his singing of Il balen. A large and brilliant audience recalled the singers enthusiastically many times in the evening, and Mme. Eames received an immense basket of roses. Mr. Spetrino conducted. * * * At the Majestic Theatre in Boston last week, Julia Marlowe produced the poetical drama, The Goddess of Reason, with which Mary Johnston, novelist, makes her debut as a dramatist. A large and fashionable audience was present on the opening night. The play is in five acts, with six scenes, and has to do with the French Revolution. All the scenes are laid in the city of Nantes or vicinity. Miss Marlowe takes the part of Yvette, a shepherd girl, who is a natural daughter of a fisherman's wife and the Baron of Morbec. Yvette's noble father dies, and his successor meets the girl in a forest and falls in love with her. The next time they meet Yvette is participating in the French Revolution as the Goddess of Reason, and leading a mob to burn the ducal chateau. The Duke protects Yvette, but she escapes him, rejoins the revolutionists, and through jealousy sacrifices him. Finally realizing her mistake she gives herself up to death with him. The spirit of the Reign of Terror predominates. Miss Marlowe was called before the curtain at the end of each act and was warmly applauded. Miss Johnston also thanked the audience. * * * The Battle, produced at the Savoy last Monday evening, is a capital and labor play written from the view point of capital. It is not the side which is most often heard—in plays and books. Cleveland Moffett, the author, will probably argue, as he did in a curtain speech, that he gives both sides and draws no conclusions. John J. Haggleton, multimillionaire, puts his side of the case in such a way that the average man can't help feeling that he is right. Still, an out and out labor agitator speaker who knew his business and his text could probably meet every one of John J. Haggleton's propositions with one for his side of the case that would be equally convincing. Only the multimillionaire in the play doesn't have to meet anybody of that type. Wilton Lackaye as the capitalist is generally an admirable figure, suggesting power, rugged perseverance and intelligent resourcefulness. H. B. Warner, as the son, could not be better. Elsie Ferguson was a girl weakened in misfortune and loving, and played with charming simplicity. E. M. Holland gives a finished, convincing sketch, and Charles Abbe a very amusing one. Josephine Victor exhibits an excess of emotional temperament. * * * Wm. H. Thompson presented for the first time in vaudeville at Hammerstein's Victoria last week a one-act adaptation of Waterloo by Sir Conan Doyle. It is a version of the play in which Sir Henry Irving was seen in this city.

Mr. Thompson's delineation of old Corp. Brewster, who drove his powder wagon through the burning hedge at the battle of Waterloo and thereby saved his regiment, pleased the audience, and he received several curtain calls. * * * The engagement of De Wolf Hopper, in The Pied Piper, at the Majestic Theatre, has been extended, and will not end on January 2d, as originally planned. * * * Henrietta Crosman is to make her vaudeville debut on January 18th in the Colonial Theatre in a one-act playlet, entitled Peggy O'Connor. * * * George Broadhurst's new comedy, An International Marriage, with Digby Bell in the stellar role, will begin an engagement at Weber's Theatre, January 4th, following Annie Russell in The Stronger Sex. * * * Mabel Berra took the place of Albertine Benson as the Valentine Fairy in the cast of Little Nemo at the New Amsterdam Theatre last evening. * * * Peter McCullough, the English Sergeant of the Reserves, who arrived from London on Sunday and was immediately engaged by the Shubert's as commissionaire for Maxine Elliott's theatre, which opens on December 30th, began his active duties yesterday, standing on guard at the temporary box-office in the Casino Theatre. * * * Blanche Ring, the musical comedy star, is announced by Percy G. Williams as his latest acquisition to vaudeville. She will appear at the Colonial Theatre late in January in some new songs. * * * The Yale Dramatic Association, comprising a cast of twenty-five men, accompanied by the university orchestra of twelve pieces, will go on the road December 30th, opening in Hartford that evening in The Critic and The Fire-eater.

Who Can Write a Western Play?

THE DRAMATIC REVIEW believes that of the West the great big heart-throbbing masterpieces of dramatic literature are to be written.

To demonstrate our judgment and to encourage substantially Western playwrights, we invite the competition of those who believe they have ability in this line.

Our Offer

In an open competition, restricted only to a residence West of the Mississippi and to a subject relating to the vast Western empire that is bounded by the big river on the east and the mighty Pacific Ocean on the west, we propose to have selected by a committee of three competent judges, the best tragedy, comedy, comedy-drama or farce, that is submitted, and to the lucky author or authors we promise a production and royalty for one entire season.

Through the co-operation of W. J. Elleford, one of our most progressive and most influential road managers, we are enabled to make this splendid offer. Not only will the winner of the contest get a production, but will for one year receive a weekly royalty, figured on the basis of royalties now paid.

The Competition Is In Force From This Date and Closes on May 31, 1909

Each manuscript must be type-written when submitted and must be accompanied by the name and address of the writer in a separate envelope. This envelope will be numbered, and a receipt numbered to correspond will be returned. The manuscript will also bear this number and not until the competition is ended will anyone outside of the Editor of THE DRAMATIC REVIEW learn the identity of the author of the manuscript.

All manuscripts will be returned after the competition.

Certain conditions attending this competition will be explained in a printed form, as the manuscripts are received.

The profits to be derived from a successful play are great. THE LION AND THE MOUSE has made Charles Klein a very wealthy man. Eugene Walter wrote PAID IN FULL after several failures. Last year he made something in the neighborhood of $200,000 from royalties. George Broadhurst received last year $250,000 from his royalties for THE MAN OF THE HOUR.

Send all manuscripts to Competition Department, DRAMATIC REVIEW, San Francisco.

Sis Hopkins is Very Popular in Los Angeles and Finds Two Weeks There Very Profitable

LOS ANGELES, December 31.—Benefit plans, theatrical changes, grand opera, and a general revival of the amusement enterprises locally have characterized the passing of the holidays. We've all been too busy really to know just which way things were turning, but enough has happened to make a bit of interesting reading. In the first place, the re-organized Belasco-Blackwood company, with Lewis S. Stone as its bright and particular star, enjoyed a most auspicious opening at the rejuvenated Belasco Theatre Monday evening, and despite the social and musical counter attraction of the Sparks-Berry grand opera at the Mason, there was an overflow house to say nothing of the overflow of good feeling, cordiality and general camaraderie which prevailed. John H. Blackwood recovered from his recent indisposition—he was threatened with pneumonia but managed to side-step it—and resplendent in brand new open front clothes, shone genially in the front of the house. On the stage the pick and flower of the two companies joined in giving so good a performance of The Easterner that the house was loth to leave even after the performance was over. Stone had to make a speech and was particularly happy in it, while Florence Oakley and the other ladies of the company were literally smothered in the floral offerings profusely showered at them by the delighted audience. But more of that anon. Lillian Albertson, formerly leading woman with the Belasco company and incidentally the most popular leading woman the old Belasco company ever had, occupied a box with her husband, A. J. Levy, opening night.

Plans for the Glazier benefit are rapidly taking on a degree of definiteness. The committee having the matter in charge have a vast abundance of excellent talent available, and will select a program which will run about three hours and a half. Dick Ferris will be stage manager, and that is sufficient guarantee that the affair will move briskly and without unnecessary delays. Tickets have been placed on sale and members of the Thespian colony are meeting with hearty receptions in their disposal of them, one actor having disposed of 150 in one day. They sell at $1.00 each, except for the boxes, which will be raffled or auctioned off. While the primary purpose of the benefit is to raise $1,700 with which to pay off the mortgage on the Glazier home at Glendale, it is desired to accomplish more than that, and to roll up a little balance for the widow and son to care for their immediate needs pending the settlement of the estate, since practically all of the dead actor's assets were invested in real estate and other securities not easily or quickly negotiable. In addition to the Glazier benefit, a benefit performance will be given by Signor Lambardi's Italian opera singers at the Mason Sunday afternoon for the earthquake stricken Italian sufferers. It will be remembered that Italy responded liberally at the time of the San Francisco disaster, contributing some $400,000. Southern California, not to be backward in reciprocation, is actively at work raising money to be sent the sufferers. Official municipal action is being taken, and the benefit Sunday will be a part of the Los Angeles contribution. A large attendance is expected. Mrs. Mae Scott, matron at the Orpheum, was the recipient of a handsome little private "benefit" at the hands of her fellow employees at Manager Drown's theatre. Mrs. Scott met with an accident while visiting a friend who was a patient at one of the hospitals, falling and breaking her leg. The attaches of the Orpheum raised a very comfortable little purse among themselves to assist in tiding the popular woman through her misfortune. Reports that Ferris Hartman is to close his season at the Grand in a fortnight or three weeks are meeting with a strenuous denial both from the actor-manager himself and from the management of the house as well. Announcement of future play plans is made as proof of an intention to play an extended season. Business has been eminently satisfactory. The Toymaker, now in its second week, is doing a fine business. The Auditorium Company, proprietors of the Theatre Beautiful, are organizing a musical extravaganza company to occupy its stage. Musical extravaganza upon an elaborate scale is to be produced, with a bigger chorus than was ever attempted in Los Angeles, and a list of principals which shall, it is promised, include the names of at least two well known and nationally famous operatic and musical comedy stars. The chorus is in course of organization and training for the opening, planned January 18. Florence Leslie is in charge of the training and will stage the musical numbers and effects during the life of the season. The names of the principals are withheld, but it is stated that they will be eminent people in their lines and that only big spectacular extravaganzas will be produced.

BELASCO—The Easterner, in which the new Belasco-Blackwood company makes its debut this week, is providing capital entertainment for the crowded houses which have gathered at every performance to welcome Star Stone and his associates "back home." Mr. Stone plays the role of an Eastern chap, obtaining his first view of California and the West, incidentally falling in love with a pretty Californian girl and getting into all kinds of trouble to save her brother from the consequences of his sixteen-year-old folly. The part is handled with Stone's customary aplomb and finish, and pleases highly. So does Florence Oakley's presentment of the heroine, whom she makes a most lovable young woman. Aside from the leading roles, and in fact in justice to the young woman, I had almost said "bedide," Beatrice Noyes makes the hit of the piece by her handling of the ingenu role entrusted to her. Chas. Ruggles plays the young brother, De Witt C. Jennings the sheriff, Howard Scott the villain, a polished man of the world, and the balance of the big company are congenially provided with parts. Victor Schertzinger's unique orchestra, composed entirely of reed and string instruments, provides delightful incidental music.

BURBANK—Zira, capittally staged and well played throughout, is Manager Morosco's offering of the week. Mary Hall's handling of the old Margaret Anglin role is quite easily the strongest thing she has done since she has filled her leading position with the Burbank company. The part is one testing the versatility and emotional ability of an actress severely, and Miss Hall responds nobly to the demands upon her. Her third act climax is a revelation. William Desmond is the clergyman-lover and does as much with the part as the part will permit, which is all that could be asked. A. Byron Beasley as the unfortunate suitor who goes to India, earns much sympathy for the character and is entitled to distinct credit for his good work. Louise Royce is the deceived aunt and makes a decidedly lovable old woman out of her, despite her verbal attempts to create the impression that she is hard hearted. The company is well disposed in the various parts, and the performance is a credit to the house and its workers.

MAJESTIC—Rose Melville in her perennial success, Sis Hopkins, has been "turnin' 'em away" at Manager Morosco's new playhouse all week, and bids fair to continue so to do for another week to come. The play and its quaint central character is doubtless known to everybody the country over, for we are told by the lady's capable press agent that it is her eleventh year, and certain it is that I myself remember to have seen it a good nine or ten years ago. However, it still carries the heart throbs that interest and the comedy which makes the world laugh, so there is naught but a cheerful welcome and generous patronage accorded it. Of the star herself it is only just to say that her living of the role for so long has but made her the more natural and pleasing. Her supporting company this year is far superior to any I remember to have seen with Miss Melville and the production is benefited accordingly.

MASON—It is a crying shame that so eminently capable an organization as the grand opera company which our old friend Sparks M. Berry has brought to the Coast should not meet with better patronage that has been accorded it here. Headed by a cast of artists who both sing and act wonderfully well, and the organization, even to the chorus, far in excess of what has been offered here for years in genuine merit, the patronage has been to a startling degree from the ranks of the middle classes, not from the opulent and supposably "generous patrons of art and music" who ordinarily occupy the boxes and expensive seats. As a matter of fact, there aren't any expensive seats when the merit of the offering is considered, but the $2.00 parquet seats are the ones which have been empty, the seats ranging in price from 75 cents to $1.50 having supplied the audiences that have attended. True, it is just after the Xmas expenditures, really very liberal here this year, but that should rather make a difference in the sales of seats in the cheaper parts of the house, one would think. As a matter of fact, I believe that a newspaper friend of mine has it figured out right when he says that "if the grand opera season had been worked up as a gigantic society event, with the seats at $3.00 and $5.00, the newly rich and social pretenders would have broken their necks getting into their swell clothes and automobiles to attend. Impresario Lambardi has been giving excellent opera, his repertoire including Rigoletto, Il Trovatore, La Boheme, Carmen, Faust and La Tosca. Seventeen principals of European fame head the company. Among them are Sig. Alessandro Modesti, Eugenio Battin, Paul Wulman, Elvira Campoli, Alessandro Scalabrini, Delores Frau, Guiseppe Pimazzani, Artidoro Mauceri, Ester Ferrabini, Tosi-Arri-zoni, Geraldini Graziana, Giovanni Martino, Natile Cervi and Angelo Antola. The orchestra is under the direction of Agide Jacchia.

ORPHEUM—It is left for a hold-over team this week at the Orpheum to do us the most good in honest laughter. Raymon and Caverly, after a session of reverse English, cast back to the burlesque stunt of grand opera, and made the subject of their attack Carmen. When they finished there was nothing left of the dear old girl but shreds and giggles. Heading the new bill comes Felice Morris, daughter of the late Felix Morris, whose death removed America's foremost comedian. Her offering, The Old, Old Story, by Francis Wilson, proves a decidedly agreeable sketch. Miss Morris has in it a part just fitted to her talents, and the story told by the sketch is delightful. Capable support is a feature. Ethel Green makes a lovely Nell Brinkley girl, and sings like a prima donna. She is assisted in her tour of Spoonerville by Billy Gaston, whose forte is an eccentric dance. Anita Lawrence and Harry Linton have a pretty little sketch, Married Now, in which Mr. and Mrs. Newly Wed jostle songs and quips gaily about the stage. Happy Jack Gardner comes again with a deft mixture of old fun and new, his supply being exhausted before the audience has had enough. The balance of the bill is good.

CONTINUATION OF LOS ANGELES
EMPIRE—Poppyland at Empire's this week proves a genuine surprise to patrons of the house. Telling the tale of an opium fiend confined in a sanitarium and of his impressions on the other patients there, the piece is full to the brim with bright comedy and replete with original scenes which of the situation. Ben Bloom, who plays the opium fiend, brings a distinct creation which more than does him credit, and his base singing of the Queen of Bavaria proves one of the hits of the piece. Lillian Blackwell, cast as a young school girl, sings The Girl Worth While, a song which is being sung and whistled all over town. Mildred Manning, who plays the part of Nellie Montgomery, will too ill to resume her work, makes a capital Becky, and sings I Want to Be Like Lovelorn Juliet pleasingly. Max Bloom is a sickly Hebrew and sings I Don't Want to Be an Actor Any More. Aubrey Car is the Eminent Dr. Pest, and his song introducing himself is well received. Frank Vack as a French nobleman and Laurel Atkins as an old maidish widow of wealth complete the cast. Mr. Vack sings Mon Dieu, Le Comte.

LOS ANGELES—There is a vaudeville team at the Los Angeles Theatre this week with Scotch names, English accents, German faces and Hungarian uniforms. Seemingly you take your choice. The team is billed as the Musical McLearns. There are five of them and all five play upon all sorts of instruments. Four of them dance cleverly and one of them sings. The act is good in the main, but is bad in spots, the spots being chiefly upon the skirts of the young women. Perhaps the dearest act upon the program is contributed by Pastor and Merle, man and woman, whose comedy acrobatic stunts are worth a good laugh any day in the week. De Voy and the Dayton Sisters contribute an old-time song and dance number which was new in the late '60's. Madame Kessley's marion-

Correspondence

Salt Lake City, Utah, Dec. 28.—Salt Lake Theatre—Little Johnny Jones, which finished its engagement December 23, proved to be one of the greatest treats of the year. The company is excellent and the music good. Wm. Keough as the "Unknown" was a great favorite. His humor was irresistible and his bluff manner was very attractive. Paid in Full concluded the week. It is a modern time problem play which is intensely interesting. James J. Corbett, in Facing the Music, commences the week December 28. The play is a farce comedy and is very entertaining. Max Figman will be the New Year attraction in his new play, The Substitute. The scenes are laid in New York City and in New England. The plot, as the name suggests, is one of mingled identities. A sporty New York lawyer, in order to keep his promise with his prospective brother-in-law, substitutes a country parson, and is compelled to officiate at the pulpit. The funny complications which follow form the meat of the play. Mr. Figman, who plays the part of the lawyer, has ample opportunity to display his humor. Colonial Theatre—The holiday attraction at the Colonial is the much-heralded Savage version of The Devil. The Devil is played by a capable company, and the costuming is artistic. A good bill is presented at the Orpheum, with the Millman Trio as headliners. The Millmans are wire artists of great ability. Then there is Marcus and Mack, in an act entitled Evolution (Marcus and Mack are local cartoonists who have recently made good with Martin Beck). Gracie Emmett and company; Snyder and Buckley; Clivette; Morrow Schellberg and company, and Fonda, Dell and Fonda. The new policy at the Grand of mingling drama and vaudeville is proving a success. Falsely Accused is the attraction. The vaudeville acts are of high class. The New Lyceum presents Lincoln J. Carter's melodrama, Too Proud to Beg.

Laramie, Wyo., Dec. 28.—Nothing doing at Opera House the past week. Nothing on the bills for this week. A. D. K.

San Diego, December 30.—Garrick Theatre (Morosco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—Dec. 22 Mme. Nordica was greeted by a large and enthusiastic audience and gave universal satisfaction. On account of the Lombardi Grand Opera Company cancelling their date in this city, the house is dark until December 29, at which date we have the University of Southern California Glee Club. Jan. 1-2, with special matinee each day. Brewster's Millions. Jan. 10, Rose Melville in Sis Hopkins. Jan. 19, The Lion and the Mouse. Pickwick Theatre (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—Dec. 28-Jan. 3, Myrtle Vane company in Forget-Me-Not. The piece is about the heaviest that the company has yet attempted, but every member carried his or her work through in a very capable manner. Miss Vane particularly doing very creditable work in the difficult part of the villainous Marquise. Special mention must also be made of the work of Will D. Howard, who interpreted the part of Sir Horace Welby, the young English tourist. Next week the same company will put on a magnificent production of Heidelberg. Grand Theatre (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.)—Dec. 28-Jan. 3, vaudeville. Ashburn & Hudson in sketch, College Days, pleased. Reed & Arbuckle, comedians, scored a big hit. Maude De Alma, balladist; Miss DuBell, soubrette, moving pictures and illustrated songs. Excellent business. Empire Theatre (W. W. Bosley, mgr.)—Dec. 28-Jan. 3, vaudeville. The Kiddies, comedy sketch artists; Elma Elwood, soubrette; Jack Stewart, balladist; moving pictures and illustrated songs. Good business. Star Theatre (Mason & Ames, mgrs.)—Dec. 28-Jan. 3, Lew Fields company in A Fox Tramp. Fair business and show. Union and Bijou Theatres offer moving pictures and illustrated songs to good business. Note. On December 28th Messrs. Swarts & Urban, formerly theatrical men of San Francisco, threw open the doors of their new cozy little theatre in this city, which is to be devoted to high class vaudeville and to be known as the Queen. The house is thoroughly modern, artistic and a practically perfect building, the same being designed with an eye to the comfort and convenience of its patrons. It is tastefully decorated in old rose, green and gold, and the seating capacity is 600. For the opening bill they had an unusually attractive bill which included J. Edward Pierce and Marie Roslyn, operatic terrors; Kawana, juggler; Dow and Dow, Hebrew comedians; Helen Alford, a charming soubrette; and the Three DeWolfs in A Smile with the Geisha.

C. E. LUNDQUIST.
Long Beach, Dec. 26.—R. E. Watson, formerly manager of the Byde-a-Wyle Theatre, was held to the Superior Court Thursday afternoon by Justice W. S. Bratton. Watson was unable to get new bondsmen after the men who first went surety for him withdrew, and is in the county jail. Watson's friends are confident that he will be released when his case comes to trial. He was accused by Fred P. Baldwin of issuing a "no funds" check.

Fresno, December 30.—Barton Opera House (R. G. Barton, mgr.)—Ben Hur company played to crowded house 21-23 and one matinee. This company is unquestionably in far better form than it was upon the occasion of its last visit to Fresno, and was attended by enthusiastic audiences. Coming—May Nannery in Lives Divided, Jan. 1, '09. Novelty Theatre (A. J. Hotchkiss, mgr.)—Alta Phipps and her company are filling the present week with Is Marriage a Failure and doing excellent business. Kernan Cripps as Adolphus Doublelot, a much married man, does some very clever work. Louis Thompson is exceptionally good as Tom Dangerous, amateur photographer and past master in flirtation. Mr. Thompson is unquestionably an artist and we will expect to hear more of him in the future. Wilton Dale as David, though a small part is well done. Alta Phipps in the role of Diana fills all our expectations, as she is always good, and Louise Melrose as Mrs. Sherramy is a most excellent mother-in-law. Empire Theatre (E. Hoen, mgr.)—The Gertie Dunlap company is playing Colorado, and are doing good business. Miss Dunlap in the title role is as pleasing as ever. C. Ray Berger, who fills a double role of Tom Oxley and Lively, is very good. Mr. Lew Virden as Jacky also deserves special mention. The balance of the cast is good.

A. W. BURDICK.
San Jose, December 31.—The week theatrically has been more prosperous than usual. The road companies at the Victory did not fare as well as expected. The ever popular Elleford company is meeting with fair business thus far, while the stock company at the Garden are pleasing their many patrons with an excellently staged production of Raffles, with The Three of Us underlined. At Post's Unique the business has been very satisfactory, the Maybelle Thompson company having attracted attention with their abridged dramas and comedies. Millar Bacon is a new member of the company. The Empire is enjoying an unusually good week, the headliner being the first production of Herbert Bashford's dramatic sketch, The Broken Band, with Mae Keane in the leading role, supported by Norman Fuester and Arthur Cyril. The little play has made good and will doubtless be seen on the circuit. With everything taken into consideration the week's business at all the playhouses promises to equal that of last year at this time, which is saying a good deal for San Jose.

Eugene, Ore., December 30.—In Wyoming changed its booking here and played a Christmas matinee and evening performance to packed houses. Prospects are that Arizona, 30, will stand 'em up. Jane Eyre is booked for the night of January 1. The Robert Hildreth company has closed its stock engagement at the Orpheum and is now enroute. The little playhouse is dark. The new Bell vaudeville theatre is playing daily matinee and two evening performances to big business and is here to stay.

OTTO GILSTRAP.
Napa, December 28.—Napa Opera House (E. F. Hogan, mgr.)—Dec. 27, Jane Eyre to fair business. This company, with Dorothy Turner in the role of Jane, should have had better patronage than they have been receiving in the past, as there is not a single character in the whole cast that is played badly. Hayes Theatre (Miss Alva Fisher, mgr.)—Same old story, good shows to big business. Note.—It is the rumor about town that a new moving picture house is to be built with all the latest improvements that an up-to-the-minute picture house should have. S. KYSER.

Chico, December 30.—Jane Eyre was the attraction at the Majestic Tuesday, Dec. 29, and drew only a fair house. The advance seat sale for The Alaskan, which is billed here for Jan. 1, is very large, and a capacity house is certain. The attraction drew a big house here Thanksgiving a year ago, and made a tremendous hit with local theatregoers. Jan. 4—in Wyoming. Betty Shultz, violin virtuoso, and late of the Pantages circuit, is the special attraction at the Gem this week, and capacity houses are the result of the bill offered. Don Fulano, Dr. Ellis' famous trained and educated pony, is billed as a special for next week.

C. H. CHACE.
Watsonville, December 30.—Stockwell & MacGregor's company in Mrs. Temple's Telegram comes Jan. 2. The Holy City is due here Jan. 5.

Tacoma, December 26.—Happy New Year to the Review and congratulations on the excellence of the Christmas number. The theatres here all did a fine holiday business despite the fact that the weather was the worst seen here in many seasons. There was a Christmas tree at the Tacoma for the Rose Stahl company, playing there. Henry McRae had a big tree and banquet at Old Elks' Hall for his players and friends, including representatives of the local press. An impromptu program of speeches and music was followed by dancing. Every player and employee at the Star received handsome gifts. Miss Oswald coming in for the lion's share of dainty gifts. Mr. McRae received a handsome ring, pin and set of cuff buttons from his company, and everybody had a rousing good time. Manager Worley of the Grand provided a Christmas for the players at his house, as did Manager Timmons at the Pantages, the latter an especial joy to the little folks appearing in the bill this week. Arthur Hartmann, the violinist, who appeared in Tacoma this week, purchased a number of city lots as a speculation. Many theatrical people own real estate here and scarcely a week goes by but what some of the performers in vaudeville appearing here purchase property as an investment. Earle Williams of the Rose Stahl company, while in the city was the guest of his old-time friend, Allan J. Holuber, leading man at the Star Theatre. C. J. Riley has leased the Savoy Theatre from Mandel Lurie and beginning New Year's Day will offer Virginia Thornton in The Cow Puncher. Frank Montague will be leading man, and Noel Travers will act as stage director as well as take parts in the plays. Others included in the company are Marie Van Tassel, Tom Gaynor, Roy Sutherland and James Conway. The Tacoma opened the week with A Millionaire Tramp, 20, which was ordinary melodrama and drew well. J. C. Wright in blackface was good in vaudeville. Dec. 21, Arthur Hartmann, the Hungarian violinist, the fourth in the series of artists' recitals, was greeted by a brilliantly fashionable audience. From the pretentious numbers by Bach to Hartmann's own arrangement of MacDowell's compositions, each and every one was a delight. Alfred Calzin, the concert pianist, gave his selections in splendid style. Mr. Hartmann spent several days in the city, entertained at different functions, chief of which was a supper at the Tacoma Hotel. The table, gay in holiday colors and candles, furnished a pretty sight. A number of prominent musical people were present. 25-26, The Chorus Girl at advanced prices did a splendid business and Rose Stahl won all hearts. The play is the best seen here this season and is a crisp, snappy comedy. Miss Stahl was the recipient of such hearty applause in her great scene in the third act that she was obliged to respond with a little curtain talk. The company, a splendid one in every way, deserved all the good things advance notices had said about it. Wilfred Lucas gave an excellent sketch of Dan Mallony, the horse trainer, as did Amy Lee in the character of the wardrobe woman. Earle Williams, who was here with White Whittlesey four seasons ago, played the part of Dick Crawford in a natural and unaffected manner. The play was splendidly staged and the dressing-room scene realism itself. Dec. 27-28—The Land of Nod; Jan. 1-2—The Great Divide; 3-4—Babes in Toyland; 15-16—Rose of the Rancho. The Star Theatre this week offered A Texas Steer for its Christmas bill. Mr. McRae was in the title role again, appearing as Maverick Brander, the cattle king. He was good in his role and shared honors with the two star favorites, Denton Vane and Bertha Cordray. The two popular comedians, Jack McCabe and James Martin, made great Texans, and the two Lawrences, Robert and Ed, both in blackface, were high class screams. The piece was well staged and business good. Miss Oswald, who was out of the cast, will appear next week as Rhy McChesney in The Three of Us, and Allan Holuber, who has recovered from his illness, appears as Steve Townley, the miner. At the Grand, Lil Kerslake's pig circus caused many laughs. Vieing with the pigs for honors was Columbus, the beautiful white horse whose best specialty was a buck and wing dance. Wenona and Frances have an acceptable sharpshooting act. John Birch was a clever monologist, and Payne and Lee did an amusing song and dance act. Holmes and Hollister in their rural comedy met with much favor. Beginning week of December 28—James and Lucia Cooper, chattering chums; Joe Deming and company in a farce, The Traveling Man; Stephen Donnelly and company; Prof. R. A. Boehke and Sensational Novelty Act; Gus Bruno, dialectician; Chas. Sabine and Mlle. Vera. At the Pantages—A Night with the Poets was really a show in itself, poetry, music and tableaux so neatly combined. The act was splendidly staged and in every way delightful. John Rucker, the colored comedian, was the comedy hit of the bill with his monologues and songs. Incidentally he cleaned up a nice bunch of money this week on the Johnson-Burns fight. The Walthour Trio of bicyclists have added a lot of new stunts to their already clever act and are even bigger favorites than when seen here last season. The Martinez Duo of Spanish instrumentalists, and Henry and Young in a Western comedy known as Nevada, were acceptable. Week of Dec. 28—Florenz Family, European acrobats; Kohler Grand Opera Trio; Burton and Brooks, comedians; Abrams and Jones, playlet; Brandon and Wilson, song and dance. For the benefit of those children in Tacoma who did not have the happy Christmas that children in more fortunate circumstances enjoyed, Manager Henry McRae of the Star Theatre has planned a big celebration and entertainment for New Year's Day. These children are to be the guests of Mr. McRae at the Star Theatre and the afternoon is to be spent in their entertainment. There will be gifts and a big Christmas tree, with Santa Claus and all the other necessary details. Instead of giving a regular performance of The Three of Us, which the McRae players are producing this week, Manager McRae will provide a vaudeville entertainment for the amusement of the children. The women of Tacoma interested in charity work will assist Mr. McRae in the distribution of presents and in managing the affair. That it will be an immense success is a foregone conclusion. A. H.

Hartman Has Some Fine Offerings for Los Angeles

Following The Toymaker at the Grand Opera House, Los Angeles, Manager Charley Cavanagh of the Ferris Hartman company will produce It Happened in Nordland. Then will come Richard Carle's piece, The Tenderfoot, to be followed—the works given will not be in consecutive order—The Wizard of the Nile, The Earl and the Girl, The Belle of London Town, The Circus Girl, The Chaparones, The Office Boy, The Toreador, The Girl from Dixie, The Ameer and El Capitan.

Musical Spectacular Plays for Los Angeles

Ernest Crawford, manager of the beautiful Auditorium Theatre of Los Angeles, states that he expects to produce some fairy spectacular plays at his theatre the latter part of this month.

The Lion and the Mouse and The Alaskan Are Two Prominent Visitors in Oakland This Week

Oakland, Dec. 31.—Chas. Klein's great play, The Lion and the Mouse, is with us again and is inducing great enthusiasm at the Macdonough. Although seen here before, the play seems to have lost none of its great popularity, and the large audiences are more than generous with their applause. The company is headed by Paul Everton and Edna Archer Crawford, who are stars of considerable ability, and the balance of the cast is fully up to the standard of players usually seen in Henry B. Harris' productions. The Alaskan was seen at the Macdonough, 28-29, and proved an interesting production. There are many scenes familiar to Alaskan frontier life which gave the audience a pretty clear insight as to how things were done in the early life of the great northern country. The company showed ability, and the voices of both principals and chorus were well worth hearing. A revival of Sherlock Holmes, with Landers Stevens as the hero, and George Webster in the role of the arch-villain, is the Liberty's offering this week, and is doing a fine business. The stage settings for the play are exceptionally fine and caused considerable favorable comment, and the electrical effects were also of a very pleasing nature. The important roles fall to Geo. Friend, E. L. Bennison, Clarence Elmer and Isabelle Fletcher, and are well taken care of. Madame Sans Gene will follow. Gus Edwards' Blonde Typewriters are still the big feature at the Orpheum and are the recipients of great ovations at every performance. The newcomers this week include Four Franklins, Bert Howard and Effie Lawrence, Sophie DeWolf. The hold-overs are Harry Tate's English Company, Eva Taylor and company, Majestic Trio. Business continues good, and the year, according to Manager Eby, has been a very satisfactory one. The Zingaris, eight full-blooded gypsies, who render grand opera selections, are the headliners at the Bell and are proving a strong attraction. At the Novelty, Derenda and Green and Burton Weston & Co. are the best of a good bill and are playing to good-sized audiences. In Wyoming, Brewster's Millions, The Red Mill, Lambardi Opera Co., John Drew, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, Fifty Miles from Boston, In Toy Land and The Merry Widow are future bookings at the Macdonough. Madame Galski will give a concert at Ye Liberty, Jan. 20th. She will be assisted by Frank La Forge, the composer.

The Story of the Return of the Dog

SAN BERNARDINO, Dec. 26.—Manager J. W. Leonard of the Unique Theatre was made happy today by the unexpected return of his big bulldog, which was expressed in charge of the Wells-Fargo Company from Oakland by Louis James, the actor. Ten days ago the company was in this city, and on its departure the bulldog disappeared. Manager Leonard advertised and solicited the assistance of the police, but all in vain. Monday he received a happy inspiration, and telegraphed Louis James: "As a professional friend, I ask that you have the member of your company who stole my bulldog return it here by express at my expense." This was a mere conjecture on Mr. Leonard's part, and when the agent of the express company telephoned him today that his dog had arrived, he was about the most surprised man in town.

Edna Goodrich Has Certain Ideas of Business

To Edna Goodrich, the fourth woman he has induced to enter the matrimonial double harness with him,

Nat Goodwin has given half the income from a property, stocks and bond pool, amounting to $231,500. He will get the other half himself. The deed covering the fund, which makes Mayor T. H. Dudley of Ocean Park (where Goodwin maintains a summer home), was filed December 29, in the office of Los Angeles County Recorder Charles Logan. It was executed in London on August 14 last, a date which shows that the comedian and mine broker was successful when he went scurrying over Europe last summer in pursuit of Miss Goodrich, after the announcement of her engagement to Harry McMillan, the Nevada millionaire. It is also apparent that he carried on some financial negotiations, along with the lovemaking that destroyed his rival's hopes of making the stunning actress his bride, and to those whose memories can recall events three months back, that romantic session between pursuer and pursued possibly will carry an explanation of the cool attitude of Miss Goodrich toward McMillan on his return from abroad, and the breaking of the engagement which soon followed. The principal piece of real estate conveyed to the trustee is the Lafayette Apartment House in San Francisco, which is valued at $100,000. Goodwin's Ocean Park home, appraised at $15,000 is also in the pool. The remainder of the holdings is made up of stocks and securities totaling $116,500. The entire wealth is transferred to Dudley as trustee for a consideration of $1, the understanding being that Dudley is to manage the property. The income is payable quarterly and half of it is to be forwarded to Mrs. Goodwin, whose address is given as the Plaza Hotel, New York, and the other half to Goodwin. The comedian married Miss Goodrich at his mother's Connecticut home last month. Mr. Dudley receipted for the securities as trustee at Santa Monica, November 16. He confirmed the transaction last evening. "Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin are expected to reach Ocean Park in about two weeks, and they will remain a month at their home," he said. A schedule of the securities attached to the trust deed shows the deposit of bonds to the value of $15,000 with the Knickerbocker Trust Company of New York to cover a loan of $10,000, but the following were forwarded to Mr. Dudley: $7500 Lamb's Club bonds, first mortgage, Knickerbocker Trust Company, trustee; $10,000 gold bonds, $1000 each, of Federal Publishing Company, City Trust Company of New York, trustee; $1000 of New York & Susquehanna Railroad, Central Trust Company of New York, trustee; $1000 five per cent gold bonds; $2500 United Rico Mines Co., six per cent, International Trust Co., Denver, trustee; two $1000 bonds and one $500 bond; $5000, five, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul $1000 bonds, New England Trust Company, trustee; $10,000 Chicago Edison Company five per cent, Merchants' Loan & Trust Company, Chicago, trustee; $5000 Oregon Short Line, Equitable Trust Company, New York, trustee; $10,000 Newhouse Mines and Smelters, six per cent, Colonial Trust Company, New York, trustee; $5000 Brooklyn Rapid Transit, five per cent, Central Trust Company, New York, trustee; $10,000 San Antonio and Aransas Pass, four per cent, Central Trust Co., trustee; $5000 Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, five per cent, Farmers' Loan and Trust Company, New York, trustee; $5000 Oregon Short Line, $1000 Equitable Trust Company; $5000, five $1000, Louisiana State, four per cent, $5000, five $1000, Chicago Gas, Light and Coke Company, five per cent gold bonds, Central Trust Company; $5,000, five $1000, Louisville, New Albany & Chicago, six per cent, National Bank of Commerce, New York; $10,000 on 100 shares United States Leather, and $5000 on 500 shares Westinghouse Construction Company.

LAURETTE TAYLOR's costume in Yosemite so shocked the natives of Buffalo that a police inspector arrested the manager of the Teck Theatre, and the matter is now being heard in the courts. It will be remembered that as Lone Star, Laurette wears a gown of fig leaves. The Buffalo varieties of fig leaves seem to be small and few in the hill, to judge by the newspaper reports and the extraordinary demand for front row seats at the Teck these days.

Robert Leonard

Robert Leonard, of the Valencia Theatre Stock, is contributing largely to the pleasure of the performance of The College Widow this week by a strong and pleasing portrayal of Silent Murphy, the foundry heavy-weight, who has been enticed to take a special art course at Atwater College. Since Mr. Leonard's connection with the Valencia Company, he has demonstrated the possession of much ability, and whenever he has been favored with a part that offered opportunities he has acquitted himself with credit. Last season Mr. Leonard was in musical comedy at the Princess, and before that he was with Dick Ferris at the Auditorium in Los Angeles, going to that city from Denver, where for three seasons he was under Walter Clarke Bellows.

Al. Hazen is Organizing Independent Circuit

Al Hazen, a well-known theatrical man, who is regarded as one of the shrewdest promoters in the business, is in town in the interest of Pelton & Switzer, who, having lost out in the melodramatic circuit bookings in Denver and Salt Lake, are now turning their houses into vaudeville propositions. Their idea is to start at Chicago, then go to Des Moines, Omaha, St. Joseph, Lincoln, into Denver, Salt Lake, Ogden and then into San Francisco, via Reno, where they have a house. They have been figuring on leasing the Novelty, running it as a burlesque house, and using two or three vaudeville acts. Nothing, however, has yet been done definitely to secure a San Francisco opening, and it is not without the bounds of possibility that they will give up the San Francisco idea.

Changes in the Melodramatic Situation

The Stair-Havlin circuit is undergoing many changes, and while those in authority refuse to make any announcement of their plans, it is known that many of the less important theatres will be converted into moving picture houses and theatres where melodrama is unprofitable will in some instances be used for other purposes. The reports that the circuit is disrupted are without foundation, and the reports of an opposition circuit in the same field are equally absurd. Stair & Havlin, like all others in the show business, have found that the present season is a bad one. The closing of companies right and left has made it impossible to fill the time on the circuit to advantage, and finding it unprofitable to have some houses dark with rent running on, the circuit managers are engaged in making changes which will insure the future prosperity of the circuit. There is no one high in power who has lost hope in melodrama, according to reports which reach this office. The falling off in receipts, which was mentioned in THE DRAMATIC REVIEW early in the past season is even worse than in the election year of 1904, but the promoters of this class of entertainment are confident that within a few months or by the opening of the next season, at the latest, things will be back to their normal condition. At present, the Coast is almost barren of visiting shows. After January, unless a large number of shows are headed this way, the Coast will have more open time than it has ever known before at this season of the year.

Theatres Contribute Generously

The widespread horror that has overtaken Italy has found a sympathetic response in the hearts of our local theatres. So far the following sums have been contributed, and others, whose names we have not learned, will follow: Orpheum, $250; Morris Meyerfeld, $100; Van Ness Theatre, $100; J. Charles Green Co., $25. Total, $475. The Beach Theatre at Montgomery Avenue and Vallejo Street, will turn over the proceeds of its entire performances on Tuesday. In addition to the above list, W. J. Elleford has contributed $10.

Firebugs Burn Denver Theatre

Fire, supposed to be of incendiary origin, destroyed the Manhattan Beach Theatre last Saturday evening and for a time threatened the destruction of the entire summer resort. The resort has been closed since the summer season. The resort is owned by the Southern Investment Company, which is controlled by Detroit capitalists. The loss is $50,000. The theatre has been built for seventeen years and has housed during the summer season a number of well-known stock companies.

Personals

GEORGE BARBIER and wife left Wednesday for New York.

EDDIE MOWRY has gone ahead of Culligan's Nashville Students.

COL. D. P. STONER, who closed with Eckhardt's Ideals in Portland recently, is in town for a short stay.

MME. LILLIAN NORDICA is confined to her bed at the home of her sister, Mrs. H. C. Castillo, in Los Angeles, by a severe attack of bronchitis, and the great soprano is deeply distressed lest her voice be permanently affected. Her illness has been coming on for ten days, and last Monday she communicated by telephone with a doctor, giving an assumed name and making an appointment at his office. The physician treated her there a number of times, but did not recognize the famous singer until her condition became so serious that he was called to her private car. Then she was removed to the Castillo residence, and has since been given the closest possible attention.

MONROE SALISBURY was the recipient of a handsome Christmas gift.

Through the settlement of a relative's estate he was handed $5,000.

SAM FRIEDMAN, the mine owner of Darwin, which is the missing link between Keeler and Goldfield, Nevada, is due here any day ahead of E. H. Sothorn.

ED WARNER, who has been traffic manager for Norris & Rowe for several seasons past, has been signed to act in the same capacity for the Sells-Floto Circus.

CHAS. E. GUNN has returned from Spokane, where he made a splendid name as leading man. He will probably take a flier in vaudeville.

GEORGE GILL, ahead of Fifty Miles from Boston, is at Paso Robles Hot Springs, taking the rest cure for a few days. His health has not been of the best lately.

ROBERT WARWICK, at the conclusion of his engagement at the Valencia, seven weeks hence, will go to New York, and then in May open as leading man with the stock at the Davidson Theatre, Milwaukee, for the summer.

GEORGE CROSETTE, a member of the company playing Brewster's Millions at the Mason Opera House, Los Angeles, last week, was taken suddenly ill Monday of last week, and was operated upon for appendicitis at the Pacific Hospital. His condition is reported to be improving steadily.

THE body of Harry Glazier, who was found dead in his room in the Hotel Maryland, Pasadena, last week, was taken to Glendale, where it will be buried by the side of his mother's grave. Mr. Glazier was born in Terre Haute, Ind., on March 6, 1867, and made his first appearance as an actor on a Boston stage twenty years ago. He leaves a wife and child and two brothers, Louis P. Lenone and Jose Lenone. Miss Maurine Campbell of 144 North Euclid Avenue, the Christian Scientist practitioner, upon whom Glazier called the night before his death, says in an interview that treatment had not been begun by her, although arrangements for such action were talked over at the time of the visit. Mr. Glazier told her he was feeling the effects of his work upon the stage.

Van Ness

From the size of the curtain upon the scene in the desert, where Balthazar, the Egyptian, Gaspar, the Greek, and Malchoir, the Hindoo, beheld the star in the east, which shone over Bethlehem, heralding the birth of the Christ, to the finale where His power was revealed, accompanied by the hosannas of the multitudes in proclamation of His divinity, the masterful product of General Lew Wallace, who treats of the dawn of the Christian era in Ben Hur, the patrons of the Van Ness were entertained during the holiday week just closing. The very conception of the book inspires one with such a sense of sacred awe that it seems almost sacrilegious to descant upon it; and yet, having read the book and then witnessed its dramatic presentation upon the stage, one feels like resenting the liberties taken with it by the dramatist. While the dramatization of such books as Quo Vadis, The Prisoner of Zenda and others adds a certain thrill to some of the scenes, like Ben Hur much of the essence in detail is sacrificed to emotion, glamour, sensuality and tinsel. The music, the casting of Ben Hur, the young Jew, into the Roman galleys for a fancied crime, his rescue, the scene in the Grove of Daphne, and his triumph over Messala, the Roman, in the great chariot race, fairly made you tingle with amazement, admiration and delight, yet when we remember the sterling and sturdy qualities of Ben Hur, as depicted in the book, and while the whole tenor of his creation argues so strongly for every phase of morality, we do not appreciate the necessity of causing him to fall a prey to the seductiveness of the sensuous Iras, in order to add to the glint of the drama. However, eliminating the leper scene (where the very horror of it is too long-drawn), Ben Hur is one of the grandest, most spectacular, moral drama ever placed before the public. It will run another week, and if you want exquisite music, entrancing scenery, thrilling situations and a drama that yields full measure for the price of admission, go and see Ben Hur.

Princess

Kolb and Dill have changed the articles in the menu this week, but it smacks very largely of the former offerings, inasmuch as it is very largely Kolb and Dill and is as funny as anything they have done this engagement. The title of the play is The Politician, and its story doesn't matter. The new offering brings into local notice several prominent and new actors and a stage director who knows his business. To Jack Mason is due much of the credit for the excellence of many of the novelties introduced in the performance. The work of the chorus is especially good, and the variety of the ensemble work is a tribute to his ability. Particularly is this so in the barn dance at the opening of the third act. Of the new principals, chief interest centers in Adele Rafter, a handsome woman and a good actress. Vocally, she has had no opportunity, but what she did was entirely satisfactory and augurs well for the future. Percy V. Bronson, the juvenile man, has the real juvenile appearance and is a splendid addition to the company. Sydney DeGray does his usual clever work, and Charles Swickard is most satisfactory. The new soubrette, Myrtle Boyne, is a decidedly engaging and pretty young woman, who bids to become very popular. The Politicians is doing a tremendous business and will run several weeks.

Alcazar

Beginning with this week's offering of The Girl of the Golden West, the management has started on a programme that probably has never been approached by another stock house. There has never been such a list of great successes following each other so closely as has been planned at this house. As to the performance of the week's play, it is in every way admirable, repeating in detail the great success achieved when it was presented last season. The only change of any consequence to be noted is that Evelyn Vaughan is substituted for Thais Lawton. Miss Vaughan gives to the part a totally different idea, and in the first two acts she is much superior to her predecessor. In the last two, she does not bring out as vividly the yearning and the pathos of the part as did Miss Lawton. However, it would be a captious critic, indeed, who would find fault with the work of the Alcazar's charming leading woman, who, everything considered, is by far the best leading woman in the history of this playhouse. Bertram Lytell repeated his admirable, well-poised impersonation of the road agent, and Will Walling was seen again as the gambler-sheriff, one of the very best of his impersonations. Burt Wesner, Ernest Glendinning, Walter Whipple, Harry Cashman, Herbert Farjeon and Christie McLean have developed their portrayals until they are examples of good acting. The scenic investiture is one of the most striking triumphs we have ever seen, and the music of the orchestra fits in most happily with the spirit of the play. Business is immense, and a second week of the same piece has been arranged for.

Valencia

The second stock performance of The College Widow is to the credit and the nerve of a San Francisco playhouse. The judgment that prompted the payment of the tremendous royalty demanded for the play has been more than justified by a tremendous business all week—a business so great as to run the bill for a second week. In comparing the performance with those furnished by three road companies that have appeared here before, it is surprising to find how high the performance rates. Individually, the stock company is superior to any of the road companies, and if the ensemble work suffers at the hands of stock, owing to the short time allowed for rehearsal, the individual characterization holds its own without qualification. Robert Warwick plays the part of Billy Bolton, the star half-back. The part is not a star one, and the best an actor can do with it is to look handsome and make ardent love. Warwick does both. The College Widow is the central figure in the play. This vivacious and fascinating young woman is given the best characterization she ever knew. For the first time in her history she has been played by an actress of ability and charm. She has been favored with plenty of charm before, but the Stoddard ability has been lacking. And Miss Stoddard looks her handsomest and dresses the part with exquisite taste and style. The comedy hit of the play was made by Charles Dow Clark, who was seen as Bub Hicks, the awkward freshman. He was so funny—and so legitimately so—that the wheels of progress stopped, and the play stood still while he was on the stage. Helen Lackaye, too, was a comedy treat as Flora Wiggins, the waitress. With splendid method and a real funny vein, Miss Lackaye takes advantage of every opportunity. Gerald Harcourt was extremely pleasing as Stub Talmage, the busy undergraduate. It looks very much as though Sedley Brown had discovered a juvenile man who is of exceptionally good calibre. Robert Homans played the part of Bolton senior with much ability. His make-up was not so good. Thomas McLarnie gave a real characterization to the part of the football coach, which part in itself is one of small possibilities to an actor of ordinary ability. George Baldwin, Jr., was exceedingly funny as the Hon. Elam Hicks, from the cow counties, and Robert Leonard surprised and delighted his admirers by the way he made the part of Silent Murphy stand out. This young actor demonstrated that, given material to work on, he can make good abundantly. Grace Travers played the athletic girl with the necessary vim and showed that she is possessed of an abundance of temperament and ability. The scenery was a triumph, and Herman Heller again captured the plaudits of his audience by some exceedingly clever solo work in connection with the regular work of his orchestra.

American

After passing us by one season, Murray and Mack return to the town that was always good to them, and, thanks to the clientele of Manager Abe Cohn's playhouse, their business has been immense during the entire week. The Sunny Side of Broadway is as good a title as any other for the melange of song, comedy, scenery and shapes that have long been identified with the firm of mirth providers. Murray and Mack contribute nearly all of the business that has been associated with them for the past ten years, and through long practice they are funny and entertaining. The stage management is good, and the chorus comely. Through a disagreement with the stage director, the company is shy of a German comedian and a prima donna, but these roles were taken very acceptably the latter half of the week by understudies. Following this show, Arizona, that standard drama of Western life, comes for a week's stay, and then the big Cohan & Harris show, Fifty Miles from Boston.

EVELYN GREENLEAF SUTHERLAND, co-author of the drama, The Substitute, now being used by Max Fignman, died suddenly at her home in Boston last week. She was engaged in writing a new play. She also collaborated on The Road to Yesterday.

Fred Belasco Back From New York

Fred Belasco returned from New York Thursday evening, after an absence of six weeks, and announced that he had secured for exclusive production at the Alcazar a number of important plays which have had most successful runs in the East. Among the plays are Blue Grass, by Paul Armstrong which has created a sensation in New York; The Girl Who Has Everything; The Man from Home; The Squaw Man, Edwin Milton Royle's drama, which was seen here some months ago at the Van Ness; Audrey, dramatized by E. F. C. Boddington from Mary Johnston's novel, and The Gentleman of France. Options on a number of other plays which have not yet been released for stock were secured by Belasco. The Warrens of Virginia, a David Belasco play which has had a phenomenal run, will be another of the importations which will be seen at the Alcazar. All the costumes and properties for The Darling of the Gods, which will shortly be produced at the local playhouse, are now on their way to this city, where they will be used in a sumptuous production outlined. Theatrical business has been unusually dull in New York during the last month, according to Mr. Belasco. The reasons for this, he said, were partly that the financial depression had not entirely worn off in the East, partly that the holidays had followed closely upon the elections, and partly because the moving picture shows were cutting into the theatres. Cheap melodrama had almost entirely died out.

Maxine Elliott Theatre

Maxine Elliott opened her new New York theatre on Broadway Wednesday night before one of the most brilliant society audiences ever seen in that city. Weeks ago, when the chart for the new Maxine Elliott Theatre was thrown open to the public, practically every seat was taken for some person prominently known in society. The play selected by Miss Elliott was The Chaperon, which she first put on in Boston three weeks ago. With the opening of this theatre it will present for the first time an actress as her own builder and manager, and with the theatre with a seating capacity for 700 persons. The building is said by architects to be entirely fireproof. The interior decorations are very elegant and modern in every respect. The seats are larger than those ordinarily in use and give perfect comfort to those using them. The house was built at a cost of $750,000. The entire front is of marble, presenting an elegant appearance, and being distinctly different from anything else of its kind in New York. Miss Elliott expects to have a long run in her own playhouse. It is her desire to have a permanent theatre in New York that she might introduce new plays there and be spared the tedious trips through the country that are the lot of other stars of the theatrical profession.

Orpheum

The second week of the Orpheum Road Show continues to capacity houses. The present show will undoubtedly go on record as one of the most popular offered by this house during the holiday season. Only one or two changes are made in the bill this week. Work and Owen open the performance with their rapid-fire series of twists and falls. Their feats are done with such ease and rapidity that one gains an impression of simplicity, but in reality many of them are very difficult. They certainly excel in their line. Merian's troupe of canines are very amusing in their dramatic turn. The Elopement of Salome. What impresses one most is the infinite patience that must be required to train and direct such a troupe of dogs. Charles and Fannie Van have an amusing skit, which aims to portray a quarrel between the regular members of the team and the introduction of the stage carpenter to fill out the bill. The lines and situations are not very amusing, and it is the good work of Van that saves the turn. Edwin Holt and his company, in George Ade's comedy, The Mayor and the Manicure, present one of the most pleasing one-act plays in vaudeville. The lines and situations are good, and the acting first-class—a combination hard to beat. John P. Rogers and Ben Deely win decided favor in a singing and talking act. Both have good voices—better than usual for such a turn, and their dialogue is excellent. Mlle. De Dio, in her series of dances, continues her success, though, except for the fire-dance, equally as good work has been seen here before. Hyman Meyer, in his parody on grand opera and his imitations to piano accompaniment, shows himself a versatile and clever artist. His work is unique and pleasing. Of Gus Edward's Schoolboys and Girls, little need be said. They have been here before and always win success because they are always deserving of it.

Wigwam

The Wigwam's many thousands of patrons have smoked the pipe of peace and good-will with Manager Harris for the passing of the old and the coming of the new year. The big chief has catered for them with great bills of entertainment and is in the highest favor with them. This week has another strong and varied bill, with Carl Herman, the electric king, a human wonder and a great laugh-producer; Palfrey and Hoefler, comedy and acrobatic cyclists; Fanny Frankel, prima donna; Sam Hood, the man from Kentucky; Kenyon and Healy, singing and comedy act; Sam and Ida Kelly, wits and comedy sketchers, and the really great Heras Family of acrobats, stars in Ringling's Circus for two years. Next week's bill will have two good laughing comedies, admirably acted, The Mixers, a modern play, with Douglas Flint and Virginia Fairfax in the leading roles in a bright and brainy comedy and the country comedy of A Rural Substitute, humorously interpreted by Joseph R. Kelter and company.

Besides there will be the Austins, "the American Beauties," in another laughing act; Bert Weston and company, The Medicine Man; the humorosities of Joe Hardman; the comical juggling Pelots; the hands and feet tumbling La Selle Trio, and Lukens' seven performing bears, a regular bear circus entertainment. Really a star bill.

National

The Grauman theatre went in for fun alive for the last week of the year. It had two of the best laugh-provoking comedies and two excellent monologists on the bill. Dan Sheridan, Mabel De Forest and company, in A Jay Circus, who set the house into roars of laughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Young and company in Early Days East and West, a character playlet of the Denman Thompson order. John Fields, Jr., and Wm. Thompkins gave the two go-it-alone laughers, full of original matter of the jolliest kind. The balance of the bill included Prof. Patterson's bronze art statues in classic poses, very beautiful ones; the Adler expert club jugglers; Lucy Munroe, a dainty sou-brette, and Carranza, an operatic vocalist. The National's New Year's week bill has The Royal Musical Five, a combination of high repute, in An Artistic Novelty; Dolph and Susie Levino, in Hypnotizing a Wife; Jos. and Myra Dowling, A Snap Shot; S. Kikuda, Japanese juggler; Mallia and Bart, The Baggage Smasher; and the Swickards, those lively entertainers.

Pantages-Empire

The Rickshaw Octette, in A Trip to China, spectacular novelty; Madden and Fitzpatrick, presenting the intense playlet, The Turn of the Tide; Thomas and Payne, superior wooden shoe and roller skate dancers; Eldora, the American Cinquevelli; the La Moines, novelty instrumentalists; Emil Subers, the Alabama Blossom; Ah Sing Foo, Chinese conjurer, furnished this week's entertainment. Manager Winstock gave the first matinee performance on New Year's in San Francisco—a milkmen's matinee—starting at 1 a. m. It wasn't a silence and fun entertainment. Next week's bill here presents the Johnson Students, club maniacs; World's Comedy Four, exponents of mirth and music; Conn, Downey and Willard, presenting Dr. Louder; The Bernsteins, singing and dancing duo; Cakewalk Octette, introducing competitive cakewalk; Albani and Collina, Italian operatic vocalists.

Washington Square

The northside theatre has for its New Year's bill the American Trumpeters; Myrtle Victorine and Zolar Sisters; Stanley and Weaver; Miriam Marr; Sid Slapnix and Billy Howard.

Thalia Concert Hall

The Thalia, the northside house on Pacific Street, gave a jolly passing to the old year and welcome to the new one, with many horns included. Next week's bill has Ancona and Mattais, grotesque acrobats; Brown and Cullen, ragtime

Vaudeville Notes

Billy Arlington is not the only minstrel evangelist. A wire from Chicago of December 27 says: The saving of the derelicts of Chicago's "Whisky Row" is the task which "Billy" Williams, once one of the minstrel kings of America, has set for himself. Practically penniless, Williams walked up and down the "barrel house" portion of State Street, exhorting the lodging-house habitués to follow his example and "cut out the booze." "I've got $4 in my pocket, and I'm doing more good with it than I ever did before in my life," said Williams today. And Williams, in his day, has let thousands slip through his fingers. When Billy Arlington started in minstrelsy, John Morissy was the neatest dancer on the stage, and Dan Sherman and Barney Furgeson wore knee breeches. When Williams was a star with Haverly, Weber and Fields were doing an Irish turn in a New York dime museum for $15 a week, and Chauncey Olcott was singing "black face" songs in the first part of the bills in which he appeared, and so was Andrew Mack.

Sullivan & Considine work quietly, but they work well. They have recently added to their Denver route eastward theatres in Colorado Springs, Pueblo, Topeka and Lincoln, and will have three more cities on their circuit in that territory in the near future.

The saving of the derelicts of Chicago's "Whisky Row" is the task which "Billy" Williams, once one of the minstrel kings of America, has set for himself. Practically penniless, Williams walked up and down the "barrel house" portion of State Street last Saturday, exhorting the lodging-house habitués to follow his example and "cut out the booze." When Williams was a star with Haverly, Weber and Fields were doing an Irish turn in a New York dime museum for $15 a week, and Chauncey Olcott was singing "black-face" songs in the first part of the bills in which he appeared, and so was Andrew Mack. "I've got $4 in my pocket, and I'm doing more good with it than I ever did before in my life," said Williams when seen by a DRAMATIC REVIEW correspondent. And Williams, in his day, has let half a million slip through his fingers.

John T. Fay, husband of Eva Fay, who has been appearing at our local theatres, committed suicide in Oakland, December 20th. Mrs. Fay had just completed her engagement, and the luggage of the husband and wife had been checked to Denver, where they were billed to play. No motive is assigned for the act, but immediately after dinner he retired to his room and fired the shot that ended his life.

Eddie O'Brien and Lottie Darragh have their stock engagement in Los Angeles and are meeting with success in vaudeville on the Sullivan & Considine time.

Will the Independent Film Managers Be Done Away With?

All of the patents known by experts and authorities to have an important bearing on the manufacture of motion pictures and projecting machines have been purchased by a new concern incorporated as Motion Picture Patents Company, of which the following are the officers: President, Frank L. Dyer; vice-president, H. N. Marvin; treasurer, J. J. Kennedy, and secretary, George F. Scull. It will be noted that the president and secretary are connected with the Edison Manufacturing Company, while the vice-president and treasurer are from the American Mutoscope and Biograph Company. The capital of the new company is not announced, but its purpose is known to be general betterment of the entire business from the manufacturer to the exhibitor. The licensees of the Motion Picture Patents Company are as follows: Edison Manufacturing Company, American Mutoscope and Biograph Company, Pathe Freres, George Melies Company, Vitagraph Company of America, Kalem Company, Incorporated; Essanay Company, Selig Polyscope Company, George Kleine, and Lubin Manufacturing Company. Motion pictures manufactured under the license of the Motion Picture Patents Company will be leased, and not sold, and will be subject to return to the various manufacturers at stated intervals. Licensed motion pictures will be leased for use only on projecting machines, which are also licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Company. There will be a nominal license fee to be paid by each exhibitor, and the funds thus raised will be used in promoting the best interests of the business. None of the officers of the Motion Picture Patents Company are salaried. It is hoped by this movement to do away with the vexatious litigation which has long harassed the business, to guarantee to the renters and the exhibitors a sufficient quantity of the best American and foreign films and to prevent the demoralized state of affairs which now prevail abroad, where no organization exists. All the licensees are manufacturers, except George Kleine, who, as is well known, is the American representative of several of the best-known and most meritorious of the foreign manufacturers. No increase in price of films is contemplated. Among the prominent patents which have been purchased—in addition to those of the Edison Company, and the Biograph Company—may be mentioned the Armat patents, which are said to control projecting machines; the Jenkins patents, the Pross patents, the Vitagraph patents, and the Campbell patents. The new license agreement takes effect on January 1, 1909. The question now agitating "Film" row is—"What is going to become of the Independents?" The Biograph Company was their big prop.

Bashford Playlet Proves Great Success

Herbert Bashford's first vaudeville sketch was presented yesterday at the Empire Theatre. It met with instantaneous approval from the large audiences, and justly so. The title of the playlet is The Broken Bond. It has elements of dramatic intensity and as presented by the three capable players who have been engaged by Mr. Bashford it is a strong little drama, and one that cannot fail to "make good." Vaudeville audiences as a rule allow personal friendships to weigh but little in their judgments. If a thing does not catch their fancy they say so, regardless of who may be affected by their decision. It is therefore a distinct tribute to Mae Keane and Arthur Cyril that they were greeted with sincere applause on their first appearance, and it is a tribute to them and to Mr. Bashford that the most intense interest was displayed throughout the presentation, and that the applause that greeted the concluding words were little less than an ovation. Miss Keane is especially capable in her handling of the difficult role of the wife who has married for money, but who finds the bonds broken which have separated her from the man she loves. The climax, startling in its sensational denouement, she makes a real climax by her fine emotional acting.

THE ACID TEST of eleven years' actual professional use proves Madison's Budget No. 11 to be 22-Karat Gold. Hundreds of the leading vaudeville artists of both continents are its subscribers, AND IF YOU ARE NOT, you are simply overlooking the one best comedy bet.

MADISON'S BIG BUDGET No. 11, price one dollar, contains 9 monologues that will make good every time, 15 sketches for two males and for male and female, that are among the funniest ever written, 28 parodies that simply can't be beat, 2 comedy afterpieces running 40 minutes each and rip-roaring cracker-jacks, besides hundreds of new stories, fill-in gags, endmen's jokes, etc. Past issues out of print except Madison's Budget No. 10. Price, while supply lasts, $1. For sale in San Francisco by L. PARENT, 818 Van Ness Ave.; GOLDSTEIN & CO., 821 Van Ness Ave., or direct of the publisher, JAMES MADISON, 1404 Third Ave., New York, who also writes to order all kinds of vaudeville acts. Rates reasonably high, but absolutely first-class work guaranteed.

Arthur Cyril gives a clean-cut and intelligent interpretation of the role of lover. Cyril has a fine voice, splendid poise and a smooth and finished manner. The role of the husband is assumed by Norman Fusier, who sustains the character thoroughly well.—San Jose Mercury.

Personals

HARRY DARLINGTON is doing the Coast ahead of Why Girls Leave Home.

Brewster's Millions will open its engagement of eight days on Sunday, January 10th, at the Van Ness. The comedy-melodrama was seen at the Van Ness last season for two weeks and will be played this year by practically the same excellent company as that which appeared in it on the former occasion. Robert Ober will have the principal role. The attraction is under the management of Cohan & Harris, who have staged the play on a very elaborate scale. The big yacht scene is said to be the height of stage realism.

CONWAY TEARLE, leading man for the Ben Hur Company, is plaintiff in a divorce suit on file in Reno, Nevada. The action has been filed for some time. The identity of the plaintiff did not become known until last week, when Tearle's attorney, W. H. Schnitzer, appeared in court and asked that the time for hearing evidence in the suit be set for January 4th. Judge Pike agreed to this, and accordingly the case will come at that time. Mrs. Tearle is making her home in London, England. Service of the complaint was secured on her and she filed a demurrer. This was overruled last week, and the case will now come to trial. No contest is looked for. Desertion is the charge made. The parties to the action have no children and no community property is specified. Tearle has secured a leave of absence from his company to be in Reno and testify.

Correspondence

Watsonville, Dec. 31, 1908.—To very light songs, attraction gave good satisfaction. H. J. Lugg of Sacramento has been the main attraction. Peoples Minstrels, J. J. Temple's Travelling, with J. R. Stockwell, comes Jan. 2, and The Holy City, 5. La Petite Theatre continues to play to capacity, presenting moving pictures, illustrated songs and comedies. The Alvares were the attraction last week and Mack and Malone, the baseball dancers, this week.

P. J. BURDICK.
New Orleans, Dec. 26.—Tulane Theatre—E. H. Sothern and his excellent company have played to a week of capacity business. In Richard L. Sullivan, Hamlet and Hamlet this incomparable artist runs the gamut from comedy to romantic drama and then to tragedy, giving an exhibition of her versatility and scholarly attainments. There are but a few actors in America who would set such a standard. Sothern, in order to win the plaudits of the fickle public, but Sothern's art rings true, and he is not the least of the great actors of the world. In a repertoire to achieve the same measure of fame and success such as a single presentation such as If I Were King would bring. Of the three offerings, so unlike yet faultlessly and sumptuously produced, it would be hard to judge of the precedence in point of favor. Lovelace has the dash and fervor of true romanticism, ending with a touch of pathos that strikes deeply and effectively. Dundeady fittingly perpetuates the memory of the elder Sothern, and with its many laughable situations enthusiastically engages the best efforts of the son. Sothern's Hamlet takes rank with the greatest masterpieces in that line. In the supporting company is found such excellent actors as John Taylor, Malcolm Bradley, Wm. Harris, Sydney Mather, Rowland J. Harrison, George Hammond, and Goldsmith and Gladys Hanson, the latter a Southern girl, who bids fair to carve a brilliant future. Miss Hanson belongs to the newer generation of leading women, but with striking dramatic power and good looks created a most flattering opinion. She was selected by Mr. Sothern for her intelligent and capable rendition of Shakespearean roles, and her parts in the other plays were taken with the same intelligence and genius and strong feminine individuality. Next week, A Stubbren Cinderella; Jan. 4, Eleanor Robson. Crescent Theatre—Thurs., the magician, is the week's offering. Next week, Checkers.

W. L. McCONNELL.
Philadelphia, Dec. 31.—Frank (Nixon & Zimmerman, mgrs.)—With a company changed from the original cast seen during its long run in New York, but still retaining Kyrle Bellew in the role of Richard Voysin, a part with which he has become closely identified, Henri Bernstein's play, The Thief, was presented for the first time in Philadelphia this week. The effect it produced upon a large audience was such as to give endorsement to the deep impression the piece is said to have made in other cities as one of the strongest and most vivid dramatic studies given to the stage of this country in several years. Its success in Paris, where it ran for many months, has been duplicated in New York, and it was slow in getting to Philadelphia, those who saw it obviously found it worth waiting for. In the part of Richard Voysin, Kyrle Bellew acts with the ease and regard for the niceties of dramatic portrayal which have long been characteristic of his work, and shows a firmer grasp of situation and more sincerity of feeling than he has often exhibited in the past. While The Thief is essentially a play for a woman star, the best opportunities going to the actress who portrays Mrs. Voysin, Bellew has, in the second and third acts, a chance to win the sympathy of the audience, and this he did effectively. His acting had force, restraint and power. He is as gracefully poised and debonair as ever and has lost none of his good looks. The intensely emotional role of Mrs. Voysin is now in the hands of Effie Shannon, who succeeds Margaret Illington and Katherine Grey in the cast. Miss Shannon, who has not in the past had a reputation as an actress of exceptional emotional power, meets the exacting requirements of this character in a manner that furnishes something in the nature of a surprise. Isabel Richards makes an attractive Mrs. Lagardes, Sidney Herbert does well with the small part of the detective and Edward Elmer as a servant calls forth comment. Herbert Kelcey was dignified and sympathetic as Raymond Lagardes, Chestnut Street Opera House (Nixon & Zimmerman, mgrs.)—It was a rudely changed version of Mary's Lamb which Richard Carle presented at the opera house. From the status of a comedy with music which the Lamb had on its appearance here there has been evolved a lively, rattling burlesque, in which songs and dances follow in quick succession, while Carle himself, as the husband who is mercilessly henpecked, usually occupies the center of the stage when it is not held by a bevy of galloping girls. Cecilia Rhoda was artfully coquettish as the retired actress who makes mischief wherever she goes, and Nellie Brewster proved her possession of a clear and well-trained singing voice. There were more than dozen musical numbers, of which My Madagascar Maid and I Idolize Ida made the biggest hits. The chorus was mainly composed of pretty girls, whose changes of costume were frequent, and sang with uncommon spirit and effectiveness, while brisk dances were interspersed on every possible pretext. Walnut (Frank J. Howe, Jr., mgr.)—The popularity of Chauncey Olcott in Philadelphia was amply demonstrated, and the size and enthusiasm of the audience that greeted him in his new play, Ragged Robin. Written around and for him, the piece affords Mr. Olcott every opportunity, for his vocal powers are tested by some new and melodious songs, of which the audience could hardly get enough. The scenes of the play are laid in Ireland, and the authors (Rida Johnson Young and Rita Olcott, wife of the comedian), have utilized the old-time belief in fairies in working out the story. Mr. Olcott is assisted by a large and capable company. Alma Belwin gave a sweet and fairly forcibly characterization of the part of Margaret Grattan, and Mark Price was up to his usual work. The piece is staged with praiseworthy attention to detail. Garrick (Nixon & Zimmerman, mgrs.)—The Great Divide, with Henry Miller still playing the part of Stephen Ghent, but with Thais Lawton in the role originally played by Margaret Anglin, as Ruth Jordan, made its reappearance at the Garrick this week. The play has occasioned much criticism and discussion since its first production, and has been the object of some extravagant laudation as the great American drama. Mr. Miller exhibits as usual in his portrayal of Ghent the splendid poise, reserve power and rough simplicity that make a vital and lifelike figure of the uncouth Westerner. The other roles are in the care of the same actors who have played them heretofore, the whole performance being an extraordinary smooth and finished presentation of the play. Chestnut (Grant Lafferty, mgr.)—The rollicking farce, Charley's Aunt, which convulsed both American and English audiences more than a dozen years ago, was the Christmas week's offering by the Orpheum players. J. Hammond Dailey, who essayed the part of the bogus aunt, has seldom found a part better suited to his talent as a comedian. Marion Barney, Louise Randolph, John Stokes and Charles J. Harris, all cast for prominent parts, contributed their individual quota to the success of the play. Grand (Stair & Havlin, mgrs.)—Clarence Harvey, as Tweedlepunch in Florodora, revived and presented by the Aborn Opera Company, was nearly the whole show. Agnes Finley, who was a member of the original cast, reappeared as Angela Gilfair. The bright, breezy music was rendered under the direction of Frank Oppenheimer. Dumont's Minstrels at the Eleventh Street Opera House offer a merry entertainment, appropriate to the season, giving a jolly new burlesque called Pade in Full. In the way of burlesque shows of the approved sort are Robie's Knickerbockers at the Casino, the Tiger Lilies at the Bijou and the Hastings show at the Gayety.

CALVIN M. FRANKLIN.

Mrs. Temple's Telegram.—Watsonville, Jan. 2; Sacramento, 3; Stockton, 4-6; San Jose, 8-9.
May Nannery.—Coalinga, Jan. 3; Modesto, 4; Grass Valley, 5; Nevada City, 6.

LOS ANGELES LETTER

ettes form a pleasing feature for the children, and George Yerman, in a Dutch make-up and with a Bavarian accent, tells a few harmless stories and sings a medley which is cleverer than its rendition. Sam Holdsworth's picture ballad and motion pictures complete the bill.

PEOPLES—Irish patriotism runs riot at the Peoples this week, where Charles Erin Verner and a more or less capable company are presenting Robert Emmett, the popular historical melodramatic success of a generation ago, needless to say with the entire approval of the regular melodramatic patrons. Telling the tale of Emmett's struggles against the English oppression, it affords the hero ample opportunities for popular defiance of his oppressors, many hairbreadth escapes from deadly peril and as many fortunate rescues by his wits and his faithful servant. Mr. Verner is happy in his depiction of the renowned Celt, infusing a feeling and naturalness to his heroics which go far toward robbing them of their stiltedness, due to the period in which the drama was constructed and the tale it unfolds.

UNIQUE—A Busy Night keeps everybody amused at the Unique this week during the presentation of the two-act musical comedy under that title. Will Armstrong as Flannigan, Ed Armstrong as Sommers, the police sergeant, Barney Williams as Schultz the scrapping Dutchman, and Jack Curtis, were well cast in their comedy parts. There is no plot, and with the large number of laughs which come in rapid succession such an appendage to a musical farce-comedy would really be out of place. The trouble starts when Sommers gives a function in honor of his appointment as police sergeant. Flannigan and Schultz attend, with their wives. It appears impossible for the Dutch and the Irish to mix, and a mixup results. All hands are taken to jail, and from the time of their incarceration until the curtain drops the fun is fast and furious.

Great Producing Houses Announced for Chicago

Signs multiply that Chicago is to be the theatrical producing center of America, if not of the world, writes Will Reed Dunroy. Westward the course of theatrical empire takes its way. London has been losing its prestige and New York gaining new honors in the theatrical field, and now Chicago is to wrest supremacy from the eastern metropolis. Abraham Erlanger, a member of the greatest theatrical combination in the world, visiting Chicago recently, announced a great hotel and theatre as one of the projects of the firm of which he is a member. Charles Frohman, another giant in the theatrical world, also announces a producing house for Chicago, and the eyes of the whole theatrical world are on the Illinois metropolis. Those purblind individuals who cannot see any good in home productions and home loyalty and patriotism, will now, doubtless, begin to change their attitudes. Mr. Erlanger, who made a visit to Chicago last week, made some announcements that came as a bombshell to those who have long pooh-pooed Chicago as a theatrical center. Said Mr. Erlanger to a representative of the Chicago Tribune: "I am arranging for a hotel and theatre, all under one roof. The theatre is to be devoted strictly to local productions which are to be constructed and staged here in Chicago. As Chicago has no large producing theatre in the sense which I have in mind where local productions are to be launched, we are going to take the initiative in this matter." These plans were announced in all the Chicago newspapers with sensational headlines. In the same issues Charles Frohman announced through the Associated Press that he was on his way to Chicago to complete arrangements for a theatre to be built for him in which he will make original productions. Thus the original contentions that Chicago is the logical play producing center of the country are being verified. When such plays as The Man from Home can be produced in Chicago, and break all records for long runs, and later storm the icy citadel of New York successfully, it is time that theatrical promoters took notice of the vigorous western city. When The Melting Pot can stir the whole country with its power, and when The Revelation can command such attention and become such a potent drawing power that two new companies are demanded before the piece has been on the road three weeks, it must be confessed that Chicago is looming large on the horizon. The success of these western productions has opened the eyes of the great eastern producers. It has pointed the way for new ventures and has shown that Chicago is now out of her swaddling clothes and is ready to take her place among the other great cities as the center of art, the drama and literature. The entering wedge has been made by men who have faith in Chicago. It has been demonstrated by pioneers who have had the courage of their convictions, and who have risked their money to demonstrate that Chicago is logically the theatrical hub of the continent.

A Backwoods Manager of the South

Lee Parvin, in advance of In Wyoming, tells an amusing story of an experience he had down South last season when he was ahead of a musical show. Lee dropped into a small town on the circuit and discovered the manager of the opera house behind the counter of his hardware store. The representative introduced himself whereupon the old codger said: "One uv them pesky advance agent fellers war heer last year; wore a light suit—maybe ye know 'im. All he done wuz tew set 'roun' mah store, sah! spit terbacker juice an' tell funny stories—called everybody 'cul.' Now I haint gwyn' tew hev yew chaw an' spit 'roun' heah, sah! This heah is mah office 'an ladies come heah, sah!" Parvin assured the old fellow that he had no such intention and, by way of preliminary, asked what the last attraction had been and was told "Sousa's Band." "Did they play a matinee?" queried Parvin. "No," replied the local manager. "jist plain music and mighty few people hereabouts knowed what it wuz at that."

Gay Occasions at the Paris Opera

When a foreign sovereign comes to Paris on an official visit, you may be sure that, whatever the programme of fetes may be like, there is one ordeal which the distinguished visitor will not be allowed to escape at any price—I refer to the gala representation at the Opera. It is never a lively function, and it is not intended to be. Tradition has consecrated its inclusion in the official list of fetes, and whether the royal visitor likes it or not, he has to accept it. King Edward had to comply with the usual procedure in these matters, and the Kings of Spain, Italy and Norway all had to devote one evening to a "soiree de gala" at the Opera House. Last night's performance in honor of the King and Queen of Sweden was just as dull as others which have preceded it. One saw the same scenery, the same actors, the same officials and the same decorum which always marks a gala night. The audience lacked brilliance, and there were far too many legislators. The average French Deputy is no more interesting than the average member of Parliament in England, and he does not show at his best on a gala night. But the managers of the Opera cannot keep out the Deputies and Senators when the State is paying the piper, and so the "Quinze-mille"—as the proletariat disrespectfully terms them, in allusion to the 15,000 francs per annum which the Deputies are paid—flood the national theatre and bring their women folk with them. No wonder that last night's house merited the description, "tres bourgeoisie et tres parlementaire." The first item on the programme was the third act of Hippolyte et Aricie, interpreted by Mlle. Breval and M. Delmas. Applause was conspicuous by its absence, and at the entrance it was expected that the Queen of Sweden, who is in habit of retiring early, would take her departure. But it appears that her majesty is passionately fond of Wagner's music, so she waited to see the next part of the programme, the third act of the Crepuscule des Dieux. Then at 10:35 o'clock, the Queen rose and left, escorted by the President of the republic. Had he been at liberty to consult his own feelings, I have no doubt that M. Fallieres would gladly have held the remainder of the programme "as read" and gone home to bed; but he had to return and keep King Gustav and Mme. Fallieres company, and it was 11:40 o'clock before the "Marseillaise" and the Swedish national hymn announced that the performance was at an end. It should in justice be stated that when the curtain rose on Namouna, which completed the evening's entertainment, the pervading frigidity at last began to thaw, and the delightful transformation begun by Lalo's joyful music was completed by Mlle. Zambelli's divine dancing.—London Globe Correspondence.

The music incidental to Prince Hagen, Upton Sinclair's new play to be produced at the Valencia Theatre, will be a distinct feature, and the orchestra will be increased to twenty men during its run. Herman Heller, the theatre's musical director, is arranging themes from Wagner's Das Rheingold, Siegfried and Die Gotterdammerung to carry certain characters during the action of the drama, and the instrumental portions of the performance will be peculiarly interesting and pleasing.

Spotlights

The Gay Musician will soon be seen on the Coast, under the management of John P. Slocum. Arthur Lotts is the general representative. Amelia Stone, Lottie Kendall, Templar Saxe and Joseph Miron are the four principals in the company.

The Columbia Scenic Studio of this city has secured a part of the contract to supply the new Orpheum Theatre, which opens in March. Sosman & Landis get a large part of the work.

The newly organized Lambardi Grand Opera Company, which comes to the Central Theatre shortly, this year is larger, better and stronger than ever, and the principals of the organization have enviable records of European successes. Among them are Elvira Campoli, dramatic soprano; Dolores Frau, mezzo soprano; Ester Ferrabini, lyric soprano; Cecilia Tamanti Zavaski, Olga Simsis, soprano coloratura; Tosi-Ardizoni, lyric soprano; Lia Mileri, mezzo soprano; Eugenio Battain, lyric tenor; Gerardi Graziani, tenor leggero; Alessandro Scalabini, dramatic tenor; Angelo Antola, baritone; Alessandro Modesti, baritone; Giuseppe Pimazzoni, baritone; Pietro Martino, bassi; Artidoro Mauceri, bassi; Paolo Wulman, bassi; Natale Cervi, basso buffo.

The Famous Boston Theatre

In drawing up the chronicles of the theatre he had managed for many years, Eugene Tompkins with The History of the Boston Theatre; 1854-1901 (Houghton Mifflin Company), practically covers the whole history of the American stage for more than half a century. The theatre when it was erected was one of the largest in the world. It ranked as the third in seating capacity, if we are not mistaken, only San Carlo in Naples and one other surpassing it. Probably by accident its acoustic properties were extraordinarily good and Boston was justly proud of it. Though the theatre had a stock company, it always sheltered stars and opera companies. Thus it took under its roof nearly every actor and play of prominence that the fifty years brought forth. Mr. Tompkins' portraits begin with Thos. Barry and end with Fritz Scheff and between them is included almost everything worthy of record in American dramatic and musical history. The record awakens all sorts of memories: Edwin Forrest refusing to act with John Gilbert, Hackett as Falstaff, Col. Ellsworth with his zouaves, Brignoli, Amodio, La Grange, Adelaide Phillips. It is most provokingly meagre, but it is easy to see that very slight comment would expand it into a library. It takes one pretty far back to learn that for the first few years performances could be given on only five nights in the week because the New England Sabbath began Saturday at sunset. There is a lot of Boston history in Mr. Tompkins' extremely interesting record, but there is just as much of the history of the American stage. The book is illustrated with numberless portraits, which are extremely good and are startling often in the youthful representations of persons whose pictures are more familiar in their later years. —New York Sun.

City Will Soon Have Great Auditorium

Charles E. Naylor, who is promoting a plan which he hopes will result in interesting capital in the erection of an auditorium which will seat in excess of 14,000 persons, appeared before the Building Committee of the Board of Supervisors last Monday in answer to an invitation from that committee. Naylor explained that he did not care to go ahead working on his project if the city seriously considered the proposition of building a municipally-owned auditorium. He expressed the opinion that the city should not undertake any enterprise which private capital would and could carry out, and said he entertained grave doubts as to whether the voters would sanction the issuance of bonds to build an auditorium. The plan on which he is working he explained calls for the erection of a $600,000 building on the Mechanics' Institute lot, and those who contemplate making the investment will not do so unless they receive some assurance from the city that the municipally-owned auditorium scheme is to be abandoned. The committee did not commit itself, though Chairman Rixford, by questions asked of Naylor, made it clear he did not share the opinion that the voters would not take kindly to the city building a magnificent auditorium. Leslie Burks, of the Real Estate Board, was present and announced that in the near future the association with which he is identified is to meet with the California Promotion Committee and consider a plan to bring about the erection of a city hall and auditorium by private capital, allowing the city to take immediate possession, and through a long lease contract finally acquire the property.

WILL H. BRAY, the original "Minister to Dahomey," has been especially engaged to appear in that part in an early production of Hoyt's always welcome and enjoyable A Texas Steer at the Valencia Theatre.

FAY TEMPLETON has returned to the footlights for a three weeks' season in Chicago. She will appear at the Olympic Music Hall.

DARRELL STANDING, who is such an acquisition to the Valencia stock company, is an accomplished musician as well as brilliant writer of lyrics. He has composed a number of beautiful sentimental ballads of a high order of merit and our local singers keep him busy during his spare moments furnishing them with manuscript copies of his songs.

THE South plays a prominent part in the work of the E. H. Sothern company, which will soon be seen here. Gladys Hanson, who plays the leading female roles with the noted actor, is a representative of that part of the country. She is from Atlanta, where her family now resides. Miss Hanson made a deep and favorable impression in New Orleans through her very excellent work in the leading female part, especially in the trying portions of Richard Lovelace, which is more of a two-player romance than otherwise. Miss Hanson has to do some very delightful work to play up to the requirements, in view of the fact that so accomplished an actor as Mr. Sothern is playing the leading role. Miss Hanson's first engagement was a minor role in Rex Beach's play, The Spoilers. She was engaged by Mr. Sothern because of excellence in speaking the lines of a Shakespearean play when he asked for a trial of her powers.

FLORENCE SMYTHE of the Belasco stock company, Los Angeles, closed her engagement with the Belasco last week with the announcement of her engagement to State Senator John Marshall of Charleston, S. C., whose beautiful home in that city the future Mrs. Marshall will manage with only the help of a "prompter." Miss Smythe, who was born in Santa Barbara and is therefore a Native Daughter of the Golden West, is favorably known in Los Angeles as a member of the Belasco company, and especially for her work in the Girl of the Golden West, wherein she took the part of The Girl at twenty-four hours' notice upon the untimely death of Miss Hunt. Mr. Marshall, to whom Miss Smythe will become engaged for life, is a member of a distinguished family. He is the great-grandson of the late Chief Justice John Marshall, for whom he is named, and a great-grandnephew of George Washington. For ten years he was the editor of the Charleston News and Courier. Miss Smythe will leave Los Angeles the first of the new year for New York, where she will take a vacation from all active work other than preparing her trousseau. The date of the marriage has not been, as yet, announced.

REGA RUSSELL, declared by some critics to be the most beautiful girl in Chicago, and also known through her efforts to aid her mother in the promotion of a "love club" to encourage matrimony among maids and bachelors, has broken her engagement with W. E. Gorman. The engagement, which was announced during the summer, was the result of a pretty romance, and the friends of the young couple looked forward to a happy ending. Miss Russell, who is ill in New York at present, where she went to visit friends and pursue her musical and dramatic studies, changed her mind, and the engagement is off. Miss Russell went to New York to rehearse for her part in Faust, but became ill and was forced to discontinue her studies temporarily. She is on the road to recovery now, however. In Miss Russell's words the romantic story of her engagement—as she told it at the time—is as follows: "I went to Mr. Gorman, after being introduced by a mutual friend, and asked for a temporary engagement as an understudy. Mr. Gorman was very kind and, after a few weeks, he asked that the engagement be of a more permanent and personal character. I consented and we expect soon to sign a life contract." Miss Russell last year won first prize at a Philadelphia beauty contest in connection with the annual art exhibit. Mr. Gorman, at the time the engagement was announced, was in charge of the tour of Mrs. Patrick Campbell as manager.

The Usefulness of Actors' Society of America Ever Growing

"A happy New Year to you," said George Seybolt, secretary of the Actors' Society of America, as he greeted the members of the society at the New York City headquarters of the society since its establishment had been a paying proposition. Mr. Seybolt replied, "Not a money-making proposition in a business sense, but it has proved of invaluable aid to the profession. In addition to supplying players with a permanent address, the society's agency has been a wonderful success in bringing together capable actors and actresses and managers representing the most reputable in the business. The profession is able to make the society its permanent address and is always sure of a warm welcome. We now number about 1,000 members, with the prospects of the inducements we offer of having many more as the profession becomes familiar with the aid the society offers them. Here Mr. Seybolt recalled the first object of the society. "The object of the society shall be to promote and improve the actors' calling and its conditions by mutual benefit, dramatic, artistic, economic and social means. The motto of the society shall be 'Equity,' meaning fairness in all business transactions." The society averages over 60 engagements a month, and this number could be greatly increased if the entire profession would make a point of keeping the society posted when they are available for engagements. This requires so little effort—merely sending a postal card—and is often the means of getting players important engagements. If the profession as a whole had one place in New York where their addresses were kept, and the managers would recognize this as an authoritative source, how much better it would be. We have also been the means of collecting $6,000 for salaries earned and unpaid from delinquent managers, and so have saved the actor many thousands in lawsuits. We have improved the sanitary conditions of theatres all over the country. We own the building we now occupy, valued at $50,000, and have a library of over 3,000 volumes. At the present time we are compelled to ask commissions on engagements procured in order that we may pay our office expenses. We hope before long to do this without cost to the actor. With the dues coming in from an enlarged membership, together with rent from tenants who now share our building, we should be able to cover our running expenses. We have now two tenants, with room for more. The space we have to offer can be used by three distinctive departments, which I hope to have before another year has passed. We would consider, in fact, we are soliciting propositions for the installation of a play bureau, a vaudeville booking office and a musical branch of the engagement department. In fact, to anyone interested in the inauguration of a play bureau in the society we would be willing to offer inducements to anyone practically starting in business with his talent as his only capital and the society's facilities at his disposal. This includes desk room, light, heat and the telephone. On the above we would be willing to entertain proposals from reputable sources. This invitation applies to the vaudeville agency and musical department propositions as well. During the past year the society has profited by two benefits—a regular benefit in April and President Wise's benefit in November. Another scheme, in which we hope to interest the members of the society is that with members of the society donating their services we could fill holiday engagements in the small outlying towns and turn over the profits to the society.

Actors Interested in Real Estate

It is only in recent years that the theatrical profession has taken an active interest in the purchase of real estate. During the recent development of property in the suburban districts in New York, huge blocks of land were disposed of to actors and actresses, and in the rapid rise of values many of them sold at a great advantage. Oliver Doud Byron, who is appearing as John Burkett Ryder in The Lion and the Mouse, owns twelve cottages at Long Branch, N. J., which bring him at least $10,000 a year from New Yorkers who desire to make their summer homes at the seashore. Edmund Breese, of The Third Degree company, is actively interested in the development of Bay Side, L. I. Helen Ware, another member of The Third Degree company, commands a number of lots at Roslyn, L. I. Gertrude Coghlan, of The Traveling Salesman company, possesses a beautiful villa at Bensonhurst, while Sarah McVicker of the same company, holds title to considerable property at Bayonne, N. J. Rose Stahl of Chorus Lady fame, finds Laurelton, Long Island, the means for a large investment in vacant lots. Robert Edeson, who is appearing in The Call of the North, next to Mrs. Russell Sage, is the largest taxpayer at Sag Harbor. These are but a few of many actors who have found real estate a profitable investment, induced, no doubt, to enter into this field by reason of his activities in the real estate market. It has been estimated that the actor colony of New York have invested $5,000,000 in real estate, all of which disabuses the old and accepted idea that theatrical people live from day to day; in fact, the theatrical profession is becoming exceedingly frugal and are very earnest in their desire to lay by something for the inevitable rainy day.

Making Acrobats of Children

It is nothing unusual for the larger circuses to carry thirty or forty children, ranging all the way from mere babies to boys and girls of 15 and 16 years of age. The majority are traveling with their parents, both the father and mother doing daily duty in the ring, and while often they are trained to follow in the steps of their elders, they are seldom allowed to perform in public. It is a common belief among circus men that the performer whose training is not started until after the age of 6 will seldom make a distinctive record. Following the afternoon show I often saw groups of boys, some of whom could not have been over 4 or 5 years old, practicing rudimentary somersaults and hand springs, while their parents looked on with a gratified smile. These were the families of the circus aristocracy; who treasure the records of their ancestors with the pride of a son in his father's sword, and who see no more inspiring calling for their own children than that of the great white canvas. Not that their education is neglected in other respects. Several of the families often hire an instructor—perhaps one of the performers who has the time and ability for such work—to coach their children in the standard studies. One circus, indeed, has now established a traveling school for the youngsters. If they are to be acrobats, they are to be educated acrobats.—Lugh Weir, in The Bohemian.

Lillian Russell Sells Residence for $60,000

Lillian Russell has sold her brownstone home at 161 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York, for $60,000. She told her reasons for disposing of the property, and laughingly added: "And deny for me the silly story that this sale means I am going to get married again. No more matrimony for mine. I haven't the time. My home has been on the market for more than a year. It wasn't sold before, they tell me, because of the financial depression and the tightness of the money market. I'm so glad that money is loosening up. You see, I don't need that house. Last year I only had the use of it for eight weeks. I'm so busy."

Witching Hour Now a Book

Augustus Thomas has transformed his successful play of The Witching Hour into a novel, which promises to appeal to many readers. It is issued by Harper & Brothers, with illustrations from photographs of scenes in the play. The story is unusual, as it includes hypnotism, telepathy and mental suggestion, and introduces these fads in such a way as to make them take a strong hold on the reader. There is no attempt at sensationalism, and the plot, full as it is of interest, does no violence to the probabilities. The hero of the story is Jack Brookfield, of one of the oldest families of Louisville, Ky., who, for years, has carried on the principal gambling establishment in that sport-loving city. When the woman he loved married another man, Jack changed from an amateur to a professional gambler, but his worst enemies did him the justice to say he always played a square game, despite the fact that most of his patrons were heavy losers. The fact that he kept a gambling house had forced his widowed sister to leave his house, and it was a thorn in the flesh to all his relatives. When the story opens, his niece, Helen, has just become engaged to Clay Whipple, the son of the woman whom Brookfield had loved. This engagement is a bitter disappointment to Frank Hardmuth, assistant district attorney, who hoped to win the girl. On the return of a theatre party from the opera, Hardmuth complains to Brookfield that he has not been fairly treated, and Brookfield then declares flatly that he would never consent to the marriage of his niece to Hardmuth, because of his certainty that Hardmuth was mainly instrumental in securing the assassination of a former Governor of Kentucky. Hardmuth vows revenge, and he secures it speedily, for he is a witness in a few minutes to an encounter between Clay Whipple and the dissolute young son of a millionaire, which ends in Clay killing the young debauchee with a heavy paper-cutter. Clay was driven to this violence by his opponent's drunken efforts to tantalize him with a catseye, to which Clay had a hereditary aversion amounting to uncontrollable terror. Hardmuth heads the prosecution of Clay, and the story of the trial and the use which Jack Brookfield makes of his newly discovered powers of mental suggestion and telepathy is very well told. Old Justice Prentice, who warns Brookfield of his uncanny mental powers, is an excellent character. Perhaps the finest thing in the book is the effort of Brookfield to live down his old character and to make his life worthy of the unusual powers granted to him. The story of Brookfield's love for the woman who discarded him is something new in fiction, but it is entirely plausible. The happiness that comes to him after he has reformed is seen to be deserved by his self-sacrifice and his genuine efforts to live a better life. The book is full of humor, and the dialogue is particularly good.

The members of the Valencia stock company and the mechanical and scenic staff of the theatre are hard at work on the forthcoming production of Upton Sinclair's Prince Hagen, a dramatic fantasy in four acts, which will receive its first production on any stage Monday evening, January 11th, at the conclusion of the run of The College Widow. The brilliant young author of The Jungle is co-operating with Sedley Brown, the Valencia's stage director, in the work of producing the play, and nothing will be left undone to make the inaugural performance an event in the history of the stage in San Francisco.

A Great Play—Two Powerful Men Collaborate

There is little doubt that the ablest man, the best mind on the American stage is William Gillette. He is very unusual, for he has done two things well. He can write a play and act it. Voltaire tried that and failed. Gillette is really a great actor, and he is a powerful and successful playwright. He wrote Secret Service, Held by the Enemy and other successful plays. He has interpreted some of the most important roles outside of his own plays, and has added creative strength to every one of them. At present, at the Criterion Theatre, he is playing in Samson, interpreting the work of the remarkable Jewish genius, Bernstein, whose success as author of The Thief and of the great national play, Israel, has been so great. We advise our readers to see this play, Samson, for more than one reason. To begin with, the play presents, vividly, conditions of today. A man, enormously rich—Gillette—discovers that the wife to whom he is devoted cares nothing for him. He is a man of humble origin, a longshoreman, whose power has brought him millions and the adulation of the world. But his money and endless kindness have not succeeded in getting him the affection of his wife. He has thought of little but money, but suddenly discovers that he wants revenge much more than he ever wanted money. The man that he hates is another lover of money. He tears down that man's fortune, and in doing it deliberately beggars himself and tears down his own fortune—hence the title of the play, Samson, recalling the blind rage of the Biblical giant that pulled the temple down upon himself and his enemies. Gillette, in this powerful play, ruins his enemy, ruins himself, and suddenly discovers that he has for himself the woman's affection that could not be bought with all the money and luxury of the world. When she learns that he cares for something else besides money she cares for him. Go and see this play rather than some of the trashy things that are offered to you. It will interest you, it will make you think, it will show you one of the greatest actors living, interpreting with wonderful simplicity and force the work of a great playwright. Here are some of the lessons that this play teaches: It explains to some rich husbands why their lives are monotonous, why they always MISS something, and to some wives of rich men why they find little interest in life, nothing but the dull routine of clothes and jewelry and idle talk. It will teach wives and husbands not so rich that money as power has limits. There is a lesson especially for that particular brutality in a man which always and promptly condemns the woman. Gillette's rage against the man he hates is no greater than his gentle consideration and sympathy for the woman whom he has misunderstood and to whom he has made wisdom impossible. Bernstein's play teaches that the man who believes that money is really THE power among men has only looked at the surface. Get below that surface and you will find the ruling force to be the passions, the intense, fundamental emotions of the race that ruled our red-haired ancestors in their caves thirty thousand years ago. The theatre should be the greatest single educator and moral force outside of the printed book. The field of the actor and playwright is vast. They appeal to many faculties of man at once—to sight, to hearing, to all the emotions that vivid action stirs up. Long ago Goethe told of the play's power, when he advised the German Government that German territory occupied by Poles could most readily be made German by sending there many good German plays. The right kind of a play, he said, would make Germans and German feeling where armed soldiers would fail. The right kind of a play today can stir up good thought, arouse ambition and inspire noble action where many sermons might fail. Unfortunately, too few plays combine earnest thought with ability. In this particular play of Samson we have the remarkable combination of two great playwrights working together, and one of them, Gillette, actually interpreting the principal role. That is a combination as admirable as it is unusual and worthy of your attention.—New York Journal.

Christmas Attractions in London

London, Dec. 26.—"Boxing day," as always, was marked by the production of big pantomimes, the management of the Drury Lane again excelling with the gorgeous spectacle, Dick Whittington, in which half a dozen of the leading vaudeville stars provided the comedy, and an army of chorus girls the picturesque. Two Americans, Marie George and Truly Shattuck, have the leading parts. Cinderella is the attraction at the Adelphi, while similar performances hold the boards at the Lyceum and the suburban and provincial theatres, in addition to pantomimes. The last week has seen several notable revivals. Peter Pan, which was revived at the Duke of York's Theatre, received an enthusiastic welcome, a society known as Peter Panites keeping up continuous applause and showering the actors with flowers. What Every Woman Knows, another of the plays, has been transferred to the Hicks Theatre, to make way for Peter Pan, and continues to be the most popular play of the year. Other revivals are Dorothy, at the New Theatre, with C. Hayden Coffin, Arthur Williams and Louie Pounds in their original parts, and the ever-popular Charley's Aunt, at the Aldwych, which theatre Charles Frohman has just given up, his lease having expired on Christmas.

Work for the Social Dramatic Club of Palo Alto and for the Church Home Club of Santa Cruz are two good-sized

The One Big Question

In whatever direction I go,
One question, one only, confronts me:

The baggage man, weighing my baggage,
Says, "A hundred excess, or so;
What's the name of the troupe you're

"Can you fix me all right for the show?"

The genial, obliging hotel clerk

"It's a pity, but I can't do it,
I'm sorry, but I can't do it."

The porter, who brings in my trunk, says;
I know.

I can tell dem a mile off, by golly;
Say, how about a pass to the show?"

The chambermaid says, with a sly little wink.

And in tones confidingly low,
"If you can fix me all right for the show."

And nights in a feverish slumber,
I wretchedly toss to and fro,
And dream that the bed bugs in legions are calling.

"Can you fix me all right for the show?"

Kind Heaven! will even Saint Peter shout,

"Say, when is the company coming,

"Can you fix me all right for the show?"

—A New Shakespeare, Unidentified.

The Earnings of Wagner

While Wagner's letters contain countless and bitter references to his poverty and the never-ceasing money stringency, his financial condition was more often than not due to his impracticable handling of his affairs. In comparison with the money earned by contemporary composers of far smaller powers, Wagner was poorly paid for his works. Nevertheless, for some years before his death he received substantial sums by the sale of publication and performing rights, royalties, etc. Rienzi, the first of his operas to be performed, was a money-maker; but unfortunately the composer had omitted to secure a profitable arrangement and he received $225 for his share in its first performances. The earlier operas were published on Wagner's own responsibility, and saddled a heavy and irksome debt on him. The publisher Meser had the sympathy of the wits of the day. He lived in the first story before printing Rienzi, they said; The Flying Dutchman and Tannhauser took him up to the second and third, and Lohengrin was sure to send him to the garret. In later years, as the music dramas gained momentum, the returns increased. The Intendant of the Berlin Opera House who refused to pay $750 for the rights to Tannhauser was compelled to pay the composer $1300 in tantiemes the first year alone. The publishing rights of the Nibelungen Ring tetralogy were purchased by Schott and Son for $10,000, and for Parsifal they paid the composer $15,000. According to Henry T. Finck, Wagner's income for the last year of his life (1882) was $25,000. The annual profits from his operas have, of course steadily increased. In 1892 Mr. Finck estimates them to have been at least $50,000; and without a doubt twice that amount is well within the figures for the last few years. The Bayreuth Festivals alone have been a veritable gold mine for the heirs of Wagner. The quickest and most easily earned money that Wagner ever received was the $5,000 paid by a group of rich Americans for the Centennial March, which he wrote to order for the Philadelphia Exposition of 1876. The immense interest in Wagner after his death is illustrated by the fact that his widow received $12,000 for the concert rights for a year, for a youthful symphony which had never been published, and which the composer himself never wished given to the world.—Lewis M. Isaacs, in the Bookman.

Jan. 31-Feb. 6.

Through arrangements just consummated, the Auditorium of Los Angeles will in about three weeks be opened as a musical extravaganza house. The productions will be done by the management of the house and will be of a high order of merit. Such pieces as Cinderella and the like are contemplated. Florence Leslie, whose reputation as an expert in stage dancing and the posing of stage pictures is notable, has sixty girls in training already for the ensembles and chorus. The principals will probably all be brought from the East, a number of names of established reputation being under consideration. Manager Ernest Crawford will have charge of the productions. His policy will be to give the public bright, sparkling performances, yet thoroughly cleanly and refined.

Who Can Write a Western Play?

THE DRAMATIC REVIEW believes that of the West the great big heart-throbbing masterpieces of dramatic literature are to be written.

To demonstrate our judgment and to encourage substantially Western playwrights, we invite the competition of those who believe they have ability in this line.

Our Offer

In an open competition, restricted only to a residence West of the Mississippi and to a subject relating to the vast Western empire that is bounded by the big river on the east and the mighty Pacific Ocean on the west, we propose to have selected by a committee of three competent judges, the best tragedy, comedy, comedy-drama or farce, that is submitted, and to the lucky author or authors we promise a production and royalty for one entire season.

Through the co-operation of W. J. Elleford, one of our most progressive and most influential road managers, we are enabled to make this splendid offer. Not only will the winner of the contest get a production, but will for one year receive a weekly royalty, figured on the basis of royalties now paid.

The Competition Is In Force From This Date and Closes on May 31, 1909

Each manuscript must be type-written when submitted and must be accompanied by the name and address of the writer in a separate envelope. This envelope will be numbered, and a receipt numbered to correspond will be returned. The manuscript will also bear this number and not until the competition is ended will anyone outside of the Editor of THE DRAMATIC REVIEW learn the identity of the author of the manuscript.

All manuscripts will be returned after the competition.

Certain conditions attending this competition will be explained in a printed form, as the manuscripts are received.

The profits to be derived from a successful play are great. THE LION AND THE MOUSE has made Charles Klein a very wealthy man. Eugene Walter wrote PAID IN FULL after several failures. Last year he made something in the neighborhood of $200,000 from royalties. George Broadhurst received last year $250,000 from his royalties for THE MAN OF THE HOUR.

Send all manuscripts to Competition Department, DRAMATIC REVIEW, San Francisco.

Ferris Hartman is Pleasing Los Angeles With It Happened in Nordland

Los Angeles, Jan. 7.—The grand opera benefit for the Italian sufferers last Sunday afternoon proved quite a financial success, netting something over $1,400. Other near-to-be plans include a benefit which the Examiner is arranging, and from which the funds are to go into the big Los Angeles Italian Relief Fund, which now amounts to over $10,000. The programme for the Glazier benefit, January 15th, has been announced. It embraces eighteen rattling good numbers, and looks to prove the finest value for $1.00 theatrically ever offered in Los Angeles. There will be several one-act sketches and numerous single and double offerings. Every theatre in town is represented in the roster of talent selected by the committee in charge, to say nothing of the vast number of volunteers whose offer of services had to be declined in the framing of a programme of reasonable length. The Auditorium Extravaganza Company, which plans to open at the Theatre Beautiful, January 18th, is rounding its initial offering, Jack and the Beanstalk, into shape, and will doubtless be ready to offer a magnificent spectacle by opening night. The list of principals is being kept secret. Another reorganization of the Unique Comedy Company is in prospect. George Rehn is to assume charge as producer, and Maxie Mitchell returns for her line of parts. The junior Armstrong and Ethel Davis are leaving. Florence Leslie, who is staging the numbers at the Auditorium, will also stage the Unique musical numbers.

BELASCO—Lewis S. Stone is playing his part in The Heir to the Hoorah, at the Belasco, this week, with particular zest, in view of the recent arrival at the Stone stronghold of a new heiress. Mrs. Stone and the little girl, who arrived just in time to watch the old year out and the new year in, are both doing well. As to the presentation of the piece, how could it be otherwise than good, with the star's heart so much in his work, and his whole company feeling good with him? Florence Oakley makes as much of the part of the wife as the playwright lets her, while Leslie Preston as the dashing widow is quite breezy enough to suit anybody. Charles Ruggles, De Witt Jennings and Ben Graham as the triumvirate of friends find a world of comedy in their rollicking roles, while Burke Clarke as the near-villain and Richard Vivian as the Eastern friend of "Joe," are all that could be asked. Harry Oakes does a good bit as "Hush," Joe's Jap servant. Beatrice Noyes is a delightful little Madge, and the play as a whole moves off well.

BURBANK—Our old friend, Nancy & Company, made its appearance at Morosco's stock house Sunday last, much to the decided edification and enjoyment of the usual Sunday audience. Moreover, the delight has been continuing ever since, as is usually the case when this old Daly farce is produced. As to the play itself, nothing need be said. Of the players, much. Alice Lovell Taylor as Gloriana finds opportunity for a spectacular and dazzling display of her gowns. Moreover, she acts. Margo Duffett is also to the fore with beautiful clothes and some more "acting." Harry Stockbridge; John Burton, in a character lead which he handles excellently; A. Byron Beasley in a poetic role, and William Desmond in a dashing, breezy military role are all good. So is Harry Mestayer as the well-managed husband. But the one and real hit is Mary Hall, whose Nancy Brasher is a revelation as to her comedy abilities. The play is well mounted, and, as I said before, pleases everybody, which is enough.

MAJESTIC—Rose Melville and her company are still presenting Sis Hopkins at the Majestic to pleased houses.

MASON OPERA HOUSE—The first half of the week we have had more of the good grand opera Sig. Lambardi and Manager S. M. Berry brought out with them. Their bills have been Il Trovatore, Cavalleria Rusticana, La Tosca and Rigoletto. Tonight they give way to E. H. Sothorn, whose repertoire includes Lord Dundreary, Richard Lovelace and Hamlet.

GRAND—It Happened in Nordland, Lew Field's former success, is providing the Ferris Hartman Company and its star with a good laugh-producer, and good music, to say nothing of opportunities galore for costume display. Hartman himself seems easily at home in the role of the long-lost brother, while Josie Hart's American ambassador and queen poem gained importance from her air of easy grace and regality of figure. Walter de Leon, as the crown prince, with a fondness for absinthe, provides much of the fun during his interims before the footlights. His Absinthe Frappe, and You Remind Me a Lot of Someone, have been many-time encore hits. Muggins Davis and a personable young woman who spells her name E-d-n-a-h Robinson are pleasing scenic adjuncts, neither having any singing chances to speak of. Robert Lett is an amusing prime minister, while James Fogarty's Baron Sparta, minister of police, is a scream. Adequate costuming and well-staged chorus numbers add to the effectiveness of the piece.

PEOPLE'S—We Are King, Walker Whiteside's former success, with Edmund Carroll in the stellar dual roles, is occupying the People's this week. Mr. Carroll was a member of Mr. Whiteside's original company, and gives a forceful and satisfactory interpretation of the role. His support is good, particularly effective being the princess of Maude Shaw. She is an accomplished and able actress, whose attractive personality is by no means a negative quantity in her pleasingness. We Are King is a comedy version of The Prisoner of Zenda, following the Zenda story insofar as the leading roles are those of a weak king (in this play a usurper of the throne), and a newspaper correspondent who resembles him to so marked a degree as to make a substitution possible. In We Are King the newspaper man is found, after all, to be the rightful heir to the throne, and accordingly is allowed to marry the princess and "live happy ever afterwards."

lish sketch, presented, apparently, by Englishmen who announce that they played "before his majesty, King of England, under royal command," is the headline feature, and maybe in spite of this, if not because of it, the skit has been receiving a cordial reception. Gus Edwards' Blonde Typewriters, very blonde, too, by the way, are six attractive young women, who sing and cavort pleasingly through a half-dozen catchy songs. Harry Linton and Anita Laurence, with their Married Now, muchly improved and added to, provide another good number. Bert Howard's piano playing is one of the best features we've had in a long time, especially his imitation of a music-box. Happy Jack Gardner, Felice Morris and Ethel Greene are holdovers who make good. The Castlane Brothers, with their hair-raising cycling exposition and the thrilling loop the loop, are then sensation of the bill.

LOS ANGELES—Carl Herman, "The Electric King," presents an ingenious act at the Los Angeles this week. Whatever electricians or those versed in the mysteries of the mystic force may think of his performance, certain it is that to the lay mind his feats are not only wonderful, but amazing as well. Seemingly he turns himself into a storage battery, accumulating enough of the "juice" to render possible the ignition of a sheet of paper merely touched to his flesh by an assistant. He does other marvelous stunts too numerous to mention. The Loosen Sisters, wire walkers and sharpshooters, offer a clever act. Arnold and Ethel Grazer present a sketch, Going Into Vaudeville, which is not half bad. Grace Passmore sings some coon songs passably. Sam Hodsworth offers pictured ballads and Dick and Barney Ferguson contribute dancing par excellence. Their alleged comedy is as bad as their dancing is good.

UNIQUE—The Toreador, a musical comedy wherein is set forth the series of adventures befalling an Irishman who visits Mexico, is the bill at the Hentz-Zolle house this week. Will Armstrong has the title role, and pleases immensely as the unfortunate Celt, while his brother, Ed Armstrong, and Jack Curtiss assist in the complications. Barney Williams is a genial Dutchman, prominent in the mix-ups. Among the song interpolations are Shamrock, by Lillie Sutherland; Long Ago, by Ethel Davis, and Mary Ouch, by Maglelene Holly and the chorus. Illustrated songs by Leona Craft and motion pictures complete the bill.

EMPIRE—The plaintive, entrancing airs of Hawaii, with their alluring minors and counter-melodies, were never more attractively rendered in Los Angeles than they are being sung at the Empire this week by The Five Royal Hawaiian Serenaders, four boys and one pretty girl. They accompany their singing on the native string instruments. Reed and Arbuckle are presenting an Irish-Teutonic duology as one of the features of the bill, and Edith de Belle's singing and whistling solos, to say nothing of her dainty dancing, are well done. The Hill Sisters offer an illustration of unusual appeal in My Garden Which Blooms For You, and the stock company gets a lot of fun out of The Arrival of Jeffries, another of Al Frank's farces.

FISCHER'S—From its operatic opening, Pretty Little Geisha Girls, to its operatic finale, The Pogoda, Charles Alphin's musical comedy at Fischer's Theatre this week is really entitled to the more pretentious title operetta, and is far and away the best thing musically the First Street theatre has ever presented. Also its story is amusing and full enough of comedy to be called by that name. It's the old story of the love of a man for a maid. They are Japanese, and the lady's father, who objects to the match, is proprietor of the tea house where the play takes place. Through the intervention of a detective the irate father is placated and the wedding is arranged. Nellie Montgomery is the girl; Aubrey Carr, her lover; Max Bloom, the obdurate parent of the girl; and Libby Blondelle the equally obdurate mother of the lover. Frank Vack as a Chinese servant and Ben T. Dillon as the detective complete the cast.

WALKER'S—The bill at Walker's Theatre this week is enlivened by some good acts. Margaret Lindon, appearing in one of the sketches, formerly was a resident of Los Angeles, having been a member of the Olympia Opera Company and the Los Angeles Choral Society. Pierce and Roslyn, holdovers, offer the Toreador act with which they made good at Fischer's some weeks ago, and they interpolate as well a number of Indian songs and Western numbers. Edna Davenport and Harry Tyler have a good singing and dancing specialty.

C. M. EMERY.

Correspondence

Oakland, Jan. 7.—This has been a week noticeable for its good attractions, of which, noticeably, has been the Road Show at the Orpheum, which has been packing that spacious house at every performance. It is unquestionably the best bill that the Orpheum has given us this season and every number is a headline in itself. The following program speaks for itself: Mile. De Dio; Edwin Holt and company; Merian's

Canine Actors; Heyman, Moser, Charles and Fannie Van; Work and Owner; Rogers and Dandy; and Foma Frankens. At the Maedonough, George Colan's new comedy opera, Fifty Miles from Boston, was seen here for the first time, and as is always the rule with Colan's plays, the house was well filled each night. W. D. Stevenson, W. P. Richardson and Hazel Lowery are the stars of a good all-round company. The musical features are quite conspicuous. Suzanne Westford making quite a hit with her song, Aln't It Awful? Brewster's Millions is booked, 7-9; Shamus O'Connell, 10; Rose Hare, 11-1. Maryland Stage—Gene, with Isabelle Fletcher in the title role, is making good at Ye Liberty, and incidentally drawing packed houses. The play, which is one of Sarah's "Freak" comedies, calls for an exceptionally large cast, there being no less than 200 characters, speaking parts in the piece, thereby calling into action every member of Bishop's large force. The play is given a most elaborate production, in which the fine work of Milton Stallard, the stage director, and Grace Wishart, the scenic artist, are easily discernible. Both are entitled to the greatest of praise. Of the company the best work beside Miss Fletcher is done by George F. and George W. Foster. Landers Stevens, E. L. Bennis, Lillian Elliott and George Cooper. The latter was taken seriously ill Wednesday evening, and at a moment's notice, with but a few preparations whatever, Estelle Warfield jumped into her role and gave a performance that really was remarkable under the circumstances. Miss Cooper is rapidly recovering and will resume her work in a few days. Next week Strongheart will be the attraction, and following that, Minnie Madden Fiske's great play, Tess of the D'Urbervilles, will be given a magnificent production. January 20 is set for the date of the Gadsby concert at Ye Liberty. At the Bell, the road show, including the Jay Circus and Patterson's living models, is playing to capacity houses and giving general satisfaction. Manager Lubelski of the Novelty is arranging a monster vaudeville bill to be given Friday for the benefit of the Italian sufferers. Those who have volunteered their services for the cause are Mme. Schnell, who is a native of Sicily; W. C. Falt; Hanlon and Clifton; Billy Farnham; Boulder and Simon. The benefit will be under the auspices of the Italian Order of Columbus.

LOUIS SCHEFFEL.

Eureka, Cal., Jan. 7.—George C. Stanley, the baritone singer, has joined the Gorton stock company at Eureka, Cal. Iva Shepard will close at Long Beach to join the Gorton stock company to play ingenue leads. James Guy Usher, late leading man with the Ed Redmond company, has joined the Gorton company at Eureka. Franklin Murray, late with the Chicago stock company in Chicago, will be the director and character man with the Gorton stock company. Marion Dunn will play characters and Launing Rowan will be the leading woman. Miss Rowan was for two seasons with Ralph Stewart. Miss Rowan left New York last week. James Wright will do the comedies and specialties between acts.

Chico, Jan. 6.—It is a well-known fact that a production may make a decided hit in one locality and be a dismal failure in another. The Alaskan, which showed here New Year's night, found Chico to be one of the localities with the "hit." The house was packed. The Alaskan is a very worthy attraction, and Chicanos and others were loud in their praise of it. In Wyoming was seen here Monday, January 4, and was well received by a rather small house. It was deserving of better patronage. The next attraction at the Majestic will be Florence Roberts on January 14, while all open dates are being filled by a moving picture concern. Don Fulano, the trained horse, at the Gem is drawing immense crowds this week. Walter Ferry, a comedian, will be the special offering for next week.

C. H. CHACE.

Tacoma, Wash., Jan. 2.—Managers of the Tacoma, Star, Grand and Pantages Theatres will be required to pay fines in the police court for violating the State law providing for the closing of theatres on Sunday. Some months ago the managers were arrested, and a test case was made of the case of Manager Herald of the Tacoma Theatre, which went to the Supreme Court. Judge Snell held that the Sunday theatre closing law was unconstitutional, and the case was appealed, with the result that the Supreme Court, some months ago, handed down an opinion reversing Judge Snell and upholding the law. The cases have been on the Superior Court records ever since. Prosecuting Attorney Rowland taking no action on them. Today Deputy Prosecutor Dow obtained an order from Judge Snell remanding all four cases to the Justice Court, and the managers will be called in to pay their fines. "The State law is very plain in requiring theatres to be closed on Sunday," said Judge Snell, "and I do not understand why it has not been enforced. The enforcement of the law lies in the hands of the police or the prosecuting attorney, or any citizen may swear out a warrant against the theatre managers for violating the Sunday law." At the Tacoma Theatre, Dec. 27-28, The Legend of Ned played to good business. Knox Wilson as April Fool is with the company again this season, and with his grotesque make-up and concertino solos scored a hit. Grace Drew is still the Jack of Hearts. Adelaide Harland as the Chorus Girl played well, as did Maurice Barry, who is The Man in the Moon. Jan. 1-2, The Great Divide proved to be a dramatic treat. Tacamans seldom being privileged to witness such fine acting. Edwin Mordant, who was here last season with Sarah Truax, played the part of the Westerner in splendid style, and Ethel Brownell, who had Margaret Anglin's old part, is an emotional actress of much ability. The supporting company was adequate in every way and the piece well staged. Jan. 3-4, Babes in Toyland; 8-9, Louis James in Peer Gynt; 10-11, Jefferson in Rip Van Winkle. The Savoy reopened New Year's day with an absorbing melodrama of Western life, called The Cowpuncher. Virginia Thornton and Harry —New Orleans, January 2.—Tulane Theatre—We have been offered a treat this week by another of Mort H. Singer's galaxy of successful productions, namely, A Stubborn Cinderella, which has proven the most acceptable musical comedy seen here this season. It has deservedly played to big business. There is both life and joy throughout the three acts. The cast is capable, the costumes bright and pretty, and the music cheerful and catchy. Homer B. Mason as "Mac," the leading character, around which most of the action and fun revolves, makes a masterpiece of the role. His work is easy, natural and above all spiced with intelligence. His magnetism was plainly visible about the audience. Grace Edmond, as Lady Leslie the titled character, was both dainty and graceful, bringing to the part careful study that won much favor. She has a good voice, is fair to look upon and shared honors with the star. Some of the best work is done by Ethel Dovey, a winsome, pretty girl, whose character of Lois was that of a college chum to all the male students. Lincoln Plummer as Fat looked the part and was responsible for a good deal of the fun of the play. Harry Paul, as Skeeter, is a dancer of the Cohanesque school. His songs and slang were excellent. Jack Raffael, our "Frisco friend," got lots out of the part of Colonel Hunt and in the garb of a Scotch highlander sang one of the hits of the evening, namely, None but the Brave Deserve the Fair. Charles Wilson, Fred Truesdale and a comely, active chorus, which showed the masterful drilling of George Marion, deserve special mention. A Stubborn Cinderella will be seen on the Coast to delight playgoers with the music of Love Me Just Because, What's the Use, Don't be Cross With Me, Don't be Anybody's Moon but Mine, and When You First Kissed the Last Girl You Loved. Next week—Eleanor Robson. Jan. 10.—Blanche Walsh. Crescent Theatre—Checkers is with us again and playing to capacity. The cast is about the same as last year, with Hans Robert as Checkers, Dave Braham, Jr., as Push Miller, and dainty Helen Ormsby as Pert. This play has so much merit that it will always prove entertaining and profitable. Next week—The Virginian.

Phoenix, January 2.—The engagement of E. H. Sothern did not materialize here, as too great a guarantee was demanded by Mr. Sothern's advance agent, in the estimation of local manager "Jap" Wheelock. The following bookings are noted for Phoenix: A Stubborn Cinderella comes on the 14th. Charles B. Hanford's company will appear here this year in Much Ado About Nothing for the matinee, and A Winter Night's Tale at night.

San Diego, January 6.—Garrick Theatre (Morosco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—Dec. 19—The University of California Glee Club, under the direction of Clinton R. Morse, did very good business. The boys gave a nice little show, and that they pleased is evident from the fact that after the last curtain they were greeted with round after round of applause. Jan. 1-2, with special matinee each day, Robert Ober in Brewster's Millions played to four large and enthusiastic audiences and scored a big hit. Mr. Ober enacted the part of Monte Brewster in a very capable manner and shows that he is a comedian of the A-1 caliber. Mr. Ober is ably supported by Jane Mathes who made a sweet and captivating Peggy Grey. The balance of the cast are good in their respective parts. The scenery and electrical effects are very good, the much advertised yacht scene in the third act lived up to all expectations and was one of the best bits of stage realism seen here this season. 12-13

—Rose Melville in His Hopkins 4-17-18
—A Storm Cloud in His 4-17-18
—The Mouse Pickwick Theatre (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—Jan. 4-10—Myrtle Vane stock company in From Sire to Son. It is a striking melodrama and the company is doing very good work. Oscar Grey Briggs, especially, doing extra good work. Al H. Hallett provides an excellent Dr. Marmaduke Mandrake, and Frank Richardson makes a good Peter Grimes. Fredricka Hattie Giant makes the most of it. Ferd gambles and makes the most of it. Ferd Unwin makes a good Abe Isaacs. Miss Vane pleases as Mable Armitage, as also does Priscilla Knowles as Mrs. Amanda Stockup. Queen Theatre (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.)—Jan. 4-10—Mlle. Marzella with her wonderful birds scores a hit. Hesse & Raidon, musical and singing act, pleases. Mack & Maloney, eccentric dancers, have a good act. Francis Clark, monologue artist, tells some good stories. Latest moving pictures. Capacity every performance. Grand Theatre (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.)—Jan. 4-10—Moving pictures and illustrated songs. Good business. Empire Star, Bijou and Union theatres, with moving pictures and illustrated songs, report good business. C. E. LUNDQUIST.

Bedlands, January 2.—The Wyatt (H. C. Wyatt, mgr.; E. J. Underwood, bus. mgr.)—Murray and Mack, 9, were welcomed as old friends by a large audience. 11—Mme. Gadski, Spinet attraction, drew large and fashionable house. Coming—Sis Hopkins, 14; Girl of the Sunny South, 15; Stubborn Cinderella, 16; Hanford, 19; Lion and the Mouse, 21; The Wolf, 26. Lora Leib spent the Christmas holidays in Redlands with her aunt, Beatrice Leib.

Petalum. Jan. 4.—Hill Opera House (J. R. Roche, lessee): Dec. 25, Miss Turner played Jane Eyre. Her support was excellent, and there was a fine house for Christmas Day. On Dec. 28, Stockwell and McGregor's dual production, The Blind Organist, and Mrs. Temple's Telegram, was well received, and the company played to good business. J. R. BOOTHE.

Sacramento, January 5.—In Wyoming comes to the Clunie 8-9. The Lombardi Grand Opera Company comes to the Clunie Theatre on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of next week. The company travels by special train, carrying 115 people, which includes a chorus of forty, an orchestra of thirty, and seventeen leading singers. The following artists are among those who will appear: Mme. Elvira Campoli, Giuseppe Pimazzoni, Alessandro Scalabrini, Delores Fraum, and Artidoro Maureri. Special scenery and effects are carried. A concert by the University of California Glee Club will be given in Elks' Hall this evening. The vaudeville houses are doing well and presenting good bills. At the Grand Theatre for the week of January 3 there are appearing Mr. and Mrs. Esmond in The Soldier of Propville; the Zello Group, comedy act; Alice de Garmo, gymnastic Ariel; Herbert Cyril, London Johnnie Blockbloom and Burns, eccentrics, and Escalves, singer. At Pantages are seen for week starting Sunday, January 3, Madden and Fitzpatrick company, in playlet, The Turn of the Tide; Eldora, the American Cinquevelli; The La Moines, novelty instrumentalists; Emil Subers, the Alabama blossom; Ah Sing Foo, Chinese conjurer; Thomas and Payne, roller skate dancers; A-la Williams, Pal of Mine.

Portland, January 2.—If the plan of the Portland ministers works out, there will be no Sunday baseball in Portland next season. And that isn't all. Theatres, too, will have to close their doors on Sunday. Excursions run to make money will also fall under the ban and in fact the churches will be the only places open, if the proposed law is passed. An entirely new Sunday closing law is being fostered by the Ministerial Alliance. This statute will be very blue indeed. Baseball and theatres are the chief evils aimed at but almost all sorts of recreation that are left in this spotless town will suffer as well. The present Sunday law exempts theatres and the injunction to stop baseball and similar exhibitions on the seventh day are not plainly stipulated. But all these things will be set down in the law now being drafted. The bill will be handed to the legislature, which opens the middle of this month, with the expressed wish that it be passed. If it becomes a law, it will prove a severe set-back to amusements in Portland.

It has always seemed to me that the Seattle theatre should be devoted to a higher class of amusement than popular priced melodrama. Despite its sixteen years, the house remains as one of the most expensive, beautiful and comfortable theatres in the West. It has a splendid stage and excellent dressing rooms, and some of the heavy shows given there in the old days prove that the house can handle the biggest scenic attractions that are likely to be brought to this city. Furthermore, while its seating capacity is far more limited than that of the Grand or the Moore, the Seattle is still larger than the most modern type of Broadway playhouses. Its capacity rather adapts it to a limited, steady clientele at good prices than to the handling of big crowds at a cheap scale of admission. Seattle is now far larger than was San Francisco at the time the Krulings established the enormously successful Tivoli Opera House in that city, and the Seattle would be ideal as the home of a permanent stock musical organization, playing at perhaps seventy-five cent or dollar prices, and offering the best of comic operas and musical comedies with lavish productions and a perfectly balanced company of the real sort. Another profitable use to which the Seattle could be put would be the establishment of a high-class dramatic stock company, to play royalty comedies and society dramas, with the accompaniment of a rotation of stock stars appearing in their own successes, such as James K. Hackett, Kelcey & Shannon, Arnold Daly, Robert Edeson, Amelia Bingham and similar talented players. Along the lines of the above our friend Jimmy Sayre of the Seattle Argus speaketh with wisdom. What Seattle would stand for is a high-class stock house producing the best plays at 50 cents admission. Musical comedy as a permanent thing we do not believe would be supported the year around. Seattle is not large enough. A dramatic stock is the thing.

FRANK A. PRESCOTT is ahead of Stetson's Uncle Tom's Cabin Company this season.

E. H. Sothern will be the brilliant stellar attraction at the Van Ness Theatre for two weeks, commencing Monday, January 18th. It is now several seasons since this famous star has appeared here, and he has arranged to stage a strong repertoire, to include Richard Lovelace, Hamlet, Lord Dundreary and Riche-lieu.

RENO (Nev.), Jan. 4.—Harry McMillan, one-time millionaire and more recently announced as engaged to marry Edna Goodrich, who is now Mrs. Nat C. Goodwin, stands charged with issuing fictitious checks to the amount of nearly $9,000. The warrant was sworn to by James May, Nevada's gambling king, in this city today, and the officers arrested McMillan in Tonopah tonight. McMillan is alleged to have secured this money from May one night early last month during a week he spent in Reno. At that time he gambled heavily, and at one sitting won $6,000 over one of May's gambling tables. Later he returned to the game, and when he started to lose he issued checks on the John S. Cook Bank of Goldfield for his losses. On each of these checks May, it is claimed, paid McMillan a small cash consideration and the balance in chips, which were played over the table. In doing this, it is claimed, the element of a gambling loan in the matter is eliminated, and McMillan is liable to imprisonment in the penitentiary for from one to ten years. Nat Goodwin arrived

Lillian Russell has another surprise in store for her friends and the public. She has just announced that the love letters which she has received during her long and wonderful stage career will be published within a short time. That the letters will make interesting reading goes without saying, for no one, on or off the stage, has been the recipient of more attention and admiration than the eternally youthful Lillian Russell. By publishing these letters the actress will give the public knowledge of her love affairs, the number and fervency of which have kept the world gaping for many years. "Ever since I first went on the stage I've saved all the letters that were written to me, and I have a trunk full of them," Miss Russell said in explaining her purpose. "I am going to publish many of the best in two volumes. One volume will be devoted to the serious ones, the other to the outrageously funny ones. Of course, there are some I cannot publish."

Florence Roberts as Lady Joan Meredyth in The House of Bondage.

Florence Roberts in The House of Bondage

PORTLAND, ORE., Jan. 8.—Florence Roberts opened an engagement of four nights at the Heilig Theatre last night, presenting her new play, The House of Bondage, by Seymour Obermer. The theatre was filled by a fashionable audience, and it was evident that it was a deeply interested one. Before the play was in progress long enough for the story to develop, the brightness of the dialogue had reached and held the close attention of every one. The extreme warmth of Miss Roberts's reception indicated a predisposition on the part of her auditors to accept her, no matter what the play might be, but the positive ovation at the conclusion of the second act was not entirely personal, but was in large part a tribute to the play and the supporting company. The House of Bondage is of English locale, the first act being laid in a physician's office in London, and the last two acts in the living-room of a chalet in the Swiss Alps. The triangle has been used frequently of late as a mathematical figure of speech to illustrate the plays written about a husband, a wife and another man. Here the mathematical figure must be altered to a quadrangle, as there are presented not only the husband, wife and another man, but another woman as well. The most refreshing frankness exists among the four regarding the situation. The quadrangle is ingeniously bisected by making the other man a surgeon who must operate on the brain of the husband, the interest is skillfully suspended by the doubt as to whether his knife is going to slip or not, and the play is finished by the other woman getting the husband a place in the English Cabinet, whereupon the wife leaves him forever, warning him if he does not use his newly acquired political power to amend the divorce laws in six months, she will ignore the laws and live openly with the man she loves. John Cort has surrounded Miss Roberts this season with a superb supporting company. Miss Roberts, of course, plays the role of the wife, which affords her every opportunity for the display of those great emotional powers which have won for her an acknowledged eminence in roles of a certain sort. Arthur Forrest plays the husband—the same Arthur Forrest who in many a Richard Mansfield production nearly wrested laurels from the lamented tragedian. Thurlow Bergen, ever able and engaging, plays "the other man," and Ann Warrington, a seasoned and intelligent artist, is "the other woman." Mary Bertrand, Hallett Bosworth and Harry Gibbs are all well-known players who contribute to an uncommonly fine performance.

Dance of the Ben Hurites

Lee Parvin, who is doing the publicity work ahead of H. E. Pierce & Co.'s In Wyoming, through the courtesy of Dave Towle, press agent of Ben Hur, together with Nick Panfilio of Brewster's Millions, and Ben Krouse of Arizona, were extended an invitation to attend a banquet and dance given by the Ben Hur company New Year's night. The occasion proved a most enjoyable one, and Mr. Parvin reminiscently eloquent said: "It is such little exchanges of thoughtful regard that bind the members of the profession by silken cords of sympathy and strew their thorny paths with choicest blossoms of fragrant consideration. The average man or woman on the road has very little pleasure to brighten up their lives and it is at such gatherings as this that we are really made to feel that life is worth while and we are all the better for it." It will be easily seen that Mr. Parvin is a press dope dispenser of decidedly unusual ability.

Now Actor Von Plank Wants Damages

BAKERSFIELD, Jan. 1.—Adrian von Plank, the actor who was shot by E. N. Blacker, left the sanatorium yesterday for his home in Portland. Before leaving, Von Plank placed his affairs in the hands of a local attorney, with instructions to effect a settlement with Blacker, and if unsuccessful to begin suit for damage. Von Plank was shot by Blacker after the latter had discovered his wife in the actor's room. Blacker is out on $2,500 bail, charged with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder. Blacker refuses to discuss the terms demanded for settlement.

Last season Mr. White was in stock in Benton Harbor, Michigan.

Theatres to the Fore With Benefit Performances For Italy's Sufferers

The theatrical interests of the Coast are busy arranging benefits for the suffering people of Italy. In this city the managers of the local theatres have decided to assist in the collection of funds by arranging for a monster benefit performance, which will be participated in by talent from the various houses of amusement. Initiatory steps were taken Monday at a meeting held in the Orpheum of the Association of Theatrical Managers, at which it was decided to give the performance at the Van Ness Theatre on Thursday, January 14th. It will begin at 1:30 o'clock and the programme will include attractions from the Van Ness, Valencia, Orpheum, Princess, American and Alcazar Theatres. John Morrissey and Melville Marx of the committee on programme reported that Madame Galski, the soprano, would sing; that the Alcazar would contribute the second act of Sweet Kitty Bellairs; that Kolb and Dill and their company from the Princess would give an act of The Politicians; that the Valencia Theatre would send their stock company with sixty people to give the rousing third act of The College Widow, and that the Orpheum would contribute several specialties, including Hyman Meyers of the Orpheum Road Show, now playing in Oakland. Robert Ober and the members of Brewster's Millions Company at the Van Ness will have something interesting to offer, and the best specialties from George Cohan's Fifty Miles from Boston will be the contribution from the American Theatre. Preparations are going on swiftly for the benefit under the auspices of Corpus Christi Church, to take place at the Valencia Theatre Tuesday afternoon. A programme full of interest and embracing the best acts to be obtained in San Francisco will be presented. Manager Will Greenbaum said that he had wired Mme. Galski, and that she would participate in the performance. An auction sale of seats and boxes for the benefit were held at the Merchants' Exchange yesterday. The managers look for a return of several thousand dollars from the affair, which will be a substantial addition to the relief fund. Sid Grauman of the National Theatre is arranging a benefit, the proceeds from which will be given to the relief fund, for Thursday night, January 14th, at Dreamland Rink. There will be a number of theatrical turns, to be followed by a boxing tournament. He expects to realize about $8,000. The receipts from the Flagg Theatre benefit, last Tuesday, gave the fund $92.35. Later contributions have been as follows: Princess Theatre Orchestra, $11.50; Theatrical Stage Employees' Union, No. 16, $100.00.

The Novelty in Burlesque

Definite arrangements have been concluded looking toward the opening of this theatre on Sunday, January 24th, with a burlesque show, in which will be included several vaudeville acts. As near as can be learned, the arrangement consists of George Clayton, who is well known in local amusements, as the head of the proposition, with Al Hagen in the background, representing Pelton & Switzer of Denver, with more or less of an interest in the proposition. Whatever the details are, it means the formal opening wedge in a big San Francisco theatre of the independent vaudeville circuit, which is booked through Bert Levey's office. Allen Curtis will furnish the burlesque show. At present he is now playing in Seattle.

Cleveland played the leads in a manner altogether satisfactory. Others well known here who contributed to the success of the production were Noel Travers and Virginia Bryant and William Thorne. Miss Van Tassel and Carl Hinkley were good in character parts. The McKee players scored a success second to none of their past triumphs when they presented The Three of Us. Miss Oswald handled her emotional scenes splendidly, and Mr. Holmer, who is again in the cast after a fortnight's absence, scores a personal hit. Denton Vane as the discontented young brother, has some splendid opportunities for clever work and neglects none of them. Edward Lawrence as the Chinese servant and Erba Robeson as the Irish maid furnish the comedy. Dorothy Brighton, who has just joined the company, created a favorable impression. Robert Lawrence, James Martin and J. Brigham Percival were well cast and Bertha Cordray made an excellent Sonny. The scenery and staging were correct and the furniture used in the bachelor apartments was elaborate in the extreme, being constructed of elks' horns. Next week, The Pride of Jennico. Thursday afternoon Mr. McKee gave an afternoon of vaudeville, amateur and professional, to the poor children of the city. Robert Lawrence officiated as Santa Claus and every child received a box of candy. The boys received balls, bats, games, etc., and the little girls were given dolls. Miss Robeson contributed a monologue and coon song; Miss Aubrey, a character sketch; Miss Cordray, a group of songs, as did Mr. Vane, and Jack Martin entertained with a collection of stories. Women prominent in the social and charitable life of the city helped distribute the presents. At the Grand, Prof. Boehlke with his London act "Who was the subject of much comment. It was a clever conception. Stephen Gratton and company had a bit of comedy entitled Locked Out at 2 a. m., which was splendidly acted. The Traveling Man, as enacted by Joseph Deming and company, was laughable, as was the variety of dialects dealt out by Gus Bruno. Mlle. Vera dances well and Edward Charrison pleases with his illustrated songs. Beginning January 4, Buster Brown and His Dog Tige; Emily Benner; Phil Staats, pianist; Carsons Brothers; Pitching Brothers, in A Musical Flower Garden. At the Pantages chief interest centered in the Florenz Troupe of acrobats and their clever act. These people appeared in the opening bill of the rechristened theatre last spring and scored a success. Besides, Baby Florenz was born here during the engagement. The Kohler Grand Opera Trio of Italian singers is the best act of its kind seen here in weeks like Abrams and Johns had a humorous playlet and Burton and Brooks secured many laughs with their topical songs and local hits. B. B. Vincent still continues to please as the singer of illustrated songs. Jan. 4, De Kock Brothers, equilibrist; Leonard Kane, dancer; Clayton and Glenn; Southern Quartet; Rentfree and Jensen.

Eugene, Jan. 4.—Arizona, 30, brought playgoers out en masse, everybody delighted. Jane Eyre, New Year matinee and evening offering, played to fair business. Why Girls Leave Home, booked for 7; Florence Roberts, in The House of Bondage, 12. The Orpheum Theatre has been transformed into a moving picture show and is now known as the Lyric Theatre. The initial performance was given tonight. Another building is being remodeled into an electric theatre, which will be ready by the 15th. This will make four moving picture shows, one continuous vaudeville and the Court Circuit theatre. The Bell vaudeville theatre has an excellent bill for the current week.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 1.—Max Figgman in The Substitute packed the Salt Lake Theatre for three consecutive nights. The Wolf commences the year at the Salt Lake Theatre in a most promising manner. The Wolf is typically an American play, the plot being laid upon the Canadian frontier among pine woods and where man is wholly free. Among the principals of the company is Alfred Swenson (a Salt Lake boy), who has made good in his profession. He will undoubtedly receive a warm welcome at the hands of his old friends. An excellent bill is being presented at the Orpheum, and crowded houses every night in the week are the result. Staley and Birbeck head the bill in a musical transformation act which is truly remarkable. Of scarcely less merit is the Royal Italian Quartet, which sings high-class opera. Slivers, the clown, presents a highly comical pantomime act. Emerin Campbell has an amusing one-act comedy, entitled Two Hundred Miles from Broadway. Connelly and Webb and the Four Orans present good acts. The Devil at the Colonial has just closed a very successful week, both financially and socially. The present week The Flower of the Ranch is being played to good houses. The play is a medley of drama and musical comedy. The musical part constitutes the chief merit of the show. An interesting incident of the stay of The Flower of the Ranch company in Salt Lake has been brought about as a sequel to the great Italian earthquake. A local newspaper has contributed copies of their daily issue, which members of the company sell upon the streets. Several automobiles have been tendered to aid them in their work. The proceeds of the sales go as a relief fund for the destroyed city of Messina. The Grand vaudeville and drama combination is proving a success. By the introduction of vaudeville features, tiresome between-act waits are done away with. The present drama is entitled A Man Who Dares. The vaudeville features are unusually good. The New Lyceum is producing some first-class melodramas, and will doubtless do well in that line of play. The Farmer's Daughter, playing this week, is a wholesome play, scoring strongly of Way Down East or of The Old Homestead. It is, however, a good play, ably produced and truly portraying rural life.

Brewster's Millions

Robert Ober will spend a cool million at the Van Ness Theatre next Sunday night, as "Monty" Brewster. Peggy Gray, the ingenue, and Nopper Harrison, the chief male character next to Brewster himself, are to be interpreted by June Mathis and Norman MacDonald, respectively. The story of Brewster's Millions tells how Montgomery Brewster, inheriting feat him, but his wit and dexterity $1,000,000 from his grandfather, is informed by a solicitor that his mother's brother, who has just died, has left him a fortune of $7,000,000 on condition that he shall spend the first million within a year, the reason for the stipulation being that the young man's mother had been left in want by the grandfather, and the uncle did not wish her son to enjoy an inheritance derived from that source.

The conditions are that he shall not give the $1,000,000 away—that would be too simple. He must spend it in some legitimate way, by investing it in some business, or using it for his enjoyment and that of his friends. Above all he must not disclose his purpose. He accepts the conditions, and his efforts to make himself penniless in a short time make up the fun that follows. Up to the last minute some complication or other threatens to deextricate him from every emergency. In the company are Carl Gerard, Franklin George, Norman MacDonald, Roger L. McAndrew, Daniel Fager, Nat Royster, George Marcourt, John Alden, Gene Foxcroft, Charles H. Crosby, Gus Christie, Frank Hughes, June Mathis, Charlotte Lambert, Katharine Raye, Marie Horton, Viola Grant, Elizabeth H. Van Sell and Robert Cher. The engagement is for eight nights with a matinee Saturday.

Van Ness

Ben Hur is playing to large business and the second week of the engagement will be in every way satisfactory. Ben Hur will be seen in this city for the last time next Saturday night. On Sunday night Brewster's Millions will be presented with Robert Ober, who was here last season, in the leading role. The engagement is limited to eight nights and one matinee. E. H. Sothorn follows.

Princess

Kolb and Dill have scored in their new musical farce, The Politicians. The theatre has been crowded with pleased audiences all week. In the characters of A. Gafter and I. M. Wurz, Kolb and Dill are very funny. They are admirably supported by a cast which includes Adele Rafter, a handsome woman and a graceful and accomplished actress, who is seen as Marion Gay, a candidate for divorce. George A. Wright as Ike Stringer, the Pooh Bah of Richville, demonstrates that he is a good character actor. Percy V. Bronson as Byrne Coyne, the Democrat, is particularly clever. The other characters are in the hands of Sydney de Grey, Carlton Chase, Richard Stanton, Albert E. Duncan, Harris McGuire, Myrtle Boyd and Netta Vesta, who do individually pleasing work.

Alcazar

The Girl of the Golden West is concluding its second and last week and continues to attract large audiences. It will be withdrawn next Sunday evening for Sweet Kitty Bellairs. Bertram Lytell, Evelyn Vaughan, Will Walling and Bert Wesner do notably good work in this wonderful western play.

Valencia

The College Widow will be seen for the last time next Sunday night. Blanche Stoddard, Robert Warwick, Thomas McLarnie, George Baldwin, Robert Homans, Gerald Harcourt, Helen Lackaye, and Robert Leonard have each achieved a marked success in their various roles.

American

Arizona, which will always be regarded as one of the great American plays, is once more a visitor to San Francisco. There is still an immense charm to this masterful story of love and native chivalry of the Arizona desert—the desert that since the author wrote the play has been transformed in large measure, through the agency of water, into one of the garden spots of the world. A well-balanced company interprets the play. Ernest Allen, splendidly fitted by physique and temperament for the part of Canby, is very pleasing in the part. Edward Farrell, an easy actor of handsome appearance and pleasing personality, makes Lieutenant Denton a natural and likable character. Lizzie McCall is thoroughly good, too, in the part of Mrs. Canby. Alma Bradley, a vivacious and winsome little woman, plays Bonita very well, and Julia Morris, to our mind, is about the best Lena the play has ever had. Robert Deshon gives the regulation characteristics to the character of Tony, and Charles E. Graham, who plays Sergeant Keller, gives a magnificent portrayal of the part. The balance of the cast are more or less capable. The spectacular cavalry features of former productions are missing, but on the whole the show is eminently entertaining.

New Offices for the Great Western Theatrical Circuit

The Great Western Theatrical Circuit moved on the first of the new year to their new offices in the Van Ness Theatre Building. During the past year the "Circuit" booked a large number of the leading Eastern theatrical attractions and all the better class of attractions organized in San Francisco. At present "The Circuit" is under contract booking several companies that are being organized in the East for California tours. Among the last few contracted with are Weber & Field's Musical Comedy success, Fiddle Dee Dee, that is being put on the road by I. P. Wilkerson, who has lately arrived from the East and is bringing several members of his new company with him. A farce-comedy, Papa's Boy, with a well selected cast of comedians will be on their way shortly. Mr. Cunningham, who has been connected with several Eastern attractions, is also arranging time for his company of comedians to present several high-class comedies in California. It is only a question of a very short time when San Francisco will be a recognized "producing center." And why shouldn't it be? "The Circuit" is also laying out routes for Richard Jose, to commence about March 1st; Black Patti with her colored troubadours; "Hi" Henry's Minstrels; The Gingerbread Man; Babes in Toyland, and several other high-class attractions. When in San Francisco managers are invited to call at the office, and if they are in trouble, why "The Circuit" can get them out of it and send them on their ways rejoicing. "If you don't believe it," says Jack McCullough, who has charge of the booking, "ask Darlington, Parvin, Pennypacker, Charles Allen and a few more old college chums."

A special committee of directors of the Metropolitan Opera House of New York has asked Charles B. Dillingham, the theatrical manager and producer, to survey, from a business standpoint, the financial affairs and business methods in vogue at the famous home of music. Dillingham has accepted the commission.

J. P. BOGARDUS, Vaudeville Editor

Orpheum

The Orpheum habit is an institution of San Francisco. It has been nursed a good many years, with remarkable judgment, and consequently there is seldom opportunity for disappointment. This week's bill is surely one of the most gratifying of many moons. The first turn is that of the Salvaggis, whirlwind dancers. They present a good example of their style of performance. Following come Gus Hibbert and Fred Warren, colored dancers and comedians, who by way of good measure threw in a rattling good performance on the piano. Gus Edwards' Schoolboys and Girls, a pretentious musical number, presented by five girls and four boys, is entertaining, but does not equal some others of Mr. Edwards' big acts, nor some presented by Jessie Laskey. Several of the voices are most pleasing, and the dancing excellent. That charming comedienne, Eva Taylor, reappears for one week with her company in Chums. As on the occasion of her first visit, Miss Taylor made a pronounced hit, and the audience voted the presentation of the playlet one of the best things seen in vaudeville this season. Splendid support is rendered by Louis Albion, Eleanor Phipps and Lawrence Grattan. The Rooney Sisters, petite and attractive girls, present the dancing feature of the programme. They plan a great variety of dance steps and execute them most gracefully. Wilfred Clarke, who once upon a time was a stock star in San Francisco at the old Grand Opera House, and who since that time has become a fixture in vaudeville, presents himself and a capable company in his own absurdity, entitled What Will Happen Next. Mr. Clarke is a rarely good comedian, and his and supports' efforts caused much laughter. The abilities of the actors made the play. Edwin Latel is one of a few surviving examples of old-time minstrel men. He does a monologue which he helps out with a little banjo playing and other musical oddities. His humor is enjoyable and his act was keenly appreciated by his audience. Mr. Latel was followed by De Biere, an illusionist and sleight-of-hand man, who displays more "class" and genuine ability than any performer of his kind that we have had here in years. In every particular his tricks are sensationally mysterious and his personality is decidedly attractive. Moving pictures wound up a really wonderful bill.

Wigwam

Manager Harris had four comedies in the bill this week. Douglas Flint's excellently acted and sterling playlet; the country comedy of A Rural Substitute by Joseph R. Kelter and company; the Austins in a laughing act; and Bert Weston and company in The Medicine Man. Luken's seven bears were funny at times, and Joe Hardman's lively stories added to the laughter. An extraordinary comedy bill. The Pelots, jugglers, and the La Selle Trio, acrobats, rounded out the show. Next week has Dan Sheridan;

Mabel De Forest and company, in A Jay Circus, a roar of laughter act; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Young and company in Early Days East and West, a character sketch; John Fields, Jr.; the Adler Trio, club jugglers; Mizuno Trio, in special entertainment; Eugene O'Rourke and company in Parlor A; Farren, Wills and Ramsley, singers and dancers; Emile Suber, monologist.

National

There were four comedy turns in the National bill this week: Dolph and Susie Levino in Hypnotizing a Wife, original in plot and matter and finely acted, a gem; Joseph and Myra Dowling in A Snap Shot, a story of mistaken identity; the Sweigerts in protean playlets; and the baggage smashing Mallon and Bart in good, uproarious fun. The Royal Musical Five, young and cultured artists, provided a featured musical entertainment. The other turns were Smith and Brown, singers and dancers; Amelia Bazette, the vocalist; Avil and Grimm, daring high trapeze bar casting act; and S. Kikuda, a superior Japanese juggler. Next week's bill presents Mr. and Mrs. Esmond in the Soldier of Propville, an act of high repute; the Zello Group, laughing comedy act; Alice De Garmo, gymnastic Ariel; Herbert Cyril, the London Johnnie; Blockson and Burns, eccentrics extraordinary; and two other turns.

Pantages-Empire

A very full and varied program ruled as usual at this theatre this week, including the Johnson Students, club tossers; World's Comedy Four, mirth and music; Conn, Downey and Willard, presenting a good character sketch, Dr. Louder; The Bernsteins, singing and dancing duo; Cakewalk Octette, introducing competitive cakewalk; Albani and Collina, Italian operatic vocalists; and the motion pictures of the earthquake district of Italy, the first to be presented. Next week comes a grand combination of twelve people in A Night with the Poets; Walhour Troupe, comedy and trick cyclists; Henry and Young, comedy sketch, Nevada; John Rucker, the Alabama blossom; Boulden and Quinn, entertainers.

Washington Square

Up on Powell and Montgomery avenue, Manager Abrams has Eddie O'Brien and Lottie Darragh, the musical comedy artists; La Vail Sisters; Amelia Mazette; Jimmy Mack; Heliene Neilsen; and Bonnie Cruz.

Thalia Concert Hall

The Thalia illuminates the white light district of Pacific street and is the favorite resort therein. The bill this week includes the Dale Sisters, singers and dancers; the Tahora Arabs in a wild acrobatic turn; Rose Stevens, the vocalist; Tait and company; the Great Sawtell and others.

Max Steinle and Mattie Hyde conclude two weeks of a most successful engagement in Reno tomorrow night.

The stage hands of the National gave Sid Grauman a valuable ornamental gold headed cane for New Year's, and the Graumans, father and son, presented Archie Levy with a costly carved Japanese ebony center table. It is so hefty that when Archie wants to move it he calls in his neighbors to help him.

Vaudeville Notes

The clever vaudeville team, Eddie Barnes and Kitty Edwins, are one of the features of the North Brothers' stock company, now playing the Lyric Theatre, St. Joe, Mo.

Undue haste to purchase a ticket to Chicago and the nervousness displayed by E. J. Burk, who gave St. Louis as his home, led to his arrest in Fort Worth, Tex., on January 3, and to the discovery that the safe aboard the train conveying a Wild West circus (known as the 101 Ranch) to Fort Worth had been blown during the night and robbed of $15,000. When asked to explain the possession of $750 in silver coin which he carried in a leather satchel, the man, formerly an attache of the circus, told of the robbery, declaring that he had been made the tool of a professional safe-blower, who had escaped with the rest of the money. The robbery occurred as the train was nearing Fort Worth.

It is reported that the Victory will open in vaudeville.

The People's, out in the Mission district, has gone back to 10 cent vaudeville again.

The Pantages-Western States Vaudeville Association will play their people at the Jose Theatre in San Jose hereafter, and use the Empire for another line of business.

Sid Grauman says he will make his big double show benefit for the Italian earthquake sufferers at the big Dreamland a $5,000 one if he has to fight Sam Harris, manager of the Wigwam, a twenty rounder for the managerial championship of San Francisco in the sporting addition of the show.

The death of Barney Reynolds, the Dutch comedian of fifty years ago, occurred in Cleveland, Ohio, on January 5, from heart disease, at the age of 72 years. Many an old theatregoer will remember him; a little fellow and an excellent performer with a fund of dry humor that seemed exhaustless. Reynolds was one of the first of Dutch comedians, and visited San Francisco many times during his stage career in minstrel, variety and farce comedy companies, and was always the gentleman on and off the stage.

The stock of the Empire Theatre Company was distributed into a number of hands before Alex Pantages purchased into it, and it became the Pantages-Empire Theatre. The theatre has been more overburdened with riders since, and to relieve the pressure of too many associate managers, Mr. Wise and Marcus Bloom, two of the original stockholders, disposed of their interests to their associates last week.

The return of Joseph and Myra Dowling to the National in the vaudeville rotations around the continent recalls a tragic episode in San Francisco in 1873. James M. Dowling, father of Joseph Dowling, was one of the early stage managers on the Coast. He officiated in that capacity at Maguire's Opera House on Washington street, the first theatre built in San Francisco, for several seasons, and was also manager of the Metropolitan Theatre on Montgomery street, between Washington and Jackson streets. This was the heart of the city at that time. One night after the performance, Dowling with some actors dropped into the Pup saloon to lunch. While there Johnny Truers, an eccentric comedian, and George C. Thompson, who obtained fame for his "Old Joe" song, had an altercation in which Truers fired a shot at him. The bullet lodged in Dowling's groin and caused his death. James M. Dowling was a dramatically classic man. It was the era of Shakespeare's plays and he had staged hundreds of them and was schooled in them. When asked about his wound he quoted Horatio's words, "It is not as deep as a well, nor as broad as a church door, but it will do." Shakespeare has vanished from the stage, alas, and there is no time in this age of greed and sensualism to read the works of the great master. How many of our young readers can tell from what play the above extract was quoted?

Esther Rujaero and Evelyn Selbie open in their new sketch, Devotion, at the Novelty in Vallejo, with the S. & C. city time to follow.

D. J. Grauman has been appointed sole representative for the White Rats of America for the territory commencing at Omaha, extending north, including Canada, south to Texas, and taking in all the states on the plains and on the Pacific Coast. He will look after the members' professional welfare and is empowered to also negotiate and further the society's business interests in any way he can in this wide-spread district. The latitude is wide and new booking routes or even White Rats theatres may materialize out of the move.

Manager Harris has made the greatest scoop in vaudeville here in engaging ex-Champion Jim Jeffries for a week at the Wigwam. It will probably be the means of his entering the ring again to try results with Jack Johnson.

Dolph and Susie Levino, who are at the National, carrying all before them this week in their original, clever and laughable act of Hypnotizing a Wife, are no strangers in San Francisco. They established themselves as favorites here several years ago for their good acting and as managers and producers. They have a record worth recalling. When Dolph Levino was a boy he started out in life as an artist, with rare natural gifts, as may now be seen in his stage superior crayon drawing sketches, but the allurements of the theatre were stronger than those of art. He built a Levino Hall in Cardiff, Wales, for vaudeville purposes, and afterwards turned it over to Oswald Stoll as one of the houses of his now great circuit of theatres. Dolph and Susie Levino then toured America. Returned and toured Great Britain, took an extended trip over the Harry Rickard's Australian circuit. Back to England again, and to America, also. Levino is a fine comedian and Mrs. Levino is a superior singer and a spirited and vivacious actress, who fully shares the success of their bright comedy.

Juliet Chandler is in town from Eureka on a two weeks' visit.

Odell and Whiting and Nagle and Adams have just concluded an engagement in Eureka at the Empire Theatre.

Colorado Street, and the building will be remodeled by its owners, while the show place will be under the management of G. D. Porter. Mr. Porter, it will be recalled, was the manager of the Pasadena Grand Opera House at one time. The house will be so rebuilt that it will seat 400 people with comfort, and the floor will be slanted so that all can see. A stage 20 by 25 feet will be constructed and the scenery for the stage is already being painted in Los Angeles. Straight vaudeville with two illustrated songs and one moving picture will be given twice each evening and on Wednesday and Saturday matinees. In keeping with the popular name of Pasadena, the house will be known as the Crown Vaudeville Theatre, and it is expected that it will be in shape for the opening in about three weeks. It will be closed on Sundays.

Form Moving Picture Trust

A $15,000,000 merger, according to an announcement made Wednesday night in New York, will end a moving picture war that has been in progress for many months. The merger will result, it is stated, in crowding out of business nearly 50 per cent of the moving picture places.

New Theatre of San Jose Now Plays Vaudeville

The following will explain an important change in the amusement situation in that city:

You are cordially invited to attend the reopening of the Theatre Jose, Sunday evening, January 10, 1909. Come and see the coziest, prettiest vaudeville house on the Pacific Coast. The Theatre Jose is dedicated to high-class 1909 vaudeville attractions. Sincerely yours,

The Wigwam Signs Jeffries

Jim Jeffries, who made a hit and a small fortune on the stage after defeating Sharkey and Fitzsimmons, first in minor parts and then as leading man, says he likes the footlight boxing game better than the "dead-earnest" ring and is not averse to going back to it. Speaking of the proposition made to him in San Francisco for a week's engagement, he said the other night: "Say, I'll have to go after that, sure. They offered me

Value of Norris & Rowe's Circus

The appraisers appointed to appraise the Norris & Rowe Circus property have reported to Referee in Bankruptcy Ed Martin at Santa Cruz. They have appraised the property at $37,254. The liabilities are about $57,000. The property, including animals, tents, wagons, etc., will now likely be sold for what they will bring, which will probably be much less than the appraised value.

Actors Arrested for Performing on Sunday

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—The police today arrested several performers at the so-called Sunday concerts. At Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre four men were taken into custody following their presentation of a schoolroom sketch in which the actors were said to have been made up as teachers and pupils. The acting manager of the theatre, Aaron Kessler, was also arrested. The Theatre Managers' Protective Association made public to-day resolutions protesting against the enforcement of "blue laws."

KARL MCVITTY writes from Portland, Ore., that his Jane Eyre Company will play three weeks in that city at the Star Theatre, presumably changing bills weekly and then repeat that programme in Seattle.

DESPITE the efforts made to suppress all information, it was learned in Sioux Falls last week that Circuit Judge McCoy has granted an absolute divorce to Mary Aloie Goodwin Gilmore from Paul Gilmore. Desertion is given as the reason. The married life of the Gilmores has long been an unhappy one.

HARRY ALEXANDER has joined the business staff of the Lambardi Opera Company.

The Myrtle Vane company on December 14 produced in San Diego The Red Mountain Hut, and scored a decided hit.

Gossip in society and financial circles of New York has it that William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and his wife, who was Virginia Fair of San Francisco, have become estranged. Some who claim to know assert that the cause of it all was the preference the millionaire showed for the society of Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the grand opera singer. Others assert that the couple are at outs over financial matters. Inquiries at the Vanderbilt mansion and the home of Mrs. Herman Oelrichs, sister of Mrs. Vanderbilt, met with stony silence.

Valencia

After a run of two weeks The College Widow will be played for the last times at the Valencia Theatre Sunday afternoon and evening, and on Monday night Prince Hagen, a fantastic drama in four acts and six scenes, by Upton Sinclair, will be presented for the first time on any stage. The story, in brief is as follows: Gerald Manning, an impoverished poet with a passion for music, particularly the Wagnerian operas, strains from which he plays on his violin, is camping in the heart of the Canadian woods, when his solitude is broken into by the visit of a pleasure party traveling in all the style of rich New Yorkers. After the departure of the merry tourists, one of whom, the petted daughter of a money king, has awakened a sudden and violent feeling of love in Manning's breast, the poet turns to his violin to seek solace for what he knows is his hopeless passion. As he plays snatches from

Siegfried, answering melodies come from invisible musical instruments throughout the forest, and as he listens in amazement the music increases in volume; shadowy forms appear from behind trees and rocks and materialize slowly into dwarfs whom Manning quickly recognizes as "nibelungen," until now generally supposed to be unreal, imaginative elves of Richard Wagner's own creation. The nibelungen speedily convince him that they are very much alive, however, and conduct him to a great cavern in the rocks, out of which issue great clouds of steam. Their descent into the bowels of the earth to Nibelheim, the up-to-now mythical kingdom whose subjects have for centuries controlled countless millions in gold, is shown by an ingenious piece of stage craft. The change from the woodland camp to the glittering throne-room of the Nibelungen palace is made in the dark in less than sixty seconds. Prince Hagen, "the son of violence and crime," as the king of the Nibelungen puts it, is now introduced into the action. His return to earth with Manning, the poet, and his success as the controller of the world's gold supply are told in the most unlooked-for way. The ensuing scenes are laid in a Bowery saloon, a Fifth Avenue mansion and a Newport country seat, with Prince Hagen always dominating every situation. That he cannot win the magnate's daughter and thus crown his other triumphs, but must allow himself to be defeated by a sleeping powder and be carried back to Nibelheim is in no way contradictory to the general story. With Prince Hagen removed from earth and Manning free to marry the girl he loves, the ending is entirely satisfactory to all concerned. There are twenty speaking parts in the play. Robert Warwick will be cast in the title role. Thomas MacLarnie will be the poet, a part that should fit him to a nicety, and Blanche Stoddard will have a splendid opportunity of doing some excellent acting and wearing some magnificent gowns as Estelle Isman, the heiress. Pretty Beatrice Nichols will reappear as Joe, a Canadian boy, and Lillian Andrews will also be seen again after a two weeks' vacation as Mrs. Isman.

Alcazar

Sweet Kitty Bellairs, which is to be given its first presentation west of Chicago next week, was written by David Belasco, who found his inspiration in Egerton Castle's charming tale, The Bath Comely. In the cast are thirty-five speaking people and a small army of silent supernumeraries, and each of the four acts unfolds a set of gorgeous stage pictures. Three of the scenes are laid in Bath, the British spa made famous by Beau Brummell and Beau Nash and other foppish celebrities of the Gainsborough period, during the French republican wars, and the men are hardly less frilled and furbelowed than the women. Dashing soldiers and men of fashion, patched and powdered matrons and maids, compose the dramatic personæ. In the title part Evelyn Vaughan will have one of the most congenial roles she has ever played. The character rapidly alternates between serious and lightsome moods, and at all times is intensely engaging. In both these phases of interpretation Miss Vaughan has shown a high order of talent since she came to the Alcazar, so it will be akin to a double treat to witness her as the winsome and capricious Kitty. It is urgently requested that the audience be seated before 8:10 o'clock p. m., as the prologue is not only a captivating feature of the performance, but serves to convey much enlightenment as to the scenes which are to follow.

Orpheum

The Orpheum has certainly started the New Year auspiciously, for the present program is of extraordinary merit. For next week the bill is particularly attractive. The Three Yoscarys, eccentric comedy acrobats, will be the headliner. Attired in modern costumes and encumbered even with heavy overcoats, they perform marvelous athletic feats. Mr. and Mrs. Gene Hughes, comedians of refinement and great ability, will present a dainty comedy by Fred J. Beaman, entitled Suppressing the Press. Rogers and Deely, who played a too short engagement of one week only recently, will return with their clever and diverting skit, The Singer and His Valet. Next week will be the last of De Biere, the marvelous illusionist; those charming Terpsichorean artists, the Rooney Sisters; the famous Parisian dancers, Les Salvaggis; Hibbert and Warren, and also of that splendid light comedian, Wilfred Clarke, and his clever company in the delightful comedy, What Will Happen Next?

Maud Adams and Eddie Foy Are Strong Broadway Amusement Hits

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—That the drawing power of Massenet's Thais is undiminished was proved last Monday night by the large audience present in the Manhattan Opera House. Mary Garden sang the title role, and Maurice Renaud gave again his fine interpretation of the monk, Athanael. Mr. Campanini conducted. At the Metropolitan the double bill of Cavalleria Rusticana and Le Villi was repeated. In Mascagni's opera the cast included Emmy Destinn as Santuzza, Maria Gay as Lola, Enrico Caruso as Turiddu, and Pasquale Amato as Alfio. Both Miss Destinn and Mr. Caruso were in excellent voice. The cast of Le Villi was the same as at the previous performances, with Frances Aldo, Alessandro Bonci and Pasquale Amato. Mr. Toscanini conducted at both operas at the Metropolitan. * * * The grand opera war broke out in Baltimore last week, when the sale of seats began for both the Manhattan and the Metropolitan opera companies. Although the Metropolitan company does not open until several days after the Manhattan company has gone, its seats were placed on sale along with those of the other company. This action has aroused the ire of the Manhattan management, who declare that the other people should have waited a while. Will J. Guard, who represents Mr. Hammerstein, said: "We are astonished at the Metropolitan company opening its sale when its season does not begin until ten days after our second performance, and it is regarded as unprofessional and very strange that this company should adopt such tactics. Mr. Hammerstein is not seeking an operatic war and is coming to Baltimore as the result of a year's solicitation on the part of the Lyric management. There is no axe to grind and if the public responds as it did in Philadelphia Mr. Hammerstein can probably be persuaded to visit here regularly during the season." It is noticeable, too, that the Metropolitan has made some changes in its casts so as to bring the most popular stars in its earliest production. It wouldn't surprise me if, out of two first-class companies fighting for business here in the East, San Francisco might get a taste of opera before the song birds go home. * * * Like all the other Belasco productions that have been warmly welcomed when in the course of their journeys they have come to the Academy of Music, The Warrens of Virginia, which arrived there last week for an engagement of two weeks, was no exception to the rule. The breadth and depth of the Academy stage give room for two splendid pictures in the wildwood of the first act and the rose garden of the closing scene, and the beauty of these settings was applauded, as well as the fine achievements of the actors. Frank Keenan, as General Buck Warren, retains all the distinction which made his presentation of that character so notable at the Stuyvesant Theatre last winter, and the charm of Charlotte Walker in the part of the General's daughter is undiminished. The cast in all important respects remains unchanged. * * * It was hardly to be expected that Maude Adams could efface the memories of

J. M. Barrie's Peter Pan in a single night, even in a new play from that same gifted author's pen. Yet in spite of that exquisite idyl and its beautiful blend of humor and fantasy, of pathos and the tender emotions which spring from the depths of human nature, she easily made her way last week to pinnacles of comedy equally high and not less lovely in Mr. Barrie's wonderfully acute and subtle study of Scotch character, What Every Woman Knows. The event at the Empire Theatre was what might have been anticipated for Miss Adams's return to New York in a play, the praises of which have been on the tongue of every recent visitor in London, where it has been running four months. The initial audience was as large and as fine as any Broadway playhouse could assemble. The applause was almost unending, and it was as sincere as it was long. It became impossible to keep record of the number of times the curtain rose and fell. It seemed that the crowd could not have enough of Mr. Frohman's most gifted star and of her new leading actor, Richard Bennett, who made a long stride forward in his profession and established a new mark in his career. * * * A crowded house welcomed Eddie Foy at the Casino Theatre last week, when for three hours it laughed over and applauded the latest musical success of the season, Mr. Hamlet of Broadway. The book is by Edgar Smith, the lyrics by Edward Madden and the music by Ben M. Jerome. It contains many novel features and should remain on Broadway for an extended run. Theatregoers will recognize in it the type of musical mixture of farce, extravaganza and simple comedy, famous on the Casino stage in the past. From the rise of the curtain there is constant action, the flimsy plot of the piece being swept along by a sort of musical hysteria. The songs are uniformly good. Eddie Foy, a comedian by nature, won new laurels both as Joey Wheeze, the clown, and as Hamlet, the melancholy Dane. His song, Everything Depends on Money, in the first act, made a hit. As Hamlet he succeeded in making the sublime ridiculous. A particularly winning feature of the performance is the song and dance of Mr. Foy and a children's chorus, entitled When I Was a Kid Like You, and the efforts of the children to dance like the grown-up chorus was extremely amusing. Maude Raymond, both as Molly Brown, the Adirondack belle, and as Ophelia of Broadway, deserves great credit for her performance. James F. Cook as Amelie, the trained bear, merits honorable mention. * * * Liebler & Co. have definitely arranged for a play in which to present Viola Allen this season. The new play is to be called The White Sisters, and has been written by F. Marion Crawford. It is an original play in four acts, and while it follows to some extent the same plot as the author's novel, now running serially in a magazine, the play was written first and the novel prepared some months later. Miss Allen will be seen in the new play about January 25 in this city. The company has already been engaged and rehearsals will begin next week. * * * Olga Nethersole is preparing to branch out as a theatrical producer in addition to managing her own tour in The Writing on the Wall. One of her first ventures as a manager will be the tour of Mary Mannering, who will star next season in a new play. Miss Nethersole has in reserve, it is said, a new play by Asa M. Steele, which is as yet unnamed. Miss Nethersole has also sold the Western territory rights to The Writing on the Wall to her brother, Louis Nethersole, who will send out a second company as soon as he arrives from Australia, about February 1. * * * The Shuberts have announced that after the conclusion of his present season in The Pied Piper, De Wolf Hopper will abandon the field of comic opera and musical comedy to devote all his efforts to legitimate comedy. The Pied Piper has one more week to run in New York, and Mr. Hopper will continue to star in this piece until next summer. Mr. Hopper returns to the field in which he already has made a success, for he began his career as the star and manager of a "legitimate" comedy company and won his first laurels in a "legitimate" comedy role. He has at different times played Falstaff in The Merry Wives of Windsor and David in an all-star production of The Rivals. ROB ROY.

The music incidental to the four acts of Prince Hagan, Upton Sinclair's new play to be produced at the Valencia, will be one of the striking features of the production, and is from the fluent pen of Herman Heller, the talented leader of the Valencia orchestra. A fire that broke out at 12:15 o'clock Wednesday morning in the Baldwin Theatre and office building in Springfield, Mo., completely destroyed that structure and a number of other buildings in the business district and badly damaged the Colonial Hotel. The total loss is estimated at $250,000. The fire was caused by the explosion of gas in the basement of the theatre.

Among the English king's many prerogatives, dating from ancient times, is the control which he exercises through the lord chamberlain of his household over all the theatres and music halls of the United Kingdom. Availing himself thereof he has just caused it to be known that no public entertainment is to be given in a theatre or music hall on Sundays, or Christmas day, or on Good Friday, "unless under very exceptional circumstances," and then only if the programme of that particular performance has been previously submitted to the lord chamberlain's department and received its imprimatur.

Testimonial for Sembrich

A committee has been organized in New York to raise funds for a testimonial to be presented to Mme. Sembrich, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, at her farewell appearance in February. In a letter inviting subscriptions, which was sent out, the committee says: "Mme. Marcella Sembrich celebrates this year the twenty-fifth anniversary of her first appearance in America, and also announces her retirement from the operatic stage. As an artist, Mme. Sembrich occupies an unusual position. By her gifts of voice and rare intelligence, her devotion to her art and fidelity to the highest ideals, she has rendered invaluable service to music. As a woman she is so sincere and lovely in character, she is beloved by all. This, therefore, seems a proper occasion to present to Mme. Sembrich a gift that shall be a tribute not only of admiration, but of love." August Belmont is treasurer of the committee. One member is Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, who heard in 1825 the first performance of The Barber of Seville in New York. The committee consist of the directors of the Metropolitan Opera House, leading musical critics, prominent women patrons of music, Emma Eames, David Bisham, Frank and Walter Damrosch, Mark Twain, William Dean Howells and others. •

The Portland Orpheum Is Still Holding Its Splendid Patronage

Portland, Jan. 4.—On New Year's eve the Portland Local, T. M. A., No. 36, took a benefit in this city, and the event was successfully carried out in every respect. The Orpheum and Baker Theatres were the theatres donated to the "boys," and the entertainments, which were on the vaudeville line, commenced at 11 P. M. and ran into the new year. Professional talent from all the theatres lent their aid, and as a result the lodge cleared up over eleven thousand dollars. Heilig Theatre (Cal. Heilig, mgr.; William Pangle, resident mgr.): John Cort's Alaskan returned to this theatre and opened last night to a good house. The piece has been improved wonderfully, and the company is also better in many respects. Edward Martindel is found playing Totem Pole Pete again, and last night scored big in the role. He is a capable actor in every way. Forest Huff sings the tenor role, and is an improvement over his predecessor. The scenery is excellent, and the costumes also come in for words of praise. Next week, Florence Roberts. Ben Hur is an early booking. Bungalow Theatre (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.): Izetta Jewel made her first hit with Portland theatregoers last season when she appeared in Zaza at the Baker Theatre, in the stock company. Last night she duplicated the feat and again impressed upon us that Zaza is about the best thing this talented lady does. Her work is of a high order, and she gives a fine interpretation of the part. Sydney Ayers is Bernard Dufresne, and got all that is possible out of the role. Donald Bowles again was found playing Cascart and is capital in the part. Mrs. Mina Gleason was Aunt Rosa, and William Gleason was DeBrissac; both were equal to all demands. The staging of the play is a work of art. Next week, Masters of Men. Baker Theatre (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.): The Devil's Auction is the bill for this week. It opened yesterday to big houses, in fact S. R. O. was in evidence last night. The company is not better nor any worse than the usual Devil's Auction companies coming this way for the past ten years. The Sisters Plunkett are the best of the ladies, in fact of the company. The scenery is kept up well. Next week, Babes in Toyland. Orpheum Theatre (C. N. Sutton, mgr.): Last week's bill was a good one, headed, as it was, by George Primrose and his company of dancers. Primrose is a great favorite in this city, and was welcomed at every performance. Commencing tonight, Julie Herne and company are headliners; Jewell's Manikins; Murray Sisters; Josselin Trio; White and Simmons; Cook Brothers, and Mr. and Mrs. Alison. Star Theatre (J. E. Ericson, mgr.): This bill at this house for this week is Jane Eyre. This old-timer has not been done in this city for many years, and it was welcomed yesterday by good houses. The company is good. Dorothy Turner plays the name part in good style and displayed good talent. Edwin Scribner and E. R. Bonner were the best of the men. Next week, Thorns and Orange Blossoms. Lyric Theatre (Keating & Flood, mgrs.): A Southern drama is offered this week at this house by the stock company—Tempest and Sunshine. Orral Humphrey gave a good performance yesterday of the leading role. Charles Connors kept the audience well in hand in the comedy part. Corrine Walton also did excellent work, as did Ralph Belmont. Next week, A Gambler's Devotion. Grand Theatre (J. E. Ericson, mgr.): Creole is the headliner; Joe Deming & Co.; Stephen Gratten Co.; Gus Bruno; Sabine and Vero, and Fred Bauer. Pantages Theatre (John Johnson, mgr.): Florenz Family are headliners; Kohler Trio; Abrahams and Johns; Burton and Brooks; Brandon and Wilson, and Jean Wilson. A. W. W.

Personals

The Herbert Cramer stock of Marshfield and other Coos Bay points reports a satisfactory business. The company is composed of Howard Nugent, Edesse Fowler, Florence Bell, Lawrence Floyd, Minnie Janicki, Herbert Cramer, Frances Field and George Morgan.

IN THE role of Jules Beaubien, the hero of Eugene Walter's play, The Wolf, Andrew Robson has by far the best fitting role of his career. The production of this play by the same man who wrote Paid in Full is said to be one of the most successful attractions of the year. Its engagement here is limited to one week.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN has announced that he has signed a contract with another new tenor, John McCormack, who is said to be probably the first Irishman ever engaged as a leading grand opera tenor by an American impresario. McCormack, who has created a sensation in England, is tall, handsome and 24 years old. Some critics say he has the most beautiful tenor voice of any singer before the public. He will make his first appearance in America at Hammerstein's Manhattan and Philadelphia opera houses early next season. McCormack was born of humble parentage. People of means, who were attracted by the beauty of his voice, sent him to Milan to study. He made his first important appearance at London ballad concerts, and had immediate success. His path to Covent Garden was then easy, and he made his debut there in October, 1907.

ROSE EYTINGE has left Portland, Ore., at the age of 70, to spend her remaining years in the Actors' Home for Aged Actors on Staten Island, N. Y. Miss Eytinge's health is badly impaired, and she decided to pass the rest of her life in retirement. Rose Eytinge's stage career covered fifty-five years and was one of the most remarkable in American histrionics. After years in Boston and New York she appeared with Booth, and immediately became a favorite. Her greatest triumphs were in New York and London. As the wife of George H. Butler Consul-General in Egypt, she was presented at most of the European courts. She was a friend of the Prince of Wales, Charles Dickens, Gladstone and many other noted men. She was presented at Napoleon's court and has declared that Eugenie was the original peroxide blonde.

Heard, But Not Seen, Are The Actors Behind Talking Picture Screen

"Ha-ha-ha-ha!" The mocking laughter of his Satanic Majesty echoes through the moving picture theatres in many towns just now, where the Actologue Company is playing The Devil. The Actologue Company is a small but energetic body that attends to the vocal part of the plays which are being presented on the moving picture screen. Presentations of this sort form a new chapter in the history of the popular shows at these small theatres an enable their patrons to see condensed versions of well-known plays at an astonishingly low price. An interesting place is the small space behind the scenes. Directly behind the sheet is a small platform, on which the actors stand to deliver their lines. They are able to see the action transpiring on the sheet quite as well as the audience in front. Ingomar, which usually requires a cast of at least ten, exclusive of supers, is also given by an petulant little moue when she sees how late it is. She certainly would be late for dinner! "Remember she is my mother," she cries from the top of a stepladder, where she is perched impatiently swinging her toes. And when Ingomar embraces her at those lovely lines: "Two souls with but a single thought; two hearts that beat as one," he accomplishes something of a feat, for the lady in question is at least three yards away. She does not seem in the least disturbed by his ardent embrace, but climbs nimbly down the ladder and makes for the door. As for Ingomar, he steps outside and ignites a cigarette. The "effect man" plays an important part in these productions. He sits at a little table at the side, provided with various sorts of noise-making apparatus, and especially in the farces is kept very busy. Whenever the unfortunate gentleman falls down, he must beat the table with a formidable mallet. He must ring doorbells, arrange for the clattering of horses' hoofs and the like. The actors help him out generously, especially in the farces, which they "rough house" so much that often that the many performances make my acting mechanical. I do just as well at the last performance as I do at the first." Miss Sprague told of a jay who wandered into the show one day. After watching the performance for some twenty minutes, he sought out the manager. "See here," he cried irately, "this here show is a bunco game. I watched them pictures careful, and I seen through the hull thing. No, siree, them pictures don't talk. You saw a safer playhouse. I built several and have managed the Lyceum in Minneapolis, capacity 2,600; the Family Theatre, New York City, 1,500; Coliseum at Seattle, 2,400, and know something about the requirements to insure comfort and absolute safety. The Pantages is in first-class shape. It does seem funny that after having been constructed under the direction of the fire chief and his assistant, and having been passed upon as safe by all preceding grand juries, that this particular body should single it out for adverse criticism. It is up to date in everything. To avoid being ever left in darkness by the electricity being accidentally cut off, the Pantages can be lighted with gas in an instant, by simply pressing a button. Thomas J. Townsend, assistant chief engineer of the fire department, said to me tonight in the presence of a number of gentlemen, that 'the Pantages is absolutely safe, the safest theatre in the town.' It seems to me that this grand jury report is absolutely unjust."

Actologue Company of three. It can readily be seen that the single actress must be extremely versatile to play the emotional, ingenue and character roles at one and the same time. Here at last is the golden opportunity for the greedy star who insists upon having a one-part play. Ingomar especially is a host in himself, since he also impersonates his numerous barbarians. It is indeed an awful moment when the barbarians rebelled against Ingomar. Perhaps I may be forgiven for trembling for that intrepid actor. But he rises sublime over such minor difficulties, puts them to flight, and even fights a duel with himself, by means of two apparently harmless curtain rods. The company stands on the platform in the conventional attire of every day, and takes turns at sitting down in the one chair the platform boasts. During a pause in the action Ingomar takes off his coat, remarking that it was getting too hot for him, and appears in his shirt sleeves. The bombastic lines form a sharp contrast with the matter-of-fact behavior of the players. "Better death than dishonor," wails Parthenia in horror, taking out her watch with a

they can hardly get their lines over, for laughing. The seat of this infant industry is Detroit, where the companies are rehearsed and then sent out on tour. There are nineteen of these companies out at the present time. They play one or two-week stands and give ten performances daily. The films are for the most part made abroad and the text fitted to them later. The actologue companies provide the text for most of the plays and have a considerable repertoire, including such standard successes as East Lynne, Monte Cristo, Way Down East and Michael Strogoff. New plays are constantly being provided, and the management expects to work into Shakespeare before long. A gigantic production of the Passion Play is now in preparation. Last summer these companies filled many of the largest theatres in Ohio. The actors are almost all carefully trained, with a stock or road experience behind them. "It is harder than ordinary acting," said Isora Sprague, prima donna extraordinary of one of these companies, "because you have to articulate so carefully and must play several parts, often necessitating a change in voice. But I do not find got folks behind there what do the talking." Discovered!

Fire Ordinances in Sacramento

The theatres of Sacramento are having trouble with the fire commissioners. It seems that all cities are at times inflicted with damn fool fire restrictions. Manager Ely of the Pantages has written a letter of protest regarding the attitude of the Sacramento authorities and his protest is eminently just. It is as follows: "The grand jury for some unexplained and apparently unexplainable reason has gone out of its way in its report to condemn the Pantages Theatre, complaining of inadequate exits and other imperfections in its construction. This seems strange in view of the fact that while it was being built the chief engineer of the fire department, Guthrie, was in constant attendance and pronounced it safe as to construction and well equipped with exits to cope with any emergency. The walls are reinforced with steel, and it is by far the best, safest, neatest, and most popular theatre in the city. I never

The Ten Commandments as Viewed by an Advance Agent

I. Hang around the office two weeks opening (without salary), as there are many errands to do.

II. Get out of town (without excess) with a thousand pounds of pick-ups left over from last season.

III. Force all local managers to play your show whether they care to or not.

IV. Have all trains, on which company moves, leave at nine-thirty a. m., and arrive in time for dinner.

V. Use your own money for expenses always.

VI. Always meet company at train and hand them their mail (manager first).

VII. If stage is small and there are no dressing-rooms, be sure and be on hand that night to beg your company's pardon.

VIII. If printing has not arrived, make some.

IX. Have all theatres and hotels close to the depot, so that the company will not have to ride.

X. Get half page in each newspaper gratis.

The Valencia Theatre management has just had installed a complete steam heating plant, and now the commodious playhouse, both in front of and behind the scenes, is at exactly the right temperature on the coldest of nights and afternoons.

Thurlow Bergen

Mr. Bergen appears with Florence Roberts in The House of Bondage, at the American Theatre, following the engagement of Fifty Miles from Boston.

London to Have a National Theatre

London is to have a national theatre as a memorial to Shakespeare, in which will be enacted the poet's works as well as plays by other English dramatists, living and dead. A number of large private subscriptions have already been promised and the Lord Mayor of London and the mayors in the provinces will be asked to open public subscriptions. A site will be selected in the heart of London, and the theatre will be controlled by a board of trustees chosen from men prominent in the literature, drama, music and education of the day.

Hammerstein Uses Harsh Words in Philadelphia

Oscar Hammerstein and Philadelphia society came into violent collision Wednesday of last week in the matter of financing the former's grand opera enterprise, and late that night, after various choice epithets, such as "Dutch fool," "brain storms," "spongers," "ingrates," etc., had been bandied about, it was not possible to ascertain which party suffered the most damage. Out of the mass of statements these facts finally crystallized: Hammerstein, failing to get the $400,000 mortgage he wants on his opera house by Saturday, will on that date abandon his enterprise and rent the property to Klaw & Erlanger as a vaudeville house within two weeks after his notices go out on Saturday. G. Helde Norris, society leader, first lurer of Hammerstein to this city and his legal adviser in the enterprise, is either incontinently "fired" or else has indignantly resigned, Hammerstein being authority for the first statement and Norris for the latter. The box committee, composed of the most elect Alexander Van Rensselaer, Andrew Wheeler, C. Hartman Kuhn, Francis E. Bond and Norris—also either have been sent down the sliding board by Oscar or have resigned; the same authorities for the same statements. Norris says after Hammerstein's "calumnies" upon Philadelphia the community will refuse to grant him his $400,000. The community had refused to grant him the money up to 9 o'clock Wednesday night, despite three ardent sessions of Hammerstein with financiers.

Spotlights

Robert J. Burdette, Jr., has inherited the taste for pen and ink to be expected of one who bears his name. As dramatic critic for the Oklahoma City Times, he writes of The Winter's Tale: Those who think Shakespeare "dry" might well learn a great deal from two acts in last evening's production. If interpreted rightly by one who knows the works of the great bard of Avon as thoroughly as does Mr. Hanford, the plays of Shakespeare are indeed replete with interest. Both Mr. Hanford and Miss Drofnah took double roles. Mr. Hanford appeared as Leontes. A first-class company supports these well-known Shakespearean stars.

Neil McNeil, the well-known comedian, is one of the leading people to come here with the production of Victor Herbert's latest success, The Red Mill.

E. H. Sothorn is bringing two leading women with him to the Van Ness Theatre. They are Gladys Hanson and Virginia Hammond. Miss Hanson is a Southern girl of rare beauty and unusual dramatic force. Her home is in Atlanta, Georgia, where, until her adoption of a stage career, she was a leader in social circles.

The New York courts have decided that Paul Armstrong took The Heir to the Hoorah bodily from a copyrighted magazine story called The Transmogrification of Dan, and he must give an accounting of all the profits of the play from the very beginning. There will be a big split-up of money between the widow of H. J. W. Dam, the magazine author and California playwright, and Mrs. Kirke La Shelle, widow of the manager who made the play production.

There are twenty first-class theatres in Buenos Ayres and the city suggests Paris in many respects. The Colon is said to be the finest opera house in the world. It cost $15,000,000. They have the finest of the world's opera and drama, and the world's greatest players and singers are there from time to time. Duse, Bernhardt and Coquelin have played in the Odeon, where boxes are $15 each.

Bert Drury, known on the stage as Byron Allenton, was shot and instantly killed on December 28th in Denver at a rooming-house by Bert Bell. Witnesses claim that Mrs. Bell, who was in the room with Drury, escaped the same fate by climbing up a fire escape to the third floor of the

What Arthur C. Aiston Thinks of the Coast

Arthur C. Aiston will shortly start on a Western trip which will take in, before his return to New York, most of the big Western cities, including Seattle, Tacoma, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Denver, Kansas City, etc. Regarding this trip, Mr. Aiston writes: "You can figure what I thought prospects of business were, when last year I had out three companies and this year I confined myself to one. I went abroad last summer for the first time, feeling that I was losing nothing if I sent nothing out this season at all. However, I intended to open my new play, As the Sun Went Down, in November, and had the models, scenery, estimates, etc., made for the attraction, which will be a splendid one when I start it. On my return from Europe, I found that many of my old At the Old Cross Roads people were sort of waiting for me, so in twenty-four hours I had my company engaged, and in a week had twelve weeks booked for a starter. I intended at the termination of the Cross Roads time to transfer the same people to the new play. I later found that I could fill Cross Roads to my satisfaction in promising territory up to about Christmas, so I delayed the opening of my new play until that day. After the first few weeks of the season, I found the general condition of all kinds of business so bad that I decided I could not produce my new play until next season. In coming to this decision, I used not only my own judgment in the matter, but delayed it on the advice of a friend, who pretty nearly knows what the theatres are playing to all over the country. Understand, I don't mean by that that no attractions are doing business, but the ones that are making money are the exception. As Cross Roads is now in its eighth season, and, as I figure, exhausted its territory, I am closing it at Belleville, Illinois, on January 10. It has played most of the big cities five or six times, so I figure that it has no more territory. I shall start soon on my trip to the Coast, and shall be gone from eight to ten weeks. I have not been out there for over three years, and I have several reasons for going. If they develop, I will let you know. If they don't, I will say nothing. One thing, however, I know is that the trip will again get me in touch with the best country I know of—the far West, where I wish I had settled down ten years ago. On my return I shall immediately start preparations for the production of As the Sun Went Down, which will be open by the middle of August.

The Largest Salary in the Show Business

These are the days of big things, in the show world as elsewhere. The largest salary ever offered by a theatrical manager was made by Henry B. Harris to H. B. Jones of No. 215 Monroe Street, New York City, which was prompted by the following letter received by Mr. Harris from Mr. Jones:

Mr. Henry B. Harris,
Hudson Theatre Building, West 44th St., near Broadway, New York City.
Dear Sir: I have the ability to choose for you the plays which will make a success, before production. Also, whether your new play will make good with the public. And how to change a failure into a success; also a weak play into a strong one. I am ready to demonstrate to you now.

Yours respectfully,
(Signed) H. B. JONES,
No. 215 Monroe Street, New York City.

Mr. Harris answered the letter and informed the gentleman that he would be pleased to see him at his earliest convenience, and, if he would demonstrate that he could do the things that he said he could, Mr. Harris would give him One Hundred Thousand Dollars a year. This letter is merely a sample of the hundreds of letters received daily by theatrical managers, covering every imaginable subject under the sun. A man who can successfully read a play and predict its success or failure, would soon make for his employer a fortune in which that of Rockefeller would fade into insignificance.

"Link" Plumer Arrives With A Stubborn Cinderella

"Link" Plumer, who has been one of the successful "Coast defenders" transplanted to the vigorous East, returns to his home town on February 7 with A Stubborn Cinderella, one of the most entertaining and successful musical comedies of the past few years. A friend of THE DRAMATIC REVIEW, writing from San Antonio, gives a few particulars of the show and mentions Mr. Plumer's good work. The writer says: "I met 'Link' Plumer, a coast defender (who is proud of the title), in this city, where he was playing one of the principal parts in A Stubborn Cinderella. He made a pronounced hit. The public and critics took most kindly to his work and one of our local papers in an enthusiastic review of the show, said of 'Link': 'Lincoln Plumer, without any acting on his part, was one of the best amusers of the cast. He filled the role of the fat boy, and the comical simplicity of his pudgy face and the expression of his blue eyes, that wallowed upward most effectively, were something great.' Another San Francisco favorite in the company is Jack Raffael, the old Tivoli favorite. A Modern Cinderella is one of Mort Singer's attractions and is positively the biggest thing on the road."

There is a little mixup in the dates of the Arizona Company, and consequently that show spent the greater part of this week in San Francisco, laying off, pending a readjustment of its time.

Orpheum

The program for next week will be headed by Julia Herne. Miss Herne will present a sketch written by herself and George D. Parker, called A Mountain Cinderella, which depicts a thrilling incident in the Tennessee mountains where the moonshiner is ever on the alert for the visit of the sheriff. Jewell's manikins will contribute an act called Toyland Vaudeville, in which the puppets impersonate the Teddy bears, Madame Renz, Vesta Victoria and other famous stage folk. Bert Howard and Effie Lawrence will be guilty of a farce called The Stage Manager, which provokes the audience to screams of laughter. The Chadwick Trio, which includes Ida May Chadwick, the champion female buck dancer of America, will appear in a farce entitled For Sale, Wiggins'

Farm. The Josselin Trio, aerialists, will introduce a novel and attractive act, called Pictures in the Air. That delightful monologist, Edwin Latell, will return for next week only, which will be the last of those wonderful acrobats, the Three Yoscarys, and those admirable comedians, Mr. and Mrs. Gene Hughes. The latter will be seen in a new farce, called A Matrimonial Substitute. A new series of Orpheum motion pictures will conclude the performance.

Valencia

Prince Hagen will receive its final presentations Sunday afternoon and evening and on Monday night that gripping and fascinating tale of detective life, Sherlock Holmes, will receive an elaborate production. The story, in brief, concerns Miss Alice Faulkner, who is kept a prisoner by James and Madge Larrabee in order that they may secure a package of letters written by the heir apparent of one of the principalities of the German empire to Miss Faulkner's sister. The German government has secured the services of Sherlock Holmes to locate and restore these letters, and when the Larrabees find the famous detective on their trail they secure the services of Professor Moriarty and his crew of thieves and cutthroats, that are designated the most infamous gang of lawbreakers in London. Moriarty has had bitter experiences with Holmes and decides to put him out of the way, so he enters the combat with great zest and earnestness. The fight between Holmes and the gang is a desperate one, but he easily outwits the men pitted against him and emerges the personification of coolness from every trap laid by the professional scoundrels. Robert Warwick will have one of the opportunities of his career. He is admirably adapted, both temperamentally and physically, to live the part, and promises to surprise his most ardent admirers. Thomas MacLarnie should be perfectly at home as Dr. Watson, Holmes' friend and counselor, and Charles Dow Clark will be Benjamin Forman, the detective's "understudy." Darrell Standing will be Professor Moriarty. Gerald Harcourt will be cast as Sidney Prince, the cockney. Blanche Stoddard will be in her element as Alice Faulkner, and Lillian Andrews will be the mother. Helen Lackaye will essay the role of the villainess, Madge Larrabee. George B. Baldwin, Jr., Robert Homans and others will complete the cast. Pretty Peggy will follow Sherlock Holmes.

Alcazar

A second week of Sweet Kitty Bellairs is announced by the Alcazar management, supplemented with a statement that the advance demand for seats is so heavy as to make a third week of the Belasco success not at all impossible. Sweet Kitty Bellairs is one of the most pretentious offerings ever undertaken by a stock theatre, with more than half a hundred people employed in an acting capacity, with a series of stage pictures that appeal by their elaborateness and beauty, and with a musical setting that is at once appropriate and pretty. David Belasco's adaptation of Egerton Castle's charming story of old Bath is surely well treated at the Sutter street playhouse. Evelyn Vaughan's impersonation of the quick-witted, big-hearted Irish widow will long remain a memory as one of her cleverest achievements, for the warmest admirers of her art are folk in whose veins course Celtic blood and who are inherently qualified to grasp the subtleties of Hibernian humor and all the other principal players are equally well cast. Bertram Lytell's good looks are enhanced by his scarlet uniform, and Messrs. Walling, Hickman, Glendinning, Wesner, Webb and Whipple, and the Misses Barriscale, Bond, Brownell and Belgarde also contribute to the beauty of the stage groupings. To hear the prologue, which is a pretty feature of the play, the audience must be seated before 8:10 o'clock.

Los Angeles Turns Out Banner Benefit for Italian Sufferers

Los Angeles, Jan. 14.—The engagement of Kolb and Dill for a six weeks' season in their musical successes is officially announced by Manager Oliver Morosco of the Majestic. They open in April. Agnes Rankin, formerly leading woman with the Ulrich and Hotchkiss stock companies, and who became Mrs. Jno. Maxwell about two years ago, is the fond mother of a son and heir. News of the happy event was received here this week. The Hobart Bosworth Institute of Dramatic Art, with an initial enrollment of 75 pupils, opened its handsome new quarters in the Majestic Theatre Building, Monday last. "Sis Hopkins" is to be discarded by her originator, Rose Melville, after this season, and Miss M. is looking for a new vehicle. Good chance for some clever playwright. Chas. Giblyn and Henry Stockbridge are responsible for the book and lyrics of a new musical comedy, In Wyoming, which is to be produced at the Burbank shortly. Robert Francis Kirkpatrick is responsible for the music, which is said to be of a superior nature. On Tuesday afternoon a gigantic benefit for the Italian earthquake sufferers, arranged by the Examiner, took place at the Auditorium. Dick Ferris was stage manager, which is equivalent to saying that the performance moved off without a hitch. Incidentally it netted $6,200 for the sufferers in Sunny Italy, which was the point aimed at. Detailed comment on the different features of the programme is impossible, since it was over six hours long. Suffice it to say that every feature was a stellar one, from the final appearance on any stage of Mme. Modjeska to the auctioning off of a fancy cake and a basket of fruit donated by the Hotel Alexandria. The programme was as follows: Selections by combined Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra and Women's Orchestra of Los Angeles, numbering 130 musicians, under the direction of Harley Hamilton; organ solo by Bruce Kingsley Gordon; Lewis S. Stone and the Belasco Company in an act from The Heir to the Hoorah; a duo of solos by Helen Goff; Mme. Modjeska, assisted by Lovell Alice Taylor and Ernest Phillips, in the sleep-walking scene from Macbeth; Mme. Galski, of the "heart voice," in two selections; Nat Goodwin and Edna Goodrich-Goodwin, assisted by Harry Mestayer, A. Byron Beasley, John Burton and Louise Royce, of the Burbank Company, in an act from When We Were Twenty-One; Murray and Mack, in some of their fun-making; an act from The Lion and the Mouse, playing at the Mason this week; Herr Ignaz Edward Haroldi, violin virtuoso, in solo work; Florence Stone, assisted by Margo Duffet, Carroll Marshall and Wm. Desmond, of the Burbank, in an act of Zaza; the Marquis Ellis Quartette; La Monaca and his Royal Italian Band, in selections; Edwin Latell, from the Orpheum, in a monology and banjo solos; the Philharmonic Male Quartette; an act from The Holy City, at the People's this week; little Ollie Walters, in dainty songs and dances; Wenzel Kopta, violinist, accompanied by Lillian Adams; Mrs. Jas. K. Connor (Ida Eckert Lawrence), in an original selected reading; the Black Sisters, in a repertoire of songs and dances, and the Examiner Newsboys' Band. An astounding feat of memory was shown by Florence Stone in connection with the presentation of the act from Zaza. There was no manuscript of the play in the city, and Miss Stone wrote the entire fourth act of the play from memory, in order that the programme might be carried out.

MASON.—The return of one of Henry B. Harris's companies in The Lion and the Mouse is the event at the Mason Opera House this week. The company is practically the same that was here last year. The part of Shirley Rossmore is now played by Edna Archer Crawford; Clifford Leigh is the Hon. Fitzroy Bagley; George O. Morris is Judge Rossmore. Paul Everton is still in the role of John Burkett Ryder, the roaring financial lion whom the clever little mouse sets free from all his ethical difficulties. Mr. Everton's interpretation is a strong one, and one feels genuine pleasure in seeing it again. Miss Crawford was distinctly good as Shirley Rossmore. So much has already been said about The Lion and the Mouse, its phenomenal success is so well known to every theatregoer, that further comment on this finely constructed, thought-compelling play is hardly needed. The supporting company is hardly all it should be as regards the minor roles.

MAJESTIC.—Those who enjoy "a little nonsense now and then" may travel down Broadway this week and drop into the Majestic Theatre, where Murray and Mack are presenting a musical nonsensicality called, for some reason or other, The Sunny Side of Broadway. Murray and Mack, being the stars, naturally provide much of the fun of the piece, but they are clever enough to know just when to stop. The sum total of the amusement offered is not gigantic.

BELASCO.—Lewis S. Stone and his associate players are meeting with popular approval this week through their presentation of Henry Miller's former success, Heartsease. Lewis S. Stone makes an excellent Eric Temple, while Miss Oakley has many opportunities for effective work as the daughter of Lord Neville. Ben Graham is a capital Lord Neville; Leslie Preston is a gracious Lady Neville, and Charles Ruggles has a felicitous character part, that of an Irish army captain who has much difficulty in summoning sufficient courage to propose to the adorable Alice Temple, charmingly impersonated by Beatrice Noyes. Richard Vivian and James Applebee find about the same range of expression in the roles of two eccentric old Londoners.

BURBANK.—A big revival of Sporting Life, with a real prize-fight and a real horse-race featured, is standing them up, figuratively, at the Burbank this week. Incidentally, that fight looks like a real one. Wm. Desmond, as Lord Woodstock, meets, through the courtesy of the Los Angeles Amateur Athletic Club, Cliff Reuman, amateur champion middle-weight Chas. Byton in referee and Freddie Welch is timekeeper. As for the play, it is, of course, a big scenic success and is capably presented. Mary Hall is Mrs. de Carteret; A. Byron Beasley, her husband; John Burton, old man Cavanaugh; Harry Mestayer, his son; Alice Lovell Taylor and Margo Duffet, his daughters; Henry Stockbridge, a bookmaker, and dainty little Fay Bainter, just herself. They all make good, and the piece looks good for a fortnight.

ORPHEUM.—The Orpheum offers an excellent bill for the week, with four new numbers, including Edwin Latell in his admirable musical sketch. His skit is termed Dull Care, Winsor McCay's Dr. Bunion giving color to the title. Mr. Latell's delightful foolery is most enjoyable. The Four Franklins are well known to Los Angeles audiences, having frequently appeared with different organizations, but their present "flying" act is one of the best in the repertoire of these clever acrobats. Eva Taylor appears in a well-written sketch, called Chums, and the Majestic Trio is as funny as ever in a new black-face skit. Gus Edwards' Blonde Typewriters, held over from last week, make their usual hit. Harry Tate and his company in their sketch, Motoring, do not seem to have worn out their welcome.

EMPIRE.—Hanlon and Clifton are presenting a clever head-balancing and acrobatic act at the Empire this week. It alone is an attraction strong enough to warrant a visit to the little Third Street playhouse. Helena Alford is a plumpish young person whose rendition of Rainbow and a few "imitations," during which she sings other popular numbers, pleases the houses immensely, while Harrow and his lay figures, through the performer's ventriloquial efforts, contribute a diverting ten minutes. Illustrated songs by Vier and Nellie Hill, motion pictures and one of Al Frank's farces, My Papa's Coachman, complete a satisfying program.

FISCHER'S.—After the operatic brilliancy of The Pagoda, Mr. Alphin's Two German Angels at Fischer's this week is a decided change. His playlet tells of the misadventures attending two rich Germans, who make their first venture into the theatrical field by undertaking the financing of a stranded Uncle Tom's Cabin company for a tour abroad. The play takes place on shipboard. Max Bloom and Frank Vack have the title roles. Ben Dillon is the manager of the stranded company, of which Laby Blondelle and Nellie Montgomery are the leading woman and sous-brette, respectively. Aubrey Carr is the captain of the ship. A suggestion of the "briny" is to be found in the titles of the song offerings. On the Bumping Main, Yo Ho, Little Girls, Yo Ho, If Columbus Hadn't Sailed Across the Sea, and Had the Gale. Miss Montgomery's I Used to Be Afraid to Go Home in the Dark, but Now I'm Afraid to Go Home at All is a novelty, as is Walks, the semi-tropical offering of Miss Blondelle.

GRAND.—Ferris Hartman and company are continuing to please with It Happened in Norway for a second week, the while preparing for a generously humorous and titanic presentation of The Tenderfoot, which follows.

LOS ANGELES.—Mme. Marzella's feathered performers steal first honors from the humans at the Los Angeles Theatre this week. The birds, cockatoos, parrots, pigeons and ravens, have been skillfully trained, and the feats they perform are received with lively appreciation. A feature of the act is a flight of pigeons from the rear of the theatre to the stage, where they alight caressingly upon the head and shoulders of their fair trainer, Douglas A. Flint and company present a farcical sketch, entitled The Mixers, in which an automobile ride, a sporty husband and a jealous wife are the chief ingredients. Palfrey and Hoeller perform several astonishing feats on wheels. Kenyon and Healey sing a number of "popular" and familiar songs, and Fannie Frankel proves herself the possessor of a strong soprano voice.

UNIQUE.—The Gibson Girl, as presented by the Armstrong Musical Comedy Company at the Unique this week seems a success. Ethel Davis as the Gibson girl makes a decided hit in her impersonation of Fay Templeton in Forty-five Minutes from Broadway. Will Armstrong, as usual, is humorous in his Irish comedy. Lillian Southerland is well cast and receives liberal encores for her rendition of Isn't It Great to Be a Soldier Man. Madalene Holly has a topical song, while Jack Curtis and Edward Armstrong do their share in keeping the audience in a cheerful frame of mind. George Rehn makes his bow this week in Dutch comedy character songs, and his re-engagement with the company adds largely to its strength.

WALKERS.—The bill at the Walker Theatre this week is headed by The Thoroughbred and the Lady, exploited by Harry M. O'Connor, Alice Saunders and Fred Elliott, Elliott being the feature of the act with his Rube character. The Five Pattersons do statue grouping in bronze, and present a number of very effective poses from the classics. The Two Elwoods dance and sing and Edna Elwood does some pleasing boy characters. Mario David, Italian singer; Sylvestro, aerialist, and Ida Wharton, soprano, complete the list. New motion pictures are shown. C. M. EMERY.

San Bernardino, Jan. 13.—At the Opera House (Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, mgr.) 7, Murray & Mack pleased a good-sized audience; 15, Rose Melville, in Sis Hopkins; 18, Chas. B. Hanford and Marie Drownah, in Winter's Tale, though for some reason Mr. Hanford's advance agent chooses to vary Shakespeare's title and the production is advertised as The Winter's Tales. Good houses are promised for both productions, as this is the first appearance of Sis Hopkins here, while Mr. Hanford is always a favorite. At the Unique, Manager Leonard has a good vaudeville bill for the week, which gives way one night (16) to Edmund Carroll and company in Walker Whiteside's comedy drama, We Are King. J. E. RICH.

Carl Berch Writes: Antioch, Cal., Jan. 13.—Have reorganized and will continue playing three-night stands. Will have same company, with the exception that Ross Miller replaces Charles Burnison. Am going over the same territory where I was successful some six years ago. Will be ahead of show myself.

Spotlights

Elmer Ballard and wife open at the Empire soon in their sketch, A Night Out.

MACE GREENLEAF succeeds Robert Warwick as leading man of the Valencia Stock on February 8th, opening in The Prince Chap.

Charles Place has leased the Unique Theatre in San Jose for three weeks. Jim Post and his company closed there last Sunday night.

SIDNEY DIAMOND, the Mullally Sisters, Paul Harvey, Merle Stanton and Wm. Silk constitute the chief members of Manager Anson Hurlbut's Santa Rosa Stock Company.

It is reported that Jim Jeffries and five acts of vaudeville will play around here and in the North as a one-night-stand show, at the conclusion of his engagement at the Wigwam in this city.

The big hit of Pantages' bill this week is A Night with the Poets. The audiences are enjoying it immensely, and particularly well does the reading by Clinton Lloyd make a hit. The quartette singing, too, goes extremely well.

Personals

F. LAWRENCE WALKER, manager for Charles B. Hanford, is headed this way on his annual trip. Mr. Walker has been Mr. Hanford's manager for the past nineteen years, longer than any other manager in the country has even handled one star or attraction. He knows every theatrical man and newspaper critic in the country, and his annual visit is always a pleasure to his many friends. Mr. Walker never forgets a favor and has a most remarkable memory for facts of all sorts. He can recall, apparently without the slightest trouble, just what Mr. Hanford played in a town four, five or even ten years ago, tell who was the manager at the time and who the dramatic man was who wrote up the show.

In the last act of the tragedy, Here Comes the Black Prince, staged at the Cineograph Theatre at No. 118 Court Street, Los Angeles, John E. Drew on the night of January 5 grabbed the villain's knife, as the latter was about to "stab to death" the leading lady, and was severely cut. The curtain was rung down when Drew fainted at the sight of blood. The audience, thinking it was all a part of the play, applauded heartily. Drew was taken to the Receiving Hospital, where his wound was dressed, and then was taken to the Clifton House at No. 231 North Broadway. He was unable to finish his week's engagement as the hero of the drama. Leslie Forrest, "the villain," accompanied the injured man to the hospital. The leading lady, who also fainted, was taken to her home, where she was attended by a physician.

FLORENCE ROBERTS and her supporting company, in The House of Bondage, were put to flight Thursday night in Medford, Ore., by a fire that originated under the stage of the local theatre. The fire was entirely in the rear of the theatre and the audience of 700 was kept in ignorance of it until every precaution had been taken that there should be no panic. When the flames were discovered, Miss Roberts and her fellow-players escaped through the rear exits into the street. As the troupe fled, Miss Roberts forgot her purse and, against the remonstrance of friends, dashed back to her dressing-room and recovered it. She was forced to make her way through blinding smoke, but was not injured. The fire was extinguished by stage hands, who chopped a hole through the floor and fought the flames with snow and water.

DAVID M. HARTFORD, new stage director at the Belasco Theatre, Los Angeles, who succeeded William C. Masson and whose first work was shown in the production of The Heir to the Hoorah last week, has had twenty-seven years' experience in theatrical work. He went on the stage when only eleven years old. He comes direct from Waterbury, Conn., where last summer he was stage director at Jacques' Theatre, and in the fall occupied a similar position with the Auditorium. For the last fifteen years he has been in stock, often playing the lead and acting as stage director as well. In this capacity he was in Rochester four seasons, Cleveland three seasons, Toledo one season, Detroit two seasons, Milwaukee one season, Winnipeg, Canada, two seasons, Omaha one season, and Waterbury one season.

Correspondence

New York, Jan. 10.—Marriages may be made in Heaven, but their complications are exhibited on the stage. That was the case last Monday night at Weber's Theatre, where George Broadhurst's comedy, An International Marriage was seen here for the first time, marking the return of Digby Bell, who has not been seen here since the days of Mr. Pipp. As a comedy, An International Marriage tells of a prince who wishes to marry an American girl, but cannot gain the consent of his king. True, there are many things at Europe, as compared with Omaha; and that country is frequently bewitched because it does not boast as many bathrooms, and also because its bartenders are lacking in the art of mixing cocktails. Of course there was hearty applause for Mr. Bell, who acted the role of a five-times Mayor of Omaha and the wealthy inventor of an unbreakable wash wringer. Christine Norman was his daughter, who loved the Duke of Baritz. William J. Kelly was the Duke, and John Daly Murphy, as a count with a Weber-Felds accent, Amelia Mayborne was the Archduchess. An International Marriage is a "timely" piece, because a great portion of its plot is being paralleled in real life today. * * * Maxine Elliott on Wednesday auspiciously opened the beautiful little theatre which she and Lee Shubert joined hands to build. The inaugural consisted in the presentation of an exceptionally pleasing comedy of love in the Adirondacks, in which Miss Elliott and a competent company gave much wholesome pleasure to a large audience. The little play is called The Chaperon, and is written by Marion Fairfax, who is in private life Mrs.
 Tully Marshall. Aside from the merits of the comedy, which proved to be considerable, the evening was notable as affording the first public view of the interior of a theatre which many persons think by far the most beautiful in New York. It has been described at some length in this newspaper. It is enough to say here that the first night's audience was delighted with its every detail. Maxine Elliott's Theatre is, for example, the first permanent New York playhouse to furnish programmes that are destitute of advertising. The musicians do their work in a pit under the apron of the stage, and their harmonies percolate to the auditorium through a screen of bay leaves. Nor is there in that orchestra any trombone nor yet any cornet nor cymbals nor anything to smite the ear rudely. There are only strings—harps and violins. The Chaperon is rather a jolly little play whose scenes are peopled by an unusually likable lot of young people. On the opening night, between acts the audience divided its attention between the beauties of the new theatre and Mary Anderson de Navarro, who sat in one of the proscenium boxes and frequently applauded the players of the evening. * * * Tristan and Isolde, under the direction of Gustav Mahler, was sung again in the Metropolitan Opera House last Monday night by Mmes. Fremstad and Homer and Messrs. Schmeles, Feinhals, Blass and Muhlmann. Wagner's love tragedy deeply impressed the large audience, and the singers were repeatedly called before the curtain. The second act, in which Mme. Fremstad, as Isolde, Mme.
 Homer as Brangäne and Mr. Schmeles as Tristan especially distinguished themselves, was particularly applauded. The management of the Metropolitan has called in Charles E. Dillingham and his stage manager, formerly connected with the Metropolitan, to assist it for about two weeks with his advice in the matter of making opera more profitable. * * *

Verdi's stirring opera, Otello, was sung in the Manhattan Opera House again last Monday night, and its performance once more aroused a large audience to appreciative applause. Mme. Melba sang the role of Desdemona with great beauty of voice.
 Mr. Zenatello made much of the dramatic possibilities of the title role, and Mr. Sam-marco was a sonorous Iago. Miss Doria appeared again as Emilia. The principals were all recalled after the several acts.
 Herr Direktor Hammerstein says he doesn't need to call in any comic opera manager to teach him how to make grand opera pay. At Baltimore, on Monday night, the Lyric Theatre was crowded to hear Mme. Tetrazzini and Mr. Constantino in Lucia di Lammermoor. Mr. Hammerstein, his stars, a chorus of one hundred and fifty voices, an orchestra of seventy-five pieces and scenery arrived in Baltimore from New York, on a special train during the afternoon. The house had been sold out long before the curtain went up. It was Mr. Hammerstein's first production in that city, and was a winner. * * * Yale University's Dramatic Association covered itself with credit last Monday night in the Waldorf-Astoria ballroom, where it presented Sheridan's The Critic, preceded by a modern farce, The Fire-Eater, by Charles Selby. A large and fashionable audience laughed for two hours over the antics of the young men from New Haven, and every dance would have been repeated a dozen times if the lungs and legs of the performers had held out. Each actor seemed to consider himself the star of the evening, and good acting was done by M. C. Hannah as Dangle, E. M. Woolley as Puff, R. M.

 Byrnes as Sir Fretful, F. B. Rives as Signor Ritornello, M. G. Ely as the Signora, A. C. ener as Raleigh, and M. O. Parry as Whis Terandos. The dancing of Mr. Ely as the Signora, a marvel of brazen coyness and puerile grace, was one of the hits of the evening. In The Fire-Eater, M. O.
 Parry as Gosling played with skill as well as spirit. He was helped by a delightful sketch of the simple village maiden, played by A. M. Hartwell, with a bass voice that boomed humorously out in the love passages. * * * Mrs. James Brown Potter made her first appearance in vaudeville in this country at the Lincoln Square Theatre last week, and was enthusiastically greeted by crowded houses at both performances. Mrs. Potter's offering consists of recitations with piano accompaniment.
 She had to respond to several encores.
 There was quite a sprinkling of society folk in the boxes. The Lincoln Square Theatre is one of the Morris chain of theatres, in opposition to the big vaudeville syndicate of first-class houses. * * * The tour of Mrs. Fiske and the Manhattan Company in Salvation Nell opens on Feb. 1st in Philadelphia. The engagement at the Hackett Theatre will close on Saturday, January 16th. A week at the West End Theatre and a week at the Grand Opera House, Brooklyn, follow. * * * Antique bronze
 graphs of Miss Billie Burke were distributed at the Lyceum Theatre last week to mark the 150th performance of Love Watches.

* * * William Faversham, holding to his original plan to offer a production at Daly's Theatre, will withdraw The World and His Wife after the 11th performance, on Monday evening, January 18th, replacing it with Edward Childs Carpenter's play, The Road to Now Orleans. * * * Charles Frohman has completed by cable definite arrangements for two new productions in London. The first occurs at the Comedy Theatre, where Marie Tempest will appear in a new light comedy, Penelope, by W.
 Somerset Maugham, author of Lady Frederick. On February 2d, at the Garrick Theatre, Mr. Frohman and Arthur Bourchier will give London its first glimpse of Bernstein's Samson, with Mr. Bouchier playing the chief part. * * * The Shuberts have arranged for the presentation of The Vampire at the Hackett Theatre on Monday, Jan. 18th, immediately following the conclusion of Mrs. Fiske's engagement in Salvation Nell. The Shuberts' own theatres are occupied and they are looking for other theatres in which to book Julia Marlowe in The Goddess of Reason, James T.
 Powers in Havana, and Bertha Galland in
The Return of Eve and The Gamblers.
 * * * Arrangements have been concluded between Liebler & Co. and H. B. Warner, at present appearing with Wilton Lackaye in The Battle at the Savoy Theatre, by which the firm will star Mr. Warner in a new play by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, the authors of The Man from Home. The new play will be entitled All the King's Men. * * * David Belasco announced yesterday that Blanche Bates, now appearing in The Fighting Hopes at the Shubert Theatre, would move to the Belasco Theatre, Jan. 18th, to continue her New York run, and that Frances Starr, in Eugene Walter's new play, The Eastest Way, would begin an engagement at the Stuyvesant on the same date. * * *

Grace Cameron, Harold Kennedy and George O'Donnell appeared for the first time in principal roles in The Queen of the Moulin Rouge, in the Circle Theatre last Monday night. * * * ROY ROY.
Philadelphia, Jan. 2.—Garrick (Nixon & Zimmerman, mgrs.): Wildfire, a comedy of swift horses, racy talk and beautiful women, returned to the Garrick this week for another brief interval of brightness, with Lillian Russell as the star. This is none of your plays with a philosophy. It doesn't make you bother about the issues and purposes of this mundane existence.
 Those plays are indispensable; but when you feel like letting the lighter humor course your veins, Wildfire is the thing.
 That the way the audience took it, and laughed and applauded and called the actors out over and over again, the play is on the go all the while, with the beautiful Lillian Russell as the commanding central
 out, and her gowns were wondrous to look upon. The cast shows some changes from last year, with a decided gain in strength and much fresh life has been written into the play. Frank Sheridan gave a rough, completely rounded, lovable character in the trainer, Donovan. Willie Archie was a near-star in his boyish impudence and marvelous slang. Adelphia (Messrs. Shuberts, mgrs.): Universally conceded to be one of the half dozen strongest American plays ever written, Augustus Thomas' The Witching Hour returned to the Adelphia this week. John Mason still heads the extraordinarily capable company, which remains the same as when here previously, with the single exception that George Gaston supplants William Sampson as the fiery, delightful Lew Ellinger. The entire cast is splendidly placed. In every respect
The Witching Hour is a dramatic delight.
 Broad (Nixon & Zimmerman, mgrs.): The Thief, one of the notable dramatic successes of the season and a play of worldwide reputation and record of popular approval, entered the second week of its stay at the Broad. Kyrie Bellew, Edie

Shanon and five other capable actors are conspiring with the inherent dramatic power and appeal in the play to carry The Thief to crowning success in Philadelphia, as elsewhere. Walnut (Frank J. Howe, Jr., mgr.): Chauncey O'Leary's new play, Ragged Robin, at the Walnut pleases large audiences this week. There is not a great deal in the story of Ragged Robin that is sensational or melodramatic, but the adventures of the hero, a lovable, careless wanderer, are certainly none the less interesting on that account. A superior organization is in support. Chestnut Street Opera House (Nixon & Zimmerman, mgrs.): Richard Carle, with Mary's Lamb, entered upon his final performance at the Opera House.
 Forrest (Nixon & Zimmerman, mgrs.): A great deal has been said in praise of the Viennese operetta, A Waltz Dream, which started in on its third and final week at the Forrest. On its musical side it possesses a score of extraordinary beauty and richness, the song numbers including a dozen waltzes, mazurkas and other movements. Then, to make what is good better, a more capable company for the work in hand could hardly be gotten together.
 As directress of the ladies' orchestra, Sophie Brandt is everything required, and she has efficient helpers in H. V. Donnelly, J. W. Herbert, Josie Adler, Octavia Brosch and the rest of the cast. Lyric (Messrs.
 Shuberts, mgrs.): For this week, the last of its stay in Philadelphia, Marcelle, which has been holding forth at the Adelphia for a month past, will be at home at the Lyric.
 Louise Gunning, a capable comedienne and splendid singer, has the title character and makes the most of it in every way. Jess Dandy, the well-known German comedian, is prominent in the support. Grand (Stair & Havlin, mgrs.): That amusing musical comedy, A Runaway Girl, kept affairs in a lively mood at the Grand this week. Applause and laughter were prominent factors in the proceedings, but the principal supply of laughs was looked after by Clarence Harvey and H. W. McDennick. W. H.
 West, Harry Jane and, in fact, the entire cast and chorus worked most successfully toward making the performance among the most enjoyable ever given by the Aborn
 Opera Company. Chestnut Street Theatre
 (Grant Lafferty, mgr.): To briefly sum up the merits of Brother Officers, a play of English military life, is to say there is none better of its kind on the stage. What greatly helped in the play's marked success was the excellent manner in which it was performed. William Ingersoll impersonated hapless Lieutenant Hinds and thoroughly realized the character, his attempts at making good his hero's lack of early social advantages being brava with a master hand. Marion Barney made a splendid part of the baroness, John Stokes, Lieutenant Pleydell, and Charles Harris, dean of Chester, were other highly praiseworthy efforts. Excellent work was likewise done by J. H. Dailey, Peter Lang, Kathleen MacDonnell, Louise Reimer and Louise Randolph. Park (Nixon & Nird-linger, mgrs.): Plenty of enjoyment goes along with a visit to the Gingerbread Man,
 Park. The cast is the same as that seen on the Coast. Eleventh Street Opera House (Frank Dumont, mgr.): Dumont's Minstrels keep the fun-ball rolling in unison with the holiday spirit. Dougherty and Richards, as black Kris Kringle, furnish a fine time for everybody. Ben Franklin and his "bots" present a novel idea. Grand (Stair & Havlin, mgrs.): Paul Armstrong's interesting comedy-drama, The Heir to the Hoohah, was presented at the Grand for the first time at popular prices. Blaney (Stair & Havlin, mgrs.): A Bad Man's Wife, with Selma Herman in the title role, is this week's offering at Blaney's. Hart's New Theatre (John Hart, mgr.): Ray Raymond in his Candy Kid Company received a warm welcome at Hart's this week. The Queen of Convicts is offered at the Standard. The Casino Moving Picture Parlooffers some very interesting pictures to its patrons. Business has been excellent ever since the management discovered a find in Ed Merbreier, Jr. Mr. Merbreier possesses a sweet baritone voice, and his ability as a singer proves him an artist whose art is not narrow, and he has become quite a favorite with the public, shown from the fact of the patronage since he has been here. Mr. Merbreier has had quite an experience in the theatrical business, having been connected with the Keith's Circuit and with some of the well-known stock companies. So good luck to Ed for the coming season.

CALVIN M. FRANKLIN.

Laramie, Wyo., Jan. 10.—Nothing doing at Opera House the past week, Theodore Lorch and company here three nights, beginning Tuesday night. A. D. K.

Salt Lake City, Jan. 12.—The past week has been a good one from every standpoint.
 Financially it is the equal of any this season; socially, the theatre offerings were very pleasing. The Wolf, which was the sole attraction at the Salt Lake Theatre, is a very strong play. In many ways it is an unusual play; one of the chief oddities being the absence of female characters.
 The heroine is the sole representative of her sex, and it is about her that the plot revolves. For the present week, Corinne in Lola from Berlin will be the attraction.
 Any play in which Corinne appears is sure to please. At the Colonial will be seen, The Girl from the Golden West. It is Belasco play and speaks for itself. For those who love drama and comedy it is sure to be a treat. The antics of the cowboys in the dance hall scene are highly humorous.
 Orpheum—The Orpheum presents an excellent bill this week as a successor to the good bill of last week. Hall McAllister heads the list in presenting The Girl of the Times; the Italian trio sing some good opera; Bowers, Walters and Crocker as The Three Rubes are highly entertaining. Fred J. Butler presents The Feud, a stirring one-act drama. Agnes Mahr, as the American Tommy Atkins, is very clever. La Petite Mignon is a dainty comedienne, and Bob and Tip company offer a farce that is really funny. The Grand has undergone another of its lightning changes, of which there have been so many this season, and now promises to remain stable for the rest of the season. This latest change has been a change of managers, where John Held succeeds Mr. Cox as manager of the Grand Theatre. Mr. Held is well known as an amusement man locally, having conducted a band which has made Salt Lake famous. Manager Held proposes to present whatever class of show the public wishes, and his policy will doubtless be successful.

Laramie, Wyo., Jan. 4.—Nothing doing at Opera House last week, and nothing billed for present week. Electric and O. K. picture shows doing good business. About March 1st will see another picture show here, making three.

Beno., Jan. 4.—Conway Tearle, leading man with the Ben Hur company in San Francisco, arrived here this morning and was granted an absolute divorce on the ground of desertion. Tearle stated that he had been a resident of this county from April of this year until September, living at Lughlon Springs, a resort, where he was ordered for his health. He was married at Sunderland, Durhamshire, England, in 1901, his wife deserting him in 1905 and at present is in London, England. There are no children and nothing is said of community property.

San Jose, Jan. 4.—At the Victory Theatre, The Lion and the Mouse concluded its engagement to poor business. Thursday night, Fifty Miles from Boston showed to good house. Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Mrs. Temple's Telegram plays. At the Garden, the stock company is playing The Three of Us. Jennie Kelton is great as Rhys McChesney. At Post's Unique, the following is the bill: James Post & Co., in the musical concoction, The Gay Deceiver; Maybelle Thompson, in the society drama, The Colonel's Wife, and Marvin Hammond, illustrated song. At the Empire: First time in California, Eugene O'Rourke and Nellie Eltinge, in their comedy success, Parlor A; McCloud and Melville, the dancing harpists; six other big features. Next week, Empire vaudeville in the Theatre Jose.

San Diego.—Garrick Theatre (Morosco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—Jan. 10-11, Rose Melville in Sis Hopkins pleased two good-sized audiences. Miss Melville enacts the part of Sis in the same clever manner that has made the play as well as herself famous, and as usual she is surrounded by a very capable cast; 17-18, The Lion and the Mouse; 19-20, A Stubbhorn Cinderella; 22-23, Charles B. Hanford. Genial Jack Dodge, manager of the Garrick, has been confined to his home for the past week on account of sickness. Mr. Gross (King Edward II) has been acting as manager during Mr. Dodge's absence. Pickwick Theatre (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—11-17, Myrtle Vane stock company in The Heritage of the Red. The play is a typical Western one and is very similar to Strongheart, as it deals with the race problem of the Indians and whites. Miss Vane in the leading role of Meg McIver makes a hit, and while under the nom de plume of Miss Fairweather does a clever piece of character acting. Oscar Grey Briggs as usual makes the most of his part. Special mention must also be made of the clever presentation by Ethel How of Moll, the Indian squaw. The balance of the company is well cast, and the scenery, etc., is up to the Pickwick standard. Queen Theatre (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.)—11-17, Pierce and Roslyn, the operatic team, playing return date here, scored as big hit as in their former appearance. Carrie Clark Ward and company, in The Cook Lady, kept the house in a scream from the beginning to the close of the act. Faucher and Jenkins do some clever tricks on bicycles. Harry Tyler, the xylophone artist, pleased. Capacity business nightly. Grand Theatre (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.)—11-17, The Royal Hawaiian Quintet, composed of five men and a pretty girl, have a neat singing act and score a big hit. Maude de Alma, picture balladist, and Madeline Rowe, sourette, please. Moving pictures. Good business. Star Theatre (Mason & Ames, mgrs.)—11-17, The Cameraphone; good business. Empire, Bijou and Union Theatres, with moving pictures and illustrated songs, report good business.

C. E. LUNDQUIST.
Watsonville, Jan. 13.—The Blind Organist, featuring L. R. Stockwell, and Mrs. Temple's Telegram, Saturday, Jan. 2, to only fair business. Good company and excellent attraction. The Holy City, with Lucia Morey as Salome, Tuesday, 5th, to only fair business. Performance gave excellent satisfaction. Willis Bass, the hustling purveyor of publicity for the Elleford company, was with us last week. Both Mr. and Mrs. Bass are very popular here and help to boom business for the company. They open here, 14, for three nights. Stetson's Uncle Tom's Cabin company comes, 21. La Petite, to good business, presenting motion pictures and vaudeville.

J. F. BURDICK.
San Jose, Jan. 14.—E. H. Sothern appeared at the Victory on 13th in Richard Lovelace. The Lambardi Grand Opera Company opens here on Thursday and balance of week. At the Garden Theatre the stock is playing The Light

Eternal. The Jose, once more given over to vaudeville, has the following fine offering: Farra, the iron man; Madden and Fitzpatrick, sketch The Turn of the Tide; Cakewalk Odet; Eldora, heavyweight juggler; Franco Marracci, violinist; Morris and Brown, comedy singers and dancers; Ah Sing Foo, Oriental magician.

Marysville, Jan. 12.—The Alaskan closed the year of 1908 in the Marysville Theatre. The performance was greatly enjoyed by the immense audience, it being the largest of the season. Florence Roberts is booked for the 15th, to be followed on the 21st by Brewster's Millions. This will be the big event of the season, as it is the anniversary of the opening of the new theatre and will be celebrated by excursions from nearby towns.

Sacramento, Jan. 14.—The Lambardi Opera Company of Italian singers concluded a very satisfactory engagement here Wednesday night. The company is good and the attendance has been refreshing. Ben Hur comes to the Clunie, 15-16, and will do an immense business. The vaudeville houses are doing their usual good business. At the Grand the bill consists of Mile. Sommerville and her dancing horse; John Birch, the Man With the Hats; Wemona, Francis and company, rifle and pistol shots; Holmes and Holliston, Looking for Betsy; Payne and Lee, singers and dancers; Brown and Hodges, singing cartoonists, and Esco Ives, singer. At Pantages Manager Ely offers The Johnston Students, club maniacs; Conn Downey and Willard, playlet; World's Comedy Four, exponents of melody; Albani and Collina, Italian opera singers; The Bernsteins, singers and dancers, and Ada Williams, singer.

Oakland, Jan. 11.—Ben Hur, the play that deals with the early history of Rome and the Palestines, was given three performances at the Macdonough, 11-13. The house was sold out completely, and it is unfortunate for Manager Hall that the engagement was not for a longer period. The company, which is headed by Conway Teale, is fairly good and gave the play a fine rendition, but the big success lies in the magnificence of the mechanical and electrical effects and the gorgeous stage settings. The Grove of Daphne and the Temple of Apollo were the finest scenes ever seen here. In Wyoming, a border play somewhat on the lines of The Squaw Man and The Virginian, was seen here for the first time, 14, and gave good satisfaction. The attendance was not large, but what they lacked in numbers they made up in enthusiasm. E. H. Sothern will play three nights, 14-15-16. The Lambardi Opera Company is booked, 17. At Ye Liberty, Manager Bishop is again showing his wisdom by offering another popular college play for this week's attraction. Strongheart, Edeson's recent success, is seen here for the first time in stock, and were it not for the inclement weather, the house would be taxed to the capacity at every performance. This being a college town, it is but natural that a play of this nature would appeal very strongly to our theatregoers. The part of Strongheart, the Indian student, is played by Landers Stevens, who looked every inch the part in his make-up. His version of the character was clear and created a most favorable impression. Other characters true to student life were played by George Friend, Robert Harrison, Henry Shumer and E. L. Bennison. Harold Mathews, a graduate of the University of California, was prominent in the cast, and, although this was his first professional appearance here, his reception was a hearty one. His work is polished and gives promise of a successful future. Tess of the D'Urbervilles is the bill for next week. The Wrong Mr. Wright is in preparation. Seat room is at a premium at the Orpheum, where the Road Show is in its second and last week. Gus Edwards' School Boys and Girls have been added to the regular bill, which makes the program more attractive than ever. The Novelty is showing quite a bill this week, ranging from classical vocal selections to negro comedy. Baptiste and Franconi; The La Moines; Thomas and Paine; The Wilson Trio. The Bell the Royal Musical Five are making an immense hit and are the best number of the following fine bill: Dolph Lavine, Kikuda, the Two Dowlings and Smith and Brown. Richard M. Hotelling, the well-known San Francisco society leader, who made his professional debut here last season, will again be seen in his favorite Shakespearean roles. His engagement will commence at Ye Liberty, Feb. 1st, and he will have the support of the entire strength of Bishop's players.

LOUIS SCHEELINE.
Napa, Jan. 6.—Napa Opera House (E. F. Hogan, mgr.)—Jan. 11, In Wyoming. Hayes Theatre continues to draw large crowds with moving pictures and illustrated songs. On Tuesday evening, January 12, the Red Cross Society will give a vaudeville show for the benefit of the earthquake sufferers in Italy in this house.

L. KYSER.
Silverton, Ore., Jan. 7.—Enraged over her husband's attentions to Grace Fredericks, a San Francisco girl playing with the Clark C. Burroughs stock company, Mrs. Maude Burroughs, wife of the leading man, attempted to kill her rival at the Silverton Hotel early this morning. Mrs. Burroughs, whose stage name is Maude Francis, found her husband in Miss Fredericks' room, and pushing open the door, opened fire with a revolver she had found in Burroughs' grip. The bullet buried itself in the wall just above the girl's head and Burroughs seized his wife and disarmed her before she could fire again. The wife then grasped a pair of shears and pursued her screaming rival to the hall, and then turned on her husband and stabbed him in the lip and cheek. There was no show tonight.

Astoria, Jan. 11.—Astoria Theatre (F. M. Hanlin, mgr.)—Wednesday, Jan. 6, Florence Roberts in The House of Bondage, to a full house. A raging snow-storm occurred that day, which was cause small audience. Friday, Jan. 8, The Great Divide played to small audience; cause, continuation storm; impossible to keep house warm and comfortable. Saturday, 9th, Babes in Toyland, magnificent production, played to almost empty seats on account raging snow and easterly wind storm. Last night being Sunday, Yale's Devil's Auction was the attraction. The company arrived here on the noon train from the Sound, but on account of the failure to bring their baggage and scenery car, which was overturned on the special that was bringing it, failed to appear. Tonight the Baker stock company of Portland was booked to appear in Are You a Mason, failed to show up, said on account of sickness of leading lady (but more likely on account of blizzard raging). Next Wednesday, 13th, St Plunkard is booked, but it is ten to one they will not get here, as the weather is still very bad and cold. The storm which is raging all over Oregon and Washington is playing the devil with theatres. It will certainly be the means of breaking up many traveling companies. It is the worst storm ever known in Oregon and Washington in fact, the worst known on the Pacific Coast. Over a foot of snow covers the ground here and should the rain come soon, accompanied by a strong wind, the damage would be hard to estimate.

Van Ness

When Brewster's Millions visited San Francisco last year there was unfolded a most unique and dramatic story, acted by a generally good and satisfactory cast. The same verdict may be given this time, when the comedy-melodrama is headed once more by Robert Ober, in the part of Monty Brewster, who must spend his million dollars in a year in order to come into an inheritance of ten millions more. Mr. Ober is a very easy, pleasing actor and is constantly gaining strength and skill. June Mathis plays the sweetheart of the young spendthrift, and easily wins the favor of her audience. Another handsome and talented young actress is Kathryn Raye, who is seen as Barbara Drew. Miss Raye has undoubted talent, that will demonstrate itself when the opportunity offers. The scenic feature—the big shipwreck scene—is a masterful bit of stage illusion, and the effect of the performance from beginning to end is most pleasing.

Princess

The Politicians continue to unfold the intricacies of comic opera political life most merrily, and large and happy audiences nightly gather at the Ellis Street home of music. Outside of the work of the two stars, there is plenty of splendid work done by the supporting company. Adele Rafter, a woman of unusual beauty and personal charm, is also a good singer and experienced actress, and she is the best prima donna the Kolb and Dill Company have had. Sidney De Gray makes extremely prominent the part of Judge Greene, and proves conclusively he is one of the best legitimate straight old men on the stage. Percy Bronson is a very likeable juvenile, and Carlton Chase is pleasing in the part of the young banker. Neta Vesta is a more than ordinarily clever soubrette and most attractive as regards looks. Richard Stanton as Gideon Gay is one of the hits of the performance. The chorus is typical of the West—gingery and beautiful and capable. The performance is worth more than one visit.

Alcazar

The wonderful stock company identified with this theatre goes on week after week achieving such astounding success that the superlative of approval is early lost and to be reiterated would be entirely overdone. So, to say that Sweet Kitty Bellairs is one of the great triumphs of the Alcazar, is but to speak the truth—probably it is the best thing that has been done there, if one is of the mind to appreciate a charming and human love story. The wizardry of David Belasco's stage art was never shown to better advantage than in the development of this play, and the witchery and dainty charm of Evelyn Vaughan was never better demonstrated than in her portrayal of Sweet Kitty Bellairs. Her lilting, rippling brogue is a source of joy, and her assumption of the various emotions that come to this charmer of Irish blood is evenly sustained through what must be a most trying physical ordeal. Bertram Lytell, always ideal as a lover, is temperamentally suited to the part of Lord Verney, and his personal triumph is great. Will Walling plays with particular effect the character of Col. Villiers, and George Webb, a new member of the company, demonstrates his good acting quality by a splendid Captain Spicer. Burt Wesner, too, is happily placed as Col. McFionton. Howard Hickman, Ernest Glendinning and Walter Whipple render valuable support. Bessie Barriscale, as the loving young wife, is happy in the comedy she extracts from the part, and Christie McLean and Louise Brownell are effective in their portrayals. The period allows every advantage to be taken in the way of gorgeous scenery and exquisite dressing, and nothing could be more comprehensive or satisfying than the accomplishment in this direction. Edward Lada has, with the spirit of the play in mind, provided characteristic Irish airs, and his orchestra executes them charmingly. The play will run another week.

Valencia

When Upton Sinclair—way up in the clouds of symbolism, tintured by ardent socialistic theories—conceived the idea of Prince Hagen, it was hoped that he would write a play of real dramatic value, and one that would set a new fashion in American dramatic literature. But the result has been entirely negative. Given every aid by a luxurious management in the way of production and a most capable company and the help of much rarely beautiful music arranged by Musical Director Herman Heller, from the themes conceived by the great Wagner, the play has fallen far from anticipation. And the reason is not hard to explain. Two prime essentials are necessary for successful stage production. One (and the oldest of all) is a good love story. The other is dramatic interest. In both essentials Prince Hagen fails lamentably. It would be impossible for any author to convey a preachment from the stage without one of these two great aids. Where Ibsen and Shaw and other symbolic writers succeeded was in their inborn pre-eminence for dramatic effect. Their logic is very often wrong, their meaning many times obscure, but their technique is not to be assailed, and they are always interesting. Previously we published a synopsis of Prince Hagen. Beyond that we are not sure just what the play is all about. As to the acting, it was commendable all through. Robert Warwick, in the title part, developed the character with studied and intelligent effort. He read his lines most meaningfully. He looked the part, the graces of his personality enhanced it—and yet nothing was accomplished. And so through the long list of characters. Thomas McLarnie, George Baldwin, Chas. Clarke, Robert Homans, Gerald Harcourt, William Wolbert, Robert Leonard, Blanche Stoddard, Lillian Andrews, Beatrice Nichols, Helen Lackaye and Grace Travers played with care and intelligence, but there was, generally speaking, only a set of pictures without substance. In the matter of production, nothing more lavish and nothing more beautiful has been presented on our local stage. The music, which was a very important feature, was developed and adapted with the utmost skill by that fine musician, Herman Heller, and was probably the most satisfying feature of the show. The great trouble with these plays of purpose and symbolism is, they are apt to go far afield from their purpose, to soar above the people who go to see them, and this seems to be the result with Prince Hagen. Its message has not been truly aimed, and it is cavorting around through the great nowhere.

American

Geo. M. Cohan's rural musical play, Fifty Miles from Boston, staged originally under the personal direction of the author, has played to fine business at the American this week. The play is bright and breezy throughout, and after witnessing its production one feels that he has had his money's worth and spent his time with satisfaction. The high school boys and girls, the rural town band of Brookfield, Mass. (for there is where the plot is laid), the baseball team and its hero, the village postmistress, the female town gossip, the country landlord and the prominent citizen and storekeeper kept the mildew from absorbing the place and added sufficient spice and ginger to it to make you feel that, although fifty miles from Boston, Brookfield should be indicated on the map in warm red letters. W. Douglas Stevenson as Joe Westcott was the hero, and Hazel Lowry as Sadie Woodis, the young postmistress, was the star's lady. Chas. Willard as Nathan Westcott and Jos. M. Sparks as Tim Harrigan, did the principal funny business. The best piece of character work was by Suzanne Westford, as the village chatterbox and gossip, but we must not forget to mention the fine juvenile character work of Percy Helton. He is a promising youngster. Everybody did well, and the incidental songs were very catchy and pleasing.

Protest Against Unsafe Theatres

Our theatrical managers have filed a vigorous protest with the Board of Supervisors against the practice of permitting public amusements in unsafe structures. The protest, which was referred to the Committee on Building Laws at Monday's meeting of the Board, is in the following terms: "San Francisco, January 9, 1909.—To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco—Gentlemen: We, the undersigned citizens and taxpayers of San Francisco, hereby respectfully call the attention of your honorable Board to the fact that the spirit of the building laws of this city and county which relate to places of amusement is being evaded by the granting of permits for the operation of permanent places of amusement which do not provide for the safety of the lives of such as may patronize them. Ordinary stores in class C and other buildings downtown are being converted into places of amusement, and there is nothing to prevent the proprietors of such places packing in 1,000 or even 2,000 persons in utter disregard of the safety of their patrons. This number of people is equal to that accommodated in most class A theatres which are erected in accordance with building ordinance 31 of this city and county. A number of permanent class A theatres, complying in every respect with the building laws, are now in course of construction in the downtown district and several others are contemplated. The investment represented by each of these downtown theatres is from $500,000 to $1,000,000. We take it that the object of the building laws is not to protect only such as patronize higher-priced places of amusement, but also such as must needs attend cheaper shows. In short, in all places of amusement where the public congregate there should be alleyways and exits, sprinkling systems and generally proper fire protection. Considering all this, and further the incalculable loss which naturally would result to the business of the undersigned should there be a panic in one of these fire traps—and this is likely to occur any day—we respectfully request that your honorable Board take the necessary action to prevent the conduct of places of amusement where fire protection, as provided for by ordinance 31, is not afforded, and if sections 132 and 143 of building ordinance 31 are not strong enough in your opinion to support our contention, we pray that your honorable Board will have the building law amended so as to afford absolute safety to citizens of this community attending places of amusement. Respectfully yours,—M. Meyerfeld, Jr., president Orpheum Theatre and Realty Co.; Gottlob, Marx & Co., proprietors Van Ness and Columbia theatres; W. H. Leahy, Tivoli; Walter Hoff Seely, Valencia Theatre; S. Loverich, manager Princess Theatre; A. Cohn, American Theatre."

This protest is well taken. There can be no objection to the picture shows as a theatrical proposition, but when they are housed in small and illy ventilated store rooms, with no exits, they become a positive menace to the city. Our board of fire commissioners have been at great care to enact many foolish and utterly useless provisions governing general theatres, but in the case of the picture houses they seem to have closed both eyes and have allowed shows to be installed in veritable death traps. The Lord have mercy on the poor audience if a fire should break out in the ordinary nickelodeon.

Personals

ETHEL TUCKER, who with her husband, Whit Brandon, was touring the Northwest in The Devil, slipped on the ice at Ontario, Oregon, and sustained a compound fracture of the left leg. Miss Tucker is receiving the best of care and will remain in the Multnomah Hospital at that place until fully recovered, and where she would be glad to hear from friends. Her address is Multnomah Hospital, Ontario, Oregon.

HELEN LACKAYE had a painful experience during rehearsal of Prince Hagen at the Valencia last week. A bunch light which was suspended over the stage fell and struck her on the shoulder. She was knocked to the floor, and it was feared for a time that she was seriously injured, and hurry calls were sent for physicians. As none was found in the neighborhood, a draft was made on the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and four students responded. They took care of Miss Lackaye and carried her to her hotel. It was found that she was not seriously injured. She recovered speedily, and went on with the performance of The College Widow that night as usual.

Orpheum

Suppressing the Press is the name of a new sketch at the Orpheum this week. It is one of those screaming little farces that depends upon action more than words. Mr. and Mrs. Gene Hughes, who furnish the fun, were received with rounds of applause. Another newcomer was Anna Lichter, an old-time favorite with Tivoli Opera-goers, who sang familiar numbers from the operas Florodora, The Serenade and the Geisha. Her reception had in it that warmth which is ever reminding us that San Francisco never forgets. Wilfred Clarke, the exponent of fast farce, repeated his sketch, What Will Happen Next. The three Yoscarrys, eccentric European acrobats, are in a class by themselves. Gus Hibbert and Fred Warren, the pianist and the dancer, have been here before and were well received. The Rooney Sisters, Josie and Julia, are among the best dancers seen at the Orpheum in a long time. De Biere, the French illusionist, comes pretty close to being the most expert of any of the sleight-of-hand men who have appeared here. The performance as a whole was well worth seeing and fully repays the large audience who have attended during the week. Other acts to meet with approval are Rogers and Deeley and Les Salvaggas, dancers.

Wigwam

This week's bill had some very good acts. Head and shoulders above all farce acts is Dan Sherman and Mabel De Forrest and company, in A Jay Circus, a roar of laughter act; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Young and company in Early Days East and West, a good character sketch; John Fields, Jr., in a superior monologue turn; the Adler Trio, club jugglers; Eugene O'Rourke and company in Parlor A; Farrum, Wills and Ramsley, singers and dancers; Yamaka and company, Japanese jugglers. The engagement of James J. Jeffries, the heavyweight champion of the world, for next week at a salary of $3,000 for his week is the highest priced engagement made in vaudeville in San Francisco. Jeffries' sparring partner will be Sam Berger, another heavyweight champion. Of course people from everywhere will go to see Jeffries, so be wise and secure your seats ahead. Besides, a first-class vaudeville bill will be given, including the superior comedy of Dolph and Susie Levino, Hypnotizing a Wife, original in plot and matter and capitally acted; Joseph and Myra Dowling in A Snap Shot, a story of mistaken identity; William Thompkins, the jolly monologist; Mallon and Bart in good, uproarious fun; The Royal Musical Five, young and cultured artists; and Smith and Brown, singers and dancers.

National

Sid Grauman presented another superior bill for the National this week, that included Mr. and Mrs. Edward Esmonde in The Soldier of Propville, the best dramatic playlet in vaudeville, and about the best acted; the laugh-winning acts were the humorosities and funny stories of Cooper and the clever and piquant replies of his wife; the Kings, in the Hebrew and the Coon-Shouter, and Blacksom and Burns in their indescribably funny burlesque acrobatic act. The acts for the eye were the Five Zello Troupe, a turn of wonderful acrobatic skill, with much good comedy in it; by Tom Nelson; Alice De Garmo, as pretty as a picture in her high bar trapeze act, and Derenda and Breen in their new skilled and comic club juggling turn—the best thing they have ever done. The bill opening on Sunday has Mlle. Summerville and her dancing horse; John Birch, the Man with the Hats; Wenona, Francis & Co., rifle and pistol shots; Holmes and Hollinston, Looking for Betsy; Payne and Lee, singers and dancers; Brown and Hodges, singing cartoonists; Victorine and Zolar Sisters, grand entertainers.

Pantages-Empire

A Night with the Poets, in which a combination of twelve people give tableaux representation of scenes read aloud by a bachelor in his lone room, from James Whitcomb Riley's poems, is an artistic idea and is artistically carried out at this theatre. It has been the great feature of the show. The other turns were Nevada, a telling frontier playlet, well acted by James C. Henry and Dorothy Young; the Walthour Trio of expert trick and comedy cyclists; Boulder and Quinn, musical act, and John Rucker, the black-face comedian and singer. Next week, Manager Winstock presents the great Florenz Family, renowned European acrobats; Kohler Grand Opera Trio; Burton and Brooks, comedy sketch, The Limit; Ballard & Co., dramatic playlet, A Night Out; Brandon and Wilson, singing, dancing, lightning changes; Martinez and Martinez, Gypsy minstrels.

Washington Square

The red letter event at this theatre was the $1,000 benefit tendered to the Italian earthquake sufferers on Tuesday night. The leading society people of the Latin quarter turned out to make it a success. There are rumors that this theatre will close temporarily to make a new departure in business.

Thalia Concert Hall

This Pacific street concert hall presents besides its musical attractions, a diversity of features in its program. The Hadji Tahar Troupe of Arabian gun spinners and tumblers have been a feature this week. Professor Fait and company, hypnotists; Dale Sisters, spectacular dancers; Welch and Earl, and others appear next week.

Two More Vaudeville Theatres

The owners of the Forrest Theatre in Stockton, an A-1 balcony theatre of 1,200 capacity, have turned their house into a vaudeville theatre to open on Sunday, and play the Pantages-Western States Vaudeville Association line of attractions.

R. S. Edmonson, proprietor of the Gem Theatre in Chico, also visited San Francisco this week to arrange for opening his house in vaudeville on Monday night. Mr. Edmonson also plays the Pantages circuit people. His house is a small picture house at present and is popular in Chico.

Dolph and Susie Levino in their act Hypnotizing a Wife, were great hits at the Bell in Oakland this week. They come to the Wigwam next week.

What is the best act in vaudeville? That is a puzzling question. But there is one act out here, at the National this week, The Soldier of Propville, that in construction and in the admirable acting, voicing, facial expressions and feeling of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Esmond, wins the heartiest commendation from all sorts of people who see it. As these true artists have played in The Soldier of Propville for a continuous run of nine years now, the DRAMATIC REVIEW puts in a claim for that act as the best in vaudeville on the claims of its merits and unequalled success.

Vaudeville Notes

There will be a rush to see Jeffries at the Wigwam this week. Secure your seats ahead.

Sid Grauman's benefit tender at the Dreamland on Monday night will be an offering of the vaudeville and sporting element in aid of the sufferers by the Italian earthquake. Forty turns have volunteered. The vaudeville performance will run until 12 o'clock. The boxing bouts will follow and will include some of the best talent in the city.

Papinta, the spectacular dancer, who died in Europe over a year ago, left a stock farm near Clayton, Contra Costa county, jewelry and money in bank which has just been settled up at the appraised value of $21,058.

John Considine was in town Thursday on his way southward.

Dan Sherman's Jay Circus burlesque set all the Wigwam's attendants in peals of laughter this week. It is a fun challenger and Mabel De Forrest, ring master, is a stunning impersonation.

Tracy McDermott and Dorothy Raymond (Mrs. McDermott) have just finished a successful season of vaudeville in New York and thereabout, playing all of the William Morris time and Mozart Circuit. Now, however, they are returning to California to accept leading positions in Herr Fischer's musical comedy company in Los Angeles, opening January 19. Mr. McDermott is an old favorite at Fischer's, and he and his talented wife will be valuable additions to Fischer's already strong company.

The management of the Folies-Bergere Theatre, City of Mexico, which will be opened very shortly, is preparing for the public a veritable treat, what with the attractive program to be rendered during its first season. There will be a troupe of performing dogs and monkeys; an act entitled The Bronze Woman, which will be spectacular in the extreme; and last, but not least, Ida Fuller with her marvelous dances.

Dave Lermer, a vaudeville actor, admitted being guilty of embezzlement in Oakland last Friday week and then pleaded to be released on probation. Judge Brown listened to the man's plea and referred the case to Probation Officer Ruess for investigation. Lermer, while playing at an Oakland theatre, made the acquaintanceship of Miss Minnie Kuhnle of 122 Ninth street. Saying he wished to make a "flash" at a matinee, he borrowed a diamond ring from her, agreeing to return it the next day. Instead he went to San Diego, and there sold the ring for $140. Miss Kuhnle swore to a complaint for his arrest and he was taken back for trial. He says he was never in trouble before, and is willing to promise to be good, in future, if given another chance. "I have learned, most decidedly, that it does not pay to be bad," he declared.

Papinta's Estate

The estate of Papinta, the dancer, whose real name was Carrie Holpin, has been appraised at $21,058.77. Her ranch home, the Gregory tract of the Rancho San Miguel, worth $10,700, and jewelry valued at $1,000, form part of the estate, which is left to George and Edward Hipple, brothers, and to Mrs. Sadie Ghent, a sister. Papinta, who died in Europe last year, was interested in the breeding of fine horses on her Contra Costa farm just back of Oakland.

Grading Salaries

1-2-3- that is what the United Circuit is going to do in grading their vaudeville acts this year, regulating their salaries in the same proportion. Number 1 will play in the largest cities and at the best houses as feature acts, at big salaries. The second class will play the intermediate cities that cannot stand the high figures, and number 3 will find work in the many smaller class theatres that cannot pay number 1 and 2 salaries and live. There was a meeting of managers in New York, and others were notified by circular who could not attend, and they have all accepted the grading plan. A permanent committee of eight, to confer with the United firm, was appointed, consisting of, and representing equally, the large and small time. The members are M. Shea (Buffalo and Toronto); J. H. Moore (Rochester and Detroit); William Hammerstein, A. Paul Keith, Walter Vincent (Wilmer & Vincent); Clarke Brown (Bennett Circuit); P. Alonzo (Poli Circuit), and W. F. Tucker (New England houses), with B. F. Keith, Percy G. Williams and F. F. Procto (United Executive Board), ex-officio members.

Moving Picture Manufacturers Playing Scenes From Plays

The way with which the manufacturers of moving picture films have seized upon the big scenes in the current dramatic and musical successes, without leave or license, has aroused the producing managers of America to such an extent that application has been made to the present Congress for the passage of a bill preventing such action and preserving to the managers and authors their rights. The methods employed by the moving picture manufacturers in abstracting the potent potentialities of theatrical entertainments without quid pro quo is going to cause a great row. Henry B. Harris, one of the most prominent managers in this country, aroused by the fact that there were being exhibited scenes from his plays, such as The Lion and the Mouse, The Chorus Lady, Strongheart, Classmates, and Robert Edeson's present vehicle, The Call of the North, in moving picture houses, has requested a number of his associated managers, who have also been similarly treated, to co-operate with him in presenting to Congress a statement of the condition of affairs, and praying for just and adequate relief. The authors have also been stirred up and they, too, have asked that Congress take cognizance of this manifest evasion of the copyright law and pass a bill that will protect them to the fullest degree in their rights. By reason of the justice of the claims of the managers and authors, it is more than probable that Congress will pass such a bill, thereby preventing moving picture manufacturers from obtaining popular and valuable material as they have done in the past without paying an adequate sum therefor, or obtaining permission so to do from the proper parties.

Mrs. Carter Successful in New Play

WASHINGTON, Jan. 8.—Mrs. Leslie Carter's new play, Kassa, had its premier at the New National Theatre in this city last night. Mrs. Carter added to her fame as an emotional actress. From a scenic standpoint the production is a massive one, and Mrs. Carter's triumph in the dual role of actress-manager was complete.

McMillan Case Dismissed

Well! Well! Have Nance O'Neil and McKee Rankin Split?

NEW YORK, January 8.—Nance O'Neil announced today that she had withdrawn her power of attorney to McKee Rankin, thereby indicating that she had cut adrift from the actor whose professional lot has been cast with hers for more than ten years. Although Miss O'Neil has been recognized on the Pacific Coast as an emotional actress of great power, she was little known in New York until she one day made a hit in a stock company at the American Theatre. But the New York critics have never given her the credit her acting seemed to deserve. One of the best known of these, however, has pronounced her one of the greatest of American actresses. Miss O'Neil's most recent attempt to score a victory in New York was made at the Majestic this season in a play entitled Agnes. About this time she transferred her allegiance to the Shuberts, but still Rankin remained in the foreground. Agnes proved to be no happier a medium for the actress than The Fires of St. John and some of her earlier efforts.

1332 Sixteenth street to take up his duties, changed his mind and returned to his room and blew out his brains. Adams had been drinking heavily and was in a despondent mood Monday night when he left the theatre. He was a single man and as far as is known had no love affairs. He arose late that morning and after dressing took his breakfast and started for the theatre. He returned shortly afterward and his landlady heard a shot from the direction of his room. On entering his room she found him lying in a pool of blood with a revolver in his right hand. Although there was a deep wound in his temple he still breathed and was conveyed to the central emergency hospital. He died soon afterward. Adams was president of the San Francisco lodge of theatrical mechanics' association, an Elk and a capable and popular man. Until lately he had been temperate. James Adams, a brother, is a mechanic at the Alcazar, and has taken charge of the body. George Adams was buried by the Elks. Friends and acquaintances gathered to attend the funeral Friday, January 15 at 10:30 o'clock a. m. at the parlors of J. J. Crowley & Company, 602 Valencia street. Incineration at Odd Fellows' Cemetery followed the ceremonies at the undertakers' parlors.

Cunningham Rehearsing

Arthur Cunningham has started his rehearsals under the eye of W. T. Sheehan, who for many years was the director for Joseph Murphy. The company consists of Mr. Cunningham, H. D. Byers, Earle Gardner, Alice Condon, Gilmore Walker, George Calvert, Lillian Raymond and Grace Coyne. James Adams will be the carpenter, and Adolph Doring will be the property man. Complete new productions of The Kerry Gow and Shaun Rhue will be carried. The tour will be under the direction of Charles V. Kavanagh, and Everett L. Sackett will go in advance. The Great Western Theatrical Circuit is filling two weeks of the California time, and John Cort has booked the company over his circuit for three months, commencing February 8th, at Medford.

Burlesque and Vaudeville for Novelty

Jim Post will furnish the burlesque instead of Allen Curtis, as previously announced. Pelton & Switzer of Denver will book White Rat acts through Bert Levey. As the programme is now, the Denver proposition will open on the 24th, the Salt Lake house on the 31st, with Allen Curtis and the Novelty here on the 24th, with Jim Post.

R. PAUL HARVEY and wife (Merle Stanton) report a pleasant stock season in Santa Rosa. They have been there since August, and the only salary lost was from Mr. Richter, who had the house the first two weeks of their engagement and went into bankruptcy. The new manager, Ansel Hulbert, who took the house then, has not missed a salary night, and the Harveys expect to be there for some time, as they are both favorites of Santa Rosa, and doing some good work.

Sothorn's Portrait Gallery

The Many Different Roles the Great Actor Has Given the Stage

A hurried glance at the gallery of portraiture which Mr. Sothorn has given to the stage, discloses the fact that since he has become a star he has appeared as thirty-seven different characters. These characterizations form a wonderful chain of dramatic achievement, running the gamut from eccentric comedy to Shakespearian tragedy. His career has alternated between comedy and romantic impersonations, though five of his triumphs were tragic characters, six were Shakespearian, and besides, he has impersonated Hauptmann and Sundermann heroes as well as others in the poetic drama. In the category of his different roles can be found his appearing as the character of a New York tough in Richard Harding Davis' play, The Disreputable Mr. Reagan, and also as the burglar in Editha's Burglar. These placed beside his Hamlet, Romeo, John the Baptist or Don Quixote, give at once an idea of the far and differentiating notes he has struck in the drama. Whatever else Sothorn presents, it is the romantic drama that many of his admirers like to see him in the best, since he originated the role of Rudolph Rassendyl in The Prisoner of Zenda. His coming engagement here in a romantic role of this order, Richard Lovelace, is sure to be met with a great deal of pleasure by theatre-goers. The order of the roles which Mr. Sothorn has presented is as follows:

1—One of Our Girls; 2—Met by Chance; 3—The Love Chase; 4—A Scrap of Paper; 5—The Highest Bidder; 6—Lord Chumley; 7—The Master of Woodbarrow; 8—The Dancing Girl; 9—Captain Letterblair; 10—Sheridan; 11—The Victoria Cross; 12—The Lady of Lyons; 13—The Way to Win a Woman; 14—The Prisoner of Zenda; 15—An Enemy to the King; 16—Change Alley; 17—The Adventure of Lady Ursula; 18—The Musketeers; 19—The Song of the Sword; 20—The Sunken Bell; 21—Hamlet; 22—Richard Lovelace; 23—If I Were King; 24—The Proud Prince; 25—Romeo and Juliet; 26—Much Ado About Nothing; 27—The Taming of the Shrew; 28—The Merchant of Venice; 29—Twelfth Night; 30—John the Baptist; 31—Jeanne D'Arc; 32—The Fool Hath Said; 33—Don Quixote; 34—Lord Dundreary.

Besides these he appeared in the following five one-act plays at different times of his career: I Love, Thou Lovest, Editha's Burglar, Markheim, Drifting Apart, and The Disreputable Mr. Reagan. Next week at the Van Ness Theatre in this city Mr. Sothorn will give another addition to his portrait gallery by appearing for the first time on any stage as Richelieu. This will mark one of the greatest artistic achievements in Mr. Sothorn's career

The Decline of Melodrama

Why has the vogue of cheap melodrama declined? Seeing is believing. The five and ten-cent picture shows that have flooded the country offer complete melodramas in pictures that both talk and act, and in many minds this is the greatest cause of the apparently certain death that is facing cheap melodrama. We might say, also, in conclusion, that cheap acting, and sometimes no acting at all, is in large part responsible.

The Frank Readick Company, which has been playing "up" in Texas, is up against hard times in El Paso. In the company are Margaret Pett and Raymona Whitaker. Frank Readick, Jennie Calef and Andy Waldron.

Bob Ober and His Little Difficulty With His Eggs

Robert Ober, who plays the title role in Brewster's Millions at the Van Ness Theatre this week, is the cause of weeping and wailing in the home of an Ethiopian gentleman who, during his working hours, is a waiter. The other day Ober walked into a restaurant and said to him: "Bring me some fried eggs. I want one fried on one side and one on the other." The waiter salaamed and disappeared. In a few moments he was back. "Beg pardon, sah," said he, "but how did you want those eggs cooked?" "I want two eggs fried, one on one side and one on the other," said Ober, slowly and distinctly. Once more the dusky son of toil walked away, stayed ten minutes, and then came back, puzzled and apologetic. "Mah Gawd, sir; I can't make that thick-headed coon out in the kitchen understand how you want those eggs, no how," said he. "Won't you tell me once more?" "Two eggs fried, one on one side and one on the other," again repeated Ober, and once more the waiter went away. In a few minutes he was back, with his collar torn, necktie missing and signs of gore upon his desolate countenance. "Say, boss," he said, sadly, "you have to have those eggs boiled. I can't get 'em fried that way, no how."

Florence Roberts in New Problem Plays Continues to Pack Theatre in Portland

PORTLAND, January 11.—HEILIG THEATRE (Cal Heilig, mgr.; Wm. Pangle, res. mgr.)—Florence Roberts returned to this theatre for her annual visit to this city and offered us her new piece, The House of Bondage, by Seymour Obermeyer, for her bill. The play is of the problem order, and is very good in all respects. Miss Roberts is looked upon as one of our greatest favorites, and just advertise the fact that she is coming and that is enough to pack the house. This time, however, she collided with what is said to be the worst winter known in this State for years, and if it had been any one else than Miss Roberts, there would not have been a corporal's guard present, but as it was, the attendance at the performance was big. As is usual the star gave one of her high class, finished portrayals. Her support was good, including as it did Thurlow Bergen, Arthur Forrest, Ann Warrington and Mary Bertrand. Coming, January 11-14—The Great Divide. Ben Hur—Week of Jan. 18.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—One of the most intense and powerful of the new dramatic plays of the present time and dealing with present political conditions was presented at this theatre yesterday by the Bakeronians. The play, Masters of Men, has never been done before in this city, and it seemed to go well with the audiences present yesterday. It closely resembles The Man of the Hour. James Gleason and William Dills had the two fat parts of the production, the former plays the part of a franchise grabber, and the latter the role of a political boss. Both gave highly enjoyable performances, and the hit of the piece is made by these two gentlemen. The lady folks have not much to do, although Miss Kent gave a fine presentation of a thankless role. Next week—The Royal Family.

BAKER THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—Everybody present at the performances of Babes in Toyland at this house yesterday were of one accord, and that was that it is the best bill to date at this theatre. The piece has been here before and done well, and be it said to the credit of the managers of the show that it has not deteriorated in one respect. The leads are good in whole, and the chorus is by far the best we have had at this theatre this season. Nellie Lynch, Beth Tate, Helen MacLeod and Gene Ormonde are the principal leads of the women, and Eddie Redway, Gus Pixley, John Ward and W. H. Hatter fill the same place for the men. Next week—The Flower of the Ranch.

ORPHEUM THEATRE (C. N. Sutton, mgr.)—A very entertaining bill, indeed, was the one of the past week at this theatre, and not withstanding the extreme cold weather, attendance was big the entire week. Julia Herne was the star of last week's acts, and Jewell's manikins were by far the best we have seen along those lines. The Murray Sisters sang and danced well, and the Josselin Trio were leaders in their business. Next week—The Van Dyck; Johnny McVeigh and his College Girls; Harvey Family; the Kinsons; Seldom's Venus; Paul LaCroix; and Signor Travato.

STAR THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—Bertha M. Clay's Thorns and Orange Blossoms is the attraction at this house for this week. It seemed to please the audiences yesterday at this theatre, and no doubt will do well on the week. Marion Zimmerman gave a good performance yesterday, as did also Lois Meredith. Next week—In a Woman's Power.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—Melodrama is in its glory this week at this house where A Gambler's Devotion is being enacted. It went well yesterday to good houses. The patrons of this house like melodrama once in a while, and that is why the management offer the same. Orval Humphrey was good in the leading role and Corinne Walton made a good foil to him. Charles Connors took good care of the comedy role, and Ralph Belmont was also well cast.

GRAND THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—Sullivan & Considine's Road Show opens tonight with Buster Brown and Tige for their feature act. The balance of the company comprises Phil Staats; Emily Benner; Carson Brothers; Kerslake's Pigs; Petching Brothers and Fred Bauer.

PANTAGES has Clayton and Glenn presenting the burlesque, The Matador, as their headliner, and De-Kock Brothers, acrobats, as their specially added act. A. W. W.

No Children for Seattle Stage

Up in Seattle there is a judge on the bench who is one of those purists who evidently thinks that a child appearing on the stage is damned. T. Daniel Frawley, well known all over the Pacific Coast, was severely lectured by Judge A. W. Frater in the Superior Court there on January 8 for employing children under 15, who had no permit to remain out of school. Mr. Frawley is manager and leading man of the stock company at the Lois Theatre. He was putting on Peter Pan, and several children were employed. Judge Frater sent one twelve-year-old boy to the Parental School because Frawley had not obeyed the court's order of a week ago to keep him off the stage. Judge Frater suspended sentence on the actor, but threatened him with a fine if he ever appeared in court again.

Corinne Is Coming

Announcement is made of the engagement of Corinne, the comedienne, as star for the forthcoming season in the Klaw & Erlanger production of the McNally-Jerome-Schwartz musical composition, Lola from Berlin, at the American Theatre. The beautiful Liberty Theatre, New York City, production will be used for the road tour. Some of the cast engaged to support Corinne: Mark Sullivan, Hazel Carlton, Franklin Vail, Henry Carl Lewis, Lillie May White, Osborn Clemson, Lillian Wilson, Freddie Stott, Pearl Revare and Bunnie Ingeborg, together with an ensemble force of beautiful girls.

Chas. Dillingham for Metropolitan Finances

In connection with the engagement by the Metropolitan Opera Company directors of Charles B. Dillingham to examine the financial affairs of the Metropolitan Opera House and suggest methods for putting it on a better business basis, it was learned that the system prevailing there was so extravagant that even with subscriptions for the season amounting to about $800,000, and hundreds of thousands more taken in at the box-office, the Metropolitan will "hardly" come out more than even at the end of the season. High-priced singers who have contracts guaranteeing them a certain number of appearances for which they must be paid are seldom called on to sing. Four conductors have been engaged at large salaries and the services of some are rarely utilized. Two unusually large choruses and two large orchestras are on the pay roll, the working staff has been increased and salaries have been raised from 20 to 100 per cent. Some of the contracts taken over from Heinrich Conried when he was ousted from the management are regarded as hindrances. One gives 5 per cent of the salaries of every singer, chorister, conductor and musician engaged abroad to Emil Ledner of Berlin. Another gives Blaschke & Co. of Vienna a monopoly of providing the Metropolitan costumes. Both of these contracts run until 1911. The salaries paid some of the singers this season for each appearance are said to be as follows: Caruso, $2,000; Eames, $1,500; Sembrich, $1,500; Bonci, $1,000; Farrar, Schmedes, Destinn and Fremstad, $800 each; Burgstaller, $600; Feinhals, $750; Homer, $400; Scotti, $350; La Fonia (San Francisco soprano), $200.

London Memorial Theatre in Honor of Shakespeare

London is to have a national theatre as a memorial to Shakespeare, in which will be enacted the poet's works as well as plays by other English dramatists, living and dead. A number of large private subscriptions have already been promised and the lord mayor of London and the mayors in the provinces will be asked to open public subscriptions. A site will be selected in the heart of London and the theatre will be controlled by a board of trustees chosen from men prominent in literature, drama, music and education of the day.

Rose Melville Good Business Woman

Before she leaves Los Angeles, writes a correspondent from that city, Rose Melville expects to close a deal for a piece of property only a few minutes' walk from the retail district, upon which she purposes to erect a flat building. Miss Melville, who is playing Sis Hopkins at the Majestic this week, is a business woman as well as an actress, and her hobby, if she may be said to have one outside of her stage work and her automobile, is flat buildings. In her home town, South Bend, Ind., the finest apartment house is the Melville, which she built and still owns. She has a flat building in New York, another in Buffalo and still another in Chicago. In addition, she owns a considerable acreage of rice lands near Lake City, La., and a big ranch a few miles from Jamestown, N. D. Rose Melville is today one of the wealthiest women of the American stage. She did not make all of her money by acting, though the sums paid to her for impersonating Sis Hopkins on the stage proved the foundation for her present fortune. She is a shrewd investor and has the knack of making her money work for her. Following her second season as Sis she built that flat building in South Bend, and it has proved a profitable investment ever since. Miss Melville has been paid fully $200,000 for her share of the profits of Sis.

Pretty Peggy, the beautiful story of Peg Woffington and David Garrick, originally played by Henrietta Crossman, will follow Sherlock Holmes at the Valencia Theatre.

Charles Frohman has decided to send to this city The Right of Way. The original cast and production will be seen, with Theodore Roberts and langer's big musical comedy has proved a worthy successor to "The Merry Widow." It goes to Boston with the same comedians, Joseph Cawthorn, Billy Van and Harry Kelly, who made the entertainment famous in New York. The only changes made in the comedy since the first night were the introduction of a new song by Victor Herbert, "It Was the Irish," and the adding of a funny scene by Harry B. Smith for the comedians in which the organization of a trust is happily satirized. "Little Nemo" with its stirring marches, melodious tunes and magnificent scenic effects surpasses any spectacle or pantomime ever produced in London. Usually audiences find in this style of entertainment either music without a book or vice versa, or both music and book but no comedians. Happily, in "Little Nemo" music, book and comedians are of the highest order. The New York run ends Jan. 23, and the Boston engagement begins Jan. 25. "Little Nemo" will visit Chicago after the Boston run.

Ben-Hur has been received with as much cordiality on the Pacific Coast this season as it was on its first trip West. One of the unusual features of the present tour has been the interest shown by the rising generation of theatre-goers in the great Biblical production. Klaw & Erlanger first produced this play ten years ago. It would seem that every theatre-goer in the country had witnessed the production yet this year the audiences are larger than ever. School children have become interested in the play, flocking to the matinees in great numbers. Ben-Hur, considered merely as a play, without the chariot race, ship wreck or wonderful scene of the Mount of Olives, possesses literary value. Its success as a Biblical spectacle makes the auditor forget what a splendid library as well as acting play it is. Ben-Hur will stay another month on the Pacific Coast before the company heads eastward. Its tour for next year has already been booked.

The story of The Wolf is a new telling of the old theme founded on the struggle for the possession of a woman by two men—one of whom really loves her while the other seeks her ruin. It is said to be a play of the same intense interest as Paid in Full which was written by the same author.

Ethel Barrymore will shortly close her successful New York season at the Hudson Theatre where the star and her production of Lady Frederick have been seen by a series of immense audiences. Immediately at the close of the metropolitan engagement Charles Frohman will send Miss Barrymore on a western tour to include San Francisco where the actress is especially popular.

Ester Ferrabini, Lyric Soprano, Lambardi Opera Co., Central Theatre, next week.

a star. His tour will take in Texas, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Arizona, California, Oregon, Washington, British Columbia, Manitoba, Montana, North Dakota and Minnesota. He will appear in all these States as the hen-pecked hero of Mary's Lamb, his latest musical play. The only time Mr. Carle ever toured the far West was fifteen years ago, during his first two seasons on the stage. He was then playing such minor parts as E. Washington Strutt in A Country Sport, with the late Peter F. Dailey, and Dr. Still and Worthington in A Mad Bargain, with James T. Powers. In San Francisco Mr. Carle played at the old California Theatre.

The most delightful of presents received by Maude Adams in the holiday season was a silver vase several feet high inscribed In Memory of Rosemary. The gift was from John Drew whose leading lady Miss Adams was in that play.

Guy Standing in the two leading roles. This attraction is accounted one of the strikingly brilliant hits of the Eastern season.

Fannie Ward, the clever American actress, who has been a London vogue for several years, has captured critics and audiences alike on her first appearances in her own country in "The New Lady Bantock," a comedy by Jerome K. Jerome. Miss Ward gave the first performance of her American tour on the first day of the new year in Troy. She was received with the utmost cordiality by the Trojans. Her managers deferred judgment, however, until Chicago was reached. Here she won the unanimous praise of the critics of the reputable papers. No player or play has been received recently in Chicago so heartily as was Miss Ward in her Jerome comedy.

"Little Nemo" is playing its last two weeks at the New Amsterdam Theatre in New York. Klaw & Er-

Metropolitan Company and Oscar Hammerstein Aggregation to Combine

Upon authority not to be questioned, an operatic project for New York and other American cities that will startle the world of grand opera is announced. In a word it contemplates the combining of the forces of the Metropolitan Opera Company and of Oscar Hammerstein under the sole direction of the redoubtable Oscar himself. Mr. Hammerstein has only to say the word and this tremendous scheme will be accomplished. This announcement will be denied. Mr. Hammerstein will deny it and the directors of the Metropolitan will deny it. But it is the fact nevertheless.

French Author Brings Vigorous Defense of His Wife's Professional Honor

Maurice Maeterlinck, already in hot water with the Opera Comique and the Brussels Opera, has sued the Paris Opera in order to prevent the directors from producing Fevrier's opera based on his play, Monna Vanna. Whenever Maeterlinck's works have been produced in opera guise, he has endeavored to have his wife, Georgette Leblanc, sing the leading parts. When Pelléas et Mélisande was brought out, Debussy insisted upon giving Mélisande to Mary Garden. Maeterlinck attempted to make the performance a miserable failure by writing letters to the papers. Things were patched up when Ariane et Barbe-Bleu was presented by assigning the part of Ariane to Mme. Maeterlinck. In the Monna Vanna suit the dramatist omits the name of his wife, and declares that the opera is too large for his work. He has used every means at his command to persuade the authorities to cast his wife for the title role, and says that the composer promised that Mme. Maeterlinck should sing in the opera this week. Mme. Maeterlinck has written a letter to one of the Paris papers from which the following is an extract: "The role of Monna Vanna ought to be sung by me. We have only asked M. Fevrier for his word of honor. I have declared that I would never sing the part in any theatre in Paris, no matter how the affair turned out." To this M. Fevrier replies: "It is not exact to say that I have given my word of honor. How could I, a young musician, impose an artist on the Opera when older composers cannot do it. I resolved to ask the director to engage her to sing it. It was impossible to foresee what the director would say. It is not exact to say that Monna Vanna was composed for the Opera Comique. When the poet, through a friend, gave me permission to put his work to music, there was no question of any theatre. We worked three weeks on the book, and then I composed the music during three years. It became a question of a theatre. La Monnaie at Brussels was discussed, but Maeterlinck and his wife were not on good terms with the management. Then the Opera Comique was mentioned. Huegel, the publisher, asked M. Carré to hear it, with the stipulation that, if he accepted it, Georgette Leblanc was to create the part. M. Carré refused. I met the directors from Brussels and they likewise refused the work if Georgette Leblanc were to sing the leading part. Then I turned toward the Paris Opera. Messrs. Messager and Broussan heard the work and liked it; but when I mentioned Mme. Leblanc they said it was impossible to engage artists outside the regular company. After months of hesitation, I gave the work to the Opera. Monna Vanna will be sung there by Mme. Bréval and Messrs. Muratore, Delmas and Marcoux. At Brussels Lina Pacary will create the title role."

The Happy Marriage

Some years ago a statement was attributed to Clyde Fitch to the effect that, for a while, he would write the kind of plays the public wants to see and then, having acquired his pile, he would write the kind of play Clyde Fitch would like to see. A reading of Mr. Fitch's The Happy Marriage, which Charles Frohman will shortly produce, suggests the thought that Mr. Fitch has begun to write the kind of plays Mr. Fitch would like to see acted. The Happy Marriage is distinctly a modern, genteel comedy of ideas. It rests upon a neatly evolved corner-stone idea. The man in the play is an every-day type, the usual sort who loves his wife and no other woman, but who keeps his business and his interests in life separate from her, and who thus unconsciously builds up a barrier between himself and her. And then, with his head in his hands and unaware of his own short-sightedness, he asks himself—"I wonder if in the usual, every-day life, the woman is always a devoted little wife and mother, innately good, but spoiled by her family and brought up without a realization of the deeper duties of life." There are but five persons in the cast of The Happy Marriage, and the entire action takes place within a few hours. The play is an amusing little comedy, but underneath its humor and its satire runs without halt a serious story, an answer to a big question—what are the elements that go to make up a happy marriage? Mr. Fitch's prescription, in a phrase, is, mutual confidence, mutual toleration and mutual love.

Theatre Managers Elect Officers

In the Hotel Astor, New York City, the Association of Theatre Managers recently unanimously re-elected the following yearly officers: Charles Burnham, who has been president of the association for two years; vice-presidents, Henry B. ## Hammerstein Will Have Grand Opera in English at Popular Prices

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—Oscar Hammerstein announced tonight at the Manhattan Opera House that, beginning August 10 next, he will give eight months of opera in the season instead of only five months. Hammerstein has called the new departure "educational grand opera." Opera will be given at prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.50. Popular-priced opera will run from August to October 15th, when regular subscription prices will go into force for the remainder of the season. Some of the operas will be sung in English, this being a new departure at the Manhattan.

Hammerstein's intention is to give first-class opera at prices within the reach of everybody. At present grand opera in New York is too expensive for many who would like to attend. An entirely new array of stars will be engaged. These artists are now being secured in Europe. It is intended to have singers for the preliminary season who never have been heard before in this country. Among those already engaged are John McCormack, an Irish tenor, and William Hedmont, an English tenor, and with these men it will be possible to give many of the operas in English.

Hammerstein, when the regular season opens, will form an auxiliary Manhattan Opera House company, which will make a Western tour. Hammerstein says that, with this longer season a highly trained chorus can be developed in this country as choristers will have practically steady employment. Under the present conditions choruses must be secured from Europe.

Mary Garden Resents Another Playing One of Her Parts

NEW YORK, Jan. 20.—Mary Garden sent the following letter to Oscar Hammerstein today:

"My Dear Mr. Hammerstein. On Monday afternoon, when you told me you had engaged Mme. Cavalleri to sing Thais, I said to you that the day the special announcement was made in the newspapers that she would sing Thais I would leave the Manhattan Opera House. This morning the announcement appeared and accordingly I hereby send you my resignation.

"MARY GARDEN."

Because she was disgruntled over the engagement of Madame Cavalleri to sing the part of Thais in the French opera of that name Mary Garden, one of Hammerstein's most prominent song birds sent him the above letter. She sent the letter about 2 o'clock to the Manhattan Opera House from her home, and after having waited a sufficient time for an answer to be returned she packed her clothes in a satchel and took a train up the State.

Hammerstein authorized the following statement, after declaring that Miss Garden had not resigned: "In relation to my contracts with my artists, I generally make two of them, one a written one, the other an unwritten one. The latter is based upon mutual respect and loyalty. Miss Garden has ever been loyal and faithful to me. Our relations are of the most friendly character. If the occurrence has caused her anguish I deem it my duty to remove the cause."

The doughty Nat began to get busy with the gloves a few days ago, and today a rumor went out that he was training for the prize ring.

THE long and successful engagement of Robert Warwick as leading man at the Valencia Theatre is drawing to a close and his final appearances in San Francisco will be made in "When Knighthood Was in Flower" and "A Contented Woman."

WRITING from Los Angeles a professional says: Nat Goodwin, bridegroom of a few weeks, is seeking the fountain of youth with a course of athletic training that is startling the actor's neighbors in Ocean Park because of its strenuousness. It will soon interest not only the beach natives, but also those of the Pasadena and Santa Anita districts, for Goodwin expects to cover a lot of ground, and particularly these sections, in his exercises. He has engaged Billy Roche, the San Francisco fight referee and athletic instructor, to superintend his anti-fat curing operations, and says he will spare no pains to get back his youthful slenderness and agility. Special routine work, horseback riding, bag punching and many other stunts, taking hours daily, are expected to produce the magical results desired.

Samuel Freedman

The advance agent of the day is of necessity a man of resource—of great ability. To successfully advance the interests of a star or company means more than a strict attention to routine. It means taking advantage of every favorable opportunity to blazon wide the path of publicity. This constant wideawakeness begets a resourcefulness that is very useful in many walks of life. Sam Freedman, ahead of E. H. Sothorn, is a good example of a theatrical agent who can find other interests to his own financial betterment. During the season Mr. Freedman is directing the Sothorn propaganda. The season over, off go the glad rags, the agile pencil habit, the dreams of "layouts," half pages, etc., and in their place the old clothes, the big boots and a plunge into Death Valley, where he has a mine. His nearest neighbor is ten miles away, and the thermometer goes up to 130 every summer. A summer in the valley means flirting with death—but Sam means to win out a golden plenty—and we hope he will. THE DRAMATIC REVIEW's special artist caught the miner-showman in front of his diggings last summer, and the picture is a good one.

Californians at Hot Stuff Dance

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—Mr. and Mrs. Jackson Gouraud gave an "international dance" in the ballroom of the Cafe Martin tonight. Everybody went masked and many queer costumes were worn. Leading opera singers attended, as well as scores of stage beauties from Broadway. Gouraud and his wife received their unidentified guests as they pranced into the ballroom in amazing and amusing attire. After 11 o'clock Salome dances became the "proper caper." When wine had been passed around some of the guests grew hilarious. Mrs. Gouraud was attired as an Indian princess. She wore a green dress elaborately embroidered with gold lace, and a fine necklace of pearls. Jackson Gouraud was dressed as a rajah. His face was painted a delicate olive tint and his features given an Oriental look. The Mizner brothers, Wilson and Addison, contributed to the gayety by doing some remarkable dancing stunts.

Odette Valery, a dancer from Paris who performed in pantomime in scant attire at the Manhattan Opera House, gave her conception of Salome's terpsichorean feats. Among many at the masquerade were Edna Wallace Hopper, dressed as Pierrot, in black and white; Dorothy Russell, Lillian Russell's daughter; Vernona Jarbeau, and Jesse Lewisohn, the wealthy racing man.

Personals

MAY BOLEY has been engaged for the new Princess musical stock.

MELVILLE MARX of the Columbia Theatre is the proud father of a son, born a few days ago.

ALTA PHIPPS and Kernan Cripps have retired from the Novelty Theatre stock of Fresno.

EDITH MASON, who was recently operated upon for appendicitis, is surely regaining her strength.

JOE DAILEY left last Monday for New York, where he may soon be seen in one of the Clyde Fitch pieces.

VAIL HOBART has returned from Texas, where she had been playing with the Streeter-Bryan company.

ANITA FITZGERALD, one of the original Lamont Sisters, died last week. She was a sister of Mildred Fitzgerald.

HARRY FRASER and Harry Bradley have been signed by Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch company through Menzel's Agency.

SUSIE HOWARD was made an honorary member of Salt Lake Lodge, No. 38, T. M. A., recently, during the stay of the Jose company in that city.

ROSE PLUMER is a member of the Rock Island, Ill., stock company, which also numbers two other Californians, Will Chapman and Leo Cooper.

JACK McCARTY, the popular box-office man, who has long been connected with Will Greenbaum, the concert manager, is lying very ill at his home with pneumonia.

JOSEPH LUCKETT has come out direct from New York to take up the advance work for Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch company, which got in from Australia last Saturday.

E. H. SOTHERN's production of Richelieu will be found one of the most elaborate seen at any time in America. The scenic and costume effects will be found extremely fine.

CARL AHRENDT, a well-known actor, is dead in Greenville, Miss. Ahrendt had played with Forrest, Booth, McCullough and others of the old school. During Mr. Cleveland's first administration Ahrendt was consul at Berlin.

WILLIAM J. MCCLURE, who hails from Pennsylvania, has engaged for himself and family a cottage at 124 Golden Avenue, Long Beach, for a term of months. Mr. McClure has for twenty years been engaged in the theatrical business.

MRS. MARY L. FAY, widow of the late Philip S. Fay, died last week at her residence, 834 Grove Street, of heart failure. Mrs. Fay was the mother of Maude Fay, the grand opera soprano, who is creating a furore in Berlin.

It was learned Monday night that Clara Morris, who has been ill for a long time, is in a serious condition. A nervous breakdown caused her illness. Miss Morris who in private life is Mrs. Frederick C. Harriott, is at her home in Yonkers, N. Y. She is 60 years old.

EUGENE WALTER, the author of The Wolf and Paid in Full, has just had his latest work produced by Francis Starr under the management of David Belasco. The play is called The Easiest Way. Walter has also written a play for Eleanor Robson.

LILLIAN BLAUVELT, the American prima donna, has been engaged as leading soprano at the Mendelssohn centenary concert, to be held in Albert Hall, London, February 12. She will then proceed to New York, appearing at Carnegie Hall February 17.

HARRY GIBSON, who came to the Coast recently as advance agent for In Wyoming, has been transferred to Papa's Boy company, owing to the closing of In Wyoming. Papa's Boy is now playing Northern California and will soon be headed for the South.

A bulletin issued Tuesday morning in London says that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, the author of Sherlock Holmes, had passed a restless, painful night. This was the first public intimation that he had undergone an operation on January 10. The operation was for a painful though not a serious internal affliction.

ERNEST SHUTER, formerly manager for Mary Shaw, and who has made Los Angeles his home for the past year, is organizing a company in that city to present a new play on the road. It is probable that Katharine Kirkwood, formerly a member of the Burbank stock company, will play the leading feminine role.

McKEE RANKIN is to return to vaudeville, in company with Jeffreys Lewis, in a condensed version of The Mighty Dollar, which Mrs. Florence played in the West sixteen years ago.

RUSSELL & DREW are shortly to present James Keane and his stock company in Seattle. Jim made a big hit there once with Fabio Romani and he can't forget it.

GEORGE R. MATISON is being featured in Pelton & Smutzer's The Lieutenant and the Cowboy company that will soon be in California. Others in the company are George D. Reno, Geraldine Vaughan, Wm. H. Wag, LeRoy M. Vincent, Arthur Fitzgerald, Myrtle Bruce, John Hogan, Lorraine Keene, Frederick Silbki, A. M. Beamish and Mable Gordon.

WILLIAM BROWN, a veteran actor, known on the stage as Duncan MacMillan, was sent to San Quentin on January 5 from Bakersfield, for forging a check of $40. He got four years. Brown is 73 years of age. He stole a Masonic seal from a Colorado lodge and used the seal to make fake receipts by means of which he palmed himself off as a poor Mason in distress.

THE funeral of Charles Henry Gilman, the father of Maybelle Gilman Corey, who died Monday afternoon of last week at the Hahnemann Hospital, was held two days later from the undertaking parlors at 2198 Geary Street. Following the funeral the remains were shipped to Sacramento for interment, the former residence of the family, where Gilman, prior to his financial reverses, was a prosperous merchant.

JOHN A. INCE, the veteran comedian, who had appeared with Edwin Booth, Barrett, McCullough, Adelaide Neilson, Clara Morris and Mrs. John Drew, died Monday at his home at Sheepshead Bay. Mr. Ince was 68 years old and was born in England. When a boy he got employment on an English battle-ship as "powder monkey" and landed in California when the gold craze was at its height, and by carrying tools for the miners made enough money to enable him to attend the Jesuit College at San Francisco.

ARTHUR WILLIAMS, ahead of The Wolf, is in town. Mr. Williams gives out the pleasing information that the tour of his company has been one long succession of triumphs.

CORONER B. J. KLOTZ of Vallejo will not administer on the estate of Archibald Clavering Gunter, the famous playwright, who will be remembered for Potter of Texas and Barnes of New York, and who died a short time ago. Judge Devlin has revoked his letters of administration appointing Peter Cook, nominee of the widow of the deceased. Gunter left several thousand acres of land near Rio Vista, worth about $15,000. This is but a small portion of his estate, the residue being located in various parts of the United States.

"I CONFESS," said Charles B. Hanford, "that I enjoy the opportunity to play both Leontes and Autolycus in The Winter's Tale, just as Miss Drofnah enjoys playing Perdita as well as Hermione. Every actor enjoys testing his versatility; yet I can remember when a star with whom I was associated in my youth fell into a towering rage because the management insisted in doubling either of these characters. He regarded it as an evidence of economy. Which shows what a difference it makes whether you do something because you want to or because you have to."

JUDGE ELLSWORTH, by sustaining a demurrer in Oakland last Monday, practically set aside the suit of McKee Rankin and Nance O'Neil to recover $350 from Harry Bishop, manager of Ye Liberty Theatre. Miss O'Neil played an engagement at the Ye Liberty last spring and claimed that Bishop withheld the money from her salary. Bishop admitted this, but explained that it represented the royalty on one of the plays produced by Miss O'Neil. He said that her manager represented that the play was a non-royalty one. Later it developed that Charles Swickard owned the rights and Bishop says he paid the money to him.

Teddy Hartman Viciously Assaulted

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 20.—Ferris Hartman, whose opera company is at the Grand, was unable to appear in Police Judge Rose's court yesterday to confront Samuel Dugan, whose arrest he had caused on a charge of battery. Attorney Jud Rush, representing Mr. Hartman informed the magistrate that his client was unable to get out of bed. Dugan, who was a member of the Los Angeles Police Department several years ago and is employed at a poolroom in the daytime and acts as a special policeman at the Mason Opera House at night, was represented by Attorney Frank Dominguez. Dugan pleaded not guilty. His trial was set for January 29. The magistrate refused to release the defendant upon his own recognizance, and fixed his bail at $50. Dugan has been in trouble before, having once during his term as policeman assaulted an innocent party and served a term in State's prison. It is understood that he insulted one of the ladies of Hartman's company, and, upon Hartman remonstrating, the assault ensued.

Correspondence

New York, Jan. 13.—David Warfield, back from a tour of the country that extended to the Pacific Coast, last Monday appeared in The Music Master before a very large audience at the Academy of Music. He had an enthusiastic welcome in Charles Klein's play and received many curtain calls throughout the evening. Other members of his company, including Marie Bates, Antoinette Perry, Antoinette Walker and Taylor Holmes, were recognized and applauded. Mr. Warfield as the lovable old music master played his now famous role as though it were the first instead of the thousandth odd performance, while Marie Bates as Miss Houston, the boarding-house keeper, well earned the applause that went over the footlights to her. There have been no noticeable changes in the large company since it was seen at the Stuyvesant Theatre last season. * * * Olga Nethersole, having put aside her repertoire of familiar plays, appeared for the first time last Monday in Washington at the Columbia Theatre in a new play by an American author. It is called The Handwriting on the Wall, and is by William J. Hurlbut, a young writer from Indiana, whose first play was written only last year. The Fighting Hope, in which Blanche Bates portrays modern American life and the struggle to accumulate wealth by any and all means. Miss Nethersole appears as Barbara Lawrence, "a New York society woman interested in philanthropy and tenement reform." She is assisted in this work by Lincoln Schuyler, a young lawyer. * * * Frances Starr, whom David Belasco promoted to stellar honors in The Rose of the Rancho, last week in the Belasco Theatre, Washington, gave the first local performance of Eugene Walter's latest play, The Eastest Way, produced a short time ago in Boston. The audience seemed deeply interested.

* * * Last Monday night's performance of Peggy Macree, given by Joseph O'Mara and his company in the Broadway Theatre, was seen by a theatre party of three hundred members of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, who gave the star a hearty welcome when he made his first appearance and applauded him throughout the evening. Members of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, many of whom were in the audience, paid a pretty compliment to Adrienne Augarde by presenting a huge basket of flowers which towered above the young actress' head. After the play Mr. O'Mara was the principal guest at a supper given for him at Delmonico's by the prominent Irish residents of New York, who had made up the theatre party to see his performance. * * * The play Harrison Grey Fiske has obtained for Mme. Bertha Kalich, which was written by Professor Thomas Dickinson, a member of the faculty of the University of Wisconsin, will be produced in Washington early in February under the title of The Unbroken Road. Mme. Kalich, who is now on the road in Mme. Fred de Gresac's play, Cora, will conclude her tour in Cleveland next Saturday night and return to New York to begin rehearsals.

* * * Ada Dwyer, who has been playing the title role in Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch in Australia, is now on the Manchuria, which is bringing her to San Francisco from the Antipodes. On her arrival in San Francisco Miss Dwyer will start immediately for New York to begin rehearsals of one of the important roles in Eleanor Robson's new play, The Dawn of Tomorrow, which is to be produced in the Lyceum Theatre on January 25. * * * Constance Collier, now appearing with William Gillette in Samson at the Criterion Theatre, has been re-engaged for next season by Charles Frohman. He has assigned her to play the role of the Duchess de Croucy in Henri Bernstein's new play, Israel, now being acted in Paris by Mme. Rejane. Israel will be produced in New York next October, after which it will be presented in London. * * * Joe Weber and his seventy merry-makers will return to Weber's Theatre for a two weeks' engagement next Monday, with matinees on Wednesdays and Saturdays. Mr. Weber has provided a most elaborate production for The Merry Widow and The Devil, which is the title of his offering this season. This season the Joe Weber company includes Blanche Ring, Walter Jones, Albert Hart, Grace Griswold, Lillian Fitzgerald and Charles J. Ross, not to mention the diminutive comedian himself ROB ROY.

New Orleans, Jan. 9.—Tulane Theatre—Miss Eleanor Robson and her superb company, presenting her latest success Vera the Medium, filled a highly artistic and successful engagement. From here Miss Robson & Co. go direct to New York to start rehearsals of her new play, The Dawn of a Tomorrow, which will open in the metropolis. Vera the Medium gives an interesting plot woven around high society whose doings are always interesting to the general mass of humanity. All the characters have a distinct individuality and fill in admirably with the work of the star, whose rendition was brilliant. No great strenuous work is required of Miss Robson but her glorious voice and scholarly attainments worked mightily upon the sympathies of her audience. Thru the courtesies of Liebler & Co., Miss Robson and her Co. and Tom Campbell, local manager of Klaw & Erlanger, an extra matinee was given Friday for the benefit of the Italian sufferers, which was a big success. Miss Robson was the recipient of a magnificent basket of flowers as a testimonial to her charity. The supporting cast was great and included William Courtleigh as leading man, whose work was excellent; Frank Gamison as Judge Gaylor, Roy Fairchild as Doctor Rainey, Brandon Hurst as Prof. Paul Vance, Arthur Barry as Garrett, and Geo. LeGuere as Mannie Day, the latter a New Orleans boy whose clever easy impersonation was received with much favor and gives promise of a bright future. Next week, Blanche Walsh; 17, The Clansman, The Virginian, one of the strongest of present-day melodramas, has played to full houses all week. The company is up to a high standard with W. S. Hart and Frank Campan in the leading roles. Both are artists of proven records—the former as the clean-cut Virginian, brave and manly; the latter as the crafty greaser, whose every step and gesture are the highest degrees of art. Miss Mabel Wright handles the role of Molly Wood with grace and loveliness. Bennett Masson, Chas. R. Gilbert, Harry Holliday and Harry Linker are entitled to distinctive mention. Next week, Rosabel Morrison in Faust; 17, The Time, the Place and the Girl.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 17.—Salt Lake Theatre (Geo D. Pyper, Mgr.)—The original Sis Hopkins is the attraction for the present week. Sis Hopkins is an excellent play and drawing well. Rose Melville is an excellent actress and does herself credit in her character in Sis Hopkins. Colonial Theatre (R. A. Grant, Mgr.)—The Colonial Theatre has just passed through the most successful week of its career. Mr. Mack in The Girl from the Golden West plays his part well but the striking feature of the play is the excellent manner in which the minor characters are carried out. If the old saying, "A chain is no stronger than its weakest link," may be applied to a play, it may be said that The Girl from the Golden West has no weak link and is as uniformly strong as the proverbial "One Hoss Shay." For the present week Prince Karl is being played by the same company. After this week's engagement the company will go to the Lyceum Theatre where it will play indefinitely. The present bill at the Orpheum is strong and is headed by Salt Lake's Imperial Male Quartette. The rest of the numbers are good. Grand Theatre (John Held, Mgr.)—Theodore Lorch returns again to the Grand playing The Lieutenant and the Cowboy. Mr. Lorch is supported by a good company.

Laramie, Wyo., Jan. 18.—Theodore Lorch & Co. at Opera House last Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Good attraction, but only fair business. 14, The Cowboy's Girl to good business. Small company, but good show. The Great Divide Jan. 26.

Douglas, Ariz., Jan. 15.—Louise Marshall, leading woman for the Sanford-Dodge Company, returned a couple of days ago from St. Paul, where she had attended the funeral of her mother. She had hardly stepped from the train at Douglas before she received a telegram that her father had died the day before. So she returned at once to St. Paul, accompanied by her sister, Elinor Marshall, also a member of the Sanford-Dodge Company.

San Bernardino, Jan. 17.—There were 1200 people thronging the Unique Theatre last night, one of the biggest and merriest crowds on record, and every one of them went away feeling that they had received one of the most captivating treats of the season. "We Are King," played by Edmund Carroll, was the attraction, and the way the play pleased those present assures the troupe a big house again should they ever come this way. Too much can hardly be said in praise of the performance.

San Bernardino, Jan. 19.—At the Opera House, 15, Rose Melville and her supporting company presented Sis Hopkins to a crowded house; everybody went home immensely pleased except those who were turned away for lack of seating capacity. 18, Chas. Hanford and Marie Drofna presented A Winter's Tale to a good house. While the entire supporting company is good, Gertrude Fowler deserves especial commendation for the forceful and capable manner in which she interpreted the role of Paulina; of course Miss Drofna and Mr. Hanford were highly satisfactory in the rendition of their double roles (Hermione and Perdita, and Leontes and Autolycus respectively), and after witnessing this excellent production one cannot fail to wonder why A Winter's Tale has not been more universally presented to the lovers of Shakespeare. Coming, A Stubborn Cinderella, 21; The Lion and the Mouse, 23; The Wolf, Jan. 27. The Unique is doing good business and the management is contemplating the installation of a gallery to accommodate the nightly crowds.

San Jose, Dec. 20.—At the Victoria, Brewster's Millions was the attraction last Monday to good house. At the Garden the stock company is presenting The Rose of the Rancho. Next week The Vagabond Prince, a new play by Martin V. Merle. At the Jose the vaudeville bill consists of The World's Comedy Four, singers and dancers; Baptiste and Franconi, head walkers; Martini and Rossi, operatic vocalists; Thomas and Payne, roller skate dancers; Farnum, Wills and Ransley in singing and dancing, and a special added attraction, Chas. Gunn & Co., in his own original sketch, R U Peoria. Future bookings are Uncle Tom's Cabin, Feb. 24, A Stubborn Cinderella Feb. 26, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch Feb. 28.

Grass Valley, Cal.—In Wyoming played here on the 16th giving satisfaction. The company played Nevada City on the 15th.

Lompoc, Cal.—Lompoc Opera House (Perry Banks, Mgr.)—Week of Jan. 11, Ed Redmond Company. Excellent company, Petaluma, Jan. 19.—Hill Opera House (J. R. Roche, lessee)—Tuesday evening, Jan. 12, in Wyoming was on the boards. This was by far the finest Western play seen here this season and drew a good house. Saturday and Sunday, Jan. 16 and 17, the Cooley company showed to good business. Why Girls Leave Home is billed for Thursday night of this week. J. R. BOOTH.

Houquiam, Jan. 6.—The chorus girls with the Babes in Toyland company refused to sing here last evening, owing to the absence of heat in the theatre. "Dye think we're Eskimos?" asked one disgruntled miss, while her teeth chattered. "Just think of dancing in tights on an iceberg." Aberdeen, Wash., Jan. 5.—Mabel Brownell of The Great Divide company, which played here last night, is in a serious state of nervous collapse. In one of the front rows of the theatre during the performance there was a couple that talked almost continually, in whispers and undertones that could not only be heard all around them, but on the stage as well. Miss Brownell became exceedingly nervous, and at the end of the performance she collapsed in her dressing room. A physician was hurriedly summoned and she revived under his ministrations. She was so weak she could scarcely reach her hotel.

Eugene, Ore., Jan. 12.—Why Girls Leave Home, Eugene Theatre, 7, to fair business. A very morbid offering. Florence Roberts played to standing room tonight in the House of Bondage and incidentally scored an artistic triumph. It's the best thing she has done here. Joseph Jefferson in Rip Van Winkle booked for 15th.

Tacoma, Wash., Jan. 9.—Freezing weather, combined with deep snow, has not been favorable for theatregoing this week, consequently business has not been all that it should have been at the local playhouses. Playing at the Pantages Theatre this week with his daughter and son-in-law, who as Clayton and Green present The Matador, is Will Visscher, an old-time resident here, and who in the early nineties was editor of The Morning Globe when it employed such men as the Hon. John Barrett; Charles Dryden, the sporting writer, and other well-known writers. Col. Visscher is the author of many well-known poems, sketches, etc., and was last season with Clay Clement.

Aurora, Aubrey of Tacoma, who made such a hit as Nancy in a local production of Martha, and who has this season been a member of the McRae stock company, has joined the Babes in Toyland company. Miss Aubrey has undeniable talent, voice, good looks, fetching mannerisms, and a great future is predicted for her by her admirers. Alden Jewell, with the Louis James company, was the guest of friends during the Peer Gynt engagement. Mr. Jewell grew up in Tacoma and has many friends here. Babes in Toyland at the Tacoma Theatre, Jan. 3-4, was not up to the standard of the production given here three seasons ago. Nellie Lynch and John F. Ward are still with the company. Eddie Redway was funny, but funnier than his lines was his gaying of Tacoma's deficiencies in the matter of theatregoing, etc. The real hit of the show was Gus Pixley, who sings and dances well. Jan. 8-9, Louis James with an excellent supporting company, prominent among whom are Abbie James and Laura Frankfield, presented the much-talked-of Peer Gynt, which proved a decided novelty. The incidental music was charming and the production an artistic success. Jan. 10-11, Thomas Jefferson in Rip Van Winkle; 16, The Devil's Auction; 30, Mme. Galski. Allen Holuber as Basil Jennico came near being the whole show in The Pride of Jennico as produced by the McRae players, and he scored a personal triumph. Robert Lawrence, Denton Vane and John McCabe gave good accounts of themselves in prominent roles, and Miss Brighton as the princess and Miss Llewellyn as the gypsy girl were seen to advantage. Next week, Mrs. Temple's Telegram. Henry McRae has enjoyed several hunting trips during the snowy weather. At the Pantages the De Koch Brothers, equilibrists, have one of the best acts seen in Tacoma. The skit of Renfrew and Jensen is novel, as is that of Clayton Green and company, who carry five people.

The Southern Quartet pleased with their darkest songs and Leonard Kane does some artistic dancing. Week of Jan. 11, Kresco and Fox, Prattling Pals; Hickmon-Miller company; Jack Atkins, monologist; McCann and Grant and Hodges and Launchmen; Thaleror's Dog and Pony Show. At

Alcazar

That gem of clever acting and artistic staging, Sweet Kitty Bellairs, will be started on its third consecutive week at the Alcazar next Monday evening, and the unabated public eagerness to witness it makes the management decline to predict just when its run will end. No play in Alcazar history, with the exception of The First Born when first presented, has created more of a furore than this Belasco triumph. That it would exceed the customary stay of seven days was assured after its initial performance, for every one who then saw it went forth to sound its praises, and so it was with each succeeding audience. While the work of Evelyn Vaughan in the title part is more largely responsible than anything else for the play's retention on the stage a third week, the work of the other acting principals, the luxurious costumery and the scenic effects and the clever situations and bright lines of the play itself must be taken into consideration as important factors in the whole attractiveness. The Crisis, one of James K. Hackett's most notable successes, is announced to follow Sweet Kitty Bellairs.

Orpheum

Harrison Hunter, who is recognized as one of the best all-round actors on Broadway and whom an eminent Eastern critic has aptly described as an artist to the tips of his fingers, will make his first vaudeville appearance in this city this Sunday afternoon. He will appear in a tragic comedy entitled The Van Dyck, which is an adaptation by Cosmo Gordon Lennox from the French original of Eugene Fournier Perinque, and has proved a great success in London and in this country. Mr. Hunter will have the assistance of Frank Reicher and Gerald King. The Harvey Family, who have long been recognized as great wire artists, will be another novel feature. The troupe consists of three women and two men, and their performance is most remarkable. The Sisters Murray, Marion and Victoria, possessed of beauty and talent will sing American songs. Until this season they were conspicuous in support of Fritz Scheff in Mlle. Modiste. Next week will be the last of the Chadwick Trio. With this program Howard and Lawrence, Jewell's Manikins, the Josselin Trio and Julie Herne and her company will close their engagements. A series of original and particularly amusing Orpheum motion pictures will finish what promises to be one of the best vaudeville shows ever presented in this city.

Valencia

Although William Gillette's thrilling dramatization of Sherlock

Holmes has made such a hit that it could easily run for another week the final performances will be given Sunday afternoon and evening, and on Monday night Paul Kester's famous historical romantic play, When Knighthood Was in Flower, will be given a sumptuous production. Robert Warwick as heroic Charles Brandon will have a dominating role which he should fill admirably, and Blanche Stoddard, as sweet and plucky Mary Tudor will have a part that will fit her like a glove. Thomas MacLarnie will have a splendid opportunity of showing his versatility as King Henry VIII, and Darrell Standing, who directs the stage with such intelligence, will have another strong character bit in Cardinal Wolsey. Chas. Dow Clark will be Will Sommers, the king's jester. Gerald Harcourt will be in his element as Sir Edwin Cas-koden, master of the dance, and Helen Lackaye should make a stately Queen Katherine. George B. Baldwin, Jr., Robert Homans, Thomas Lowell, Robert Leonard and William Wolbert and Beatrice Nichols, Peggy Monroe, Grace Travers and Antoinette Crawford will all be congenially cast. The scenic effects will be notably fine and the costumes a feast for the eye, while the incidental music by Heller's orchestra will be delightful. A Contented Woman, Charles Hoyt's great satire on woman suffrage will follow When Knighthood Was in Flower at the Valencia.

American

Florence Roberts and her company will give their last performances of The House of Bondage this Saturday and evening, and at the Sunday matinee, Thomas Jefferson, son of a worthy sire, will begin an engagement, limited to one week, in the great American classic, Rip Van Winkle. Mr. Jefferson's production is most complete, nothing being left undone from a scenic or costume standpoint to please the eye, and his supporting company is of the best. Corinne, in Lola from Berlin, will follow Rip Van Winkle at the American.

TRUE BOARDMAN and Willard Clawson joined James Keane in Eureka.

the Grand Buster Brown and his dog Tige created many laughs. Young Phelps as Buster is a bright chap. Emilie Benner, the female baritone, made a decided hit with her excellent singing. Pitching Brothers pleased with a novelty musical act, as did Phil Staats, who makes the piano talk. Carson Brothers gave a skillful exhibition of strength, with a unique stage setting that lent beauty to the act. Week of Jan. 11: Earl Gerdeller and company; Halliday and Curley in a military travesty; Margaret Severance and company; Carson and Herbert, acrobats; Connolly, Wenrich and Connolly, in singing and dancing specialties. The Savoy Theatre, the home of melodrama, will offer next week The King and Queen of Gamblers. A. H.

Long Beach, Jan. 10.—A change in the management of the Bentley Grand Theatre has been announced. Judge Bentley, who built the theatre, having taken over the stock of Robert Scott of Minneapolis, Minn. Judge Bentley is expected to arrive here shortly to take over the responsibility of the Bentley stock company's management. Business continues rather discouraging.

Oakland, Cal., Jan. 20.—A great week for music lovers! At the Macdonough, the Lombardi Grand Opera Company is playing a week's engagement, presenting a series of old-time favorite operas that is delighting all who have a tendency toward classic opera. They have a large chorus, fine orchestra, and the principals are too well known to need any comment. The audiences have been appreciative and responsive, and the excellent singing was thoroughly enjoyed at every stage. Lucia di Lammermoor was the initial production, followed, Tuesday evening, by La Boheme. Both were given a faultless rendition. Tammanti Zavaski and Elvira Campoli have so far scored the honors. Probably the greatest event of the season in the musical line was the concert given, 20th, at the Liberty by Madame Galski. The celebrated artist was greeted with a packed house. The audience went into raptures at her singing, and the encores were hearty and frequent. Florence Roberts comes to the Macdonough next week. At Ye Liberty, Bishop's players are scoring another success in the celebrated emotional drama, Tess of the D'Urbervilles. The company is exceptionally well cast for the play and especially is this so in the case of Isabelle Fletcher. Miss Fletcher always shows up well in emotional characters, and her rendition of the difficult role of Tess is the best thing that she has done for some time. Landers Stevens, as the bad man of the play, makes an excellent villain, while as a lover, Geo. Friend is natural and life-like. Georgia Cooper and Lilian Elliott do well. The Wrong Mr. Wright will follow. Gus Edwards' Schoolboys and Girls are still making an immense hit at the Orpheum. The balance of the bill shows a decided variety, and in spite of the severe weather the patronage still continues large. The rest of the bill is composed of Wilfred Clarke and Company; Debire, the illusionist; Murray Sisters; Five Salvaggis; Rooney Sisters; Hibbert and Warren; Rogers and Deely; Gus Edwards' Schoolboys and Girls. The Soldier of Propville is proving a great attraction at the Bell, and in conjunction with the following is affording good entertainment: The Two Coopers; The Zello Troupe; Herbert Cyril;

Grace and Edwin Keough. Rose Stephens, a charming soprano, is the star feature of an excellent bill at the Novelty. The other numbers are: El Dora. The Turn of the Tide, and the Chinese magician. During Richard Hotelling's engagement at Ye Liberty in February, Landers Stevens and Georgia Cooper will take a well-earned rest. Katherine Goodson gives a piano recital at Ye Liberty, 23, and McKenzie Gordon a concert, Feb. 12. LOUIS SCHEELINE.

San Diego, Cal.—Garrick Theatre (Morosco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.): 17-18. The Lion and the Mouse was greeted by two large and enthusiastic audiences, 19-20. A Stubborn Cinderella. This is one of the classiest musical shows that has visited us this current season, and the house was packed at both performances. Homer B. Mason, in the leading part of Mac, kept the house in a continual roar of laughter and proved that he is a comedian of the first water. Credit must also be given for a portion of the fun to Lincoln Plummer as the fat boy. Harry Paul as Skeeter did some clever dancing of the George M. Cohan order. Grace Edmund, as Lady Leslie, scored a big hit. There is considerable local color to the piece, as the last act is laid in the Natatorium of our big hotel across the bay—the Hotel del Coronado. The chorus is large and composed of pretty and shapely girls who can sing and dance. The music is of the catchy sort. The scenery and costumes are gorgeous. In a word, it is one of the treats of the season. 22-23, with special matinee, Chas. B. Hanford in The Winter's Tale; Much Ado About Nothing; Othello. 31, A Night on the Boardwalk. Pickwick Theatre (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.): Myrtle Vane Company, in the Kew Gardens, week of January 18th. Excellent production, good business. Queen Theatre (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.): Vaudeville—Zalinda, slack-wire artist; Marro David, Italian singer; Harry M. O'Connor & Co., in The Thoroughbred and the Lady; Fanny Frankel, singing act; The Elwoods, song and dance artists; Poly and Ethel Hazel in sketch, Pink Tea. Latest moving pictures. Excellent show and business. Grand Theatre (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.): Hanlon and Clifton, hand and head balancers, Maude De Alma, illustrated songs and moving pictures. Good business. Empire, Bijou and Union Theatres, with moving pictures and illustrated songs, report good business. C. E. LUNDQUIST.

Claude Kelly writes: Galesburg, Ill., Jan. 14.—I am at present in stock with the Gaiety stock here in Galesburg, Ill., playing character and light comedy. Haven't been home (Frisco) in three years and miss the Review very much. Expect to return West next summer.

Gerald Harcourt

A splendid likeness of the clever juvenile and light comedian of the Valencia Stock is shown in our front page this week. Mr. Harcourt came originally from Australia, and his progress into the favor of the American public has been steady and consistent. Today he is rated about the cleverest young actor in his line that we have had in San Francisco. He has one of the most pleasing personalities imaginable, and his work possesses a freshness and a spontaneity always welcome and but seldom shown. His comedy work is greatly enhanced by the possession of an accurate and extensive dialect. Mr. Harcourt has the ability to put his work over the footlights in a marked degree, and the quality of his acting as shown here the last few months makes it positive that his future will be productive of fine achievements.

John Major—in the Lime-light and Out Of It

One of our great actors took pleasure in the boast that he found his greatest recreation in the reading of dime novels. E. H. Sothorn improves on this, for in John Major, his manager, he has found one who, as soon as each season is through, lives in his own person an entire dime novel of adventure.

Any one who noticed Major last week at the Van Ness and took note of his quiet, unassuming manner, would not at first credit the fact that from the time of the ringing down of the curtain of one season to the raising of the next, the manager at any time takes his life in his hands in a most picturesque and adventurous occupation.

As soon as his season's work is over, Major quietly enters one of the side doors of the great new Custom House of New York and reports to the head United States revenue officer, who slips a United States Government badge under Major's coat, and he at once becomes one of the head sleuths of the United States Government secret service. Major's friends along the white way see him no more during the summer; his identity is for the time being completely sunk and his life is given for the nonce to Uncle Sam and the risks run by those who represent the government in its most trusted and secret business.

Major's calling in this direction has led him into many perilous adventures. At any hour of the day or night his time is open to the call of duty of the government in tracking down illicit revenue offenders, watching those desperate criminals who game with cheating the nation, leading hair-raising raids where the movement of a finger on a hair-trigger might mean life or death, or unravelling some difficult bit of detective work. His opponents are some of the craftiest and courageous of the revenue criminal classes, who would not hesitate a moment to put him out of the way. The same calmness, coolness and managerial qualities that he has shown in the theatrical business has brought him to be one of the most tried and trusted lieutenants in the New York revenue post. Through this connection, too, which has extended over a number of years, it has been noted by his friends that his features have taken on the look of Sherlock Holmes, and the quiet forcefulness of his manner gives only a small idea of the reserved fire that lies behind.

Sothorn, therefore, in Major carries around with him a whole series of dime novels, and the great actor never seems to tire of hearing him recount the experiences of his raids. There is no one in Sothorn's organization that the great actor thinks more of, however, than he does of Major, and the two are almost inseparable.

Major has a penchant for handling big companies. He was with Julia Arthur during her great days (when Samuel Freedman Mr. Sothorn's present manager in advance, was also with her). He was also with Fritz Scheff, Sothorn and Marlowe and all the big ones who carried cars and cars of scenery and scores of people. Major, too, helped manage that biggest enterprise in America, the New York Hippodrome, for a time. He made such firm friends with Julia Arthur and her husband who is variously reputed to be worth from ten to twenty millions of dollars, that the magnate insisted that Major accompany them in a tour of America in a special car and special train service almost all the way.

Fine Printing Bearing the Alles Trademark

We are being vividly informed through the medium of some fine stands and eight sheets on the billboards that the Lambardi Grand Opera Company is to play a week at the Central Theatre, commencing next Monday. This printing was turned out by the Alles Show Print in Los Angeles, and is decidedly striking for plain type work, with a wood cut end piece. The color scheme includes the Italian national colors—red, white and green—and the Spanish national colors—red, green and yellow—as the company is producing Italian and Spanish operas.

Benefit Pays Mortgage on Glazier Home

Between $1,700 and $1,800 will be the result of the benefit given last week at the Majestic Theatre in Los Angeles for Mrs. Harry Glazier. Manager Oliver Morosco directed the affair, with Charlie Eyton looking after the business end, and William Yerance as stage director. The returns from the program are still to be heard from, and some reports remain to be received from ticket sellers, but there is evidently enough in the receipts to pay the mortgage of $1,700 on the Glazier home at Glendale, which was Mr. Morosco's main object in promoting the benefit.

William Winter and the Glorious Climate of California

William Winter recently ran in his column in the New York Tribune, after returning to New York from an extended visit to California, the following verses. The initials "D. T." refer to Denman Thompson, while "B. B." signifies Billie Burke:

Returned from regions of the sun,
Where many things are beatific
(Though trolleys buzz and "rattlers" run Along the marge of the Pacific.)
I hear again the prompter's bell
And see again the rising curtain,
And wonder if the magic spell
I used to know is here for certain.

The magic spell, I mean to say,
That used to make the stage refreshing.
When ev'ry lass was "Rose of May,"
And many an actor was a blessing.
Sweet time! when eyes and hopes were bright
And strength and courage never faded
And friendships fond and spirits light
And not one leaf of joy had faded!

'Twould be a comfort, more or less,
To find one bit of charm remaining.
That might, at least, disguise the mess
Of prattling, posturing and feigning;
But everywhere the same old tune
Is ground out in the same old fashion,
And nothing 'neath the sun or moon
Can prompt a smile or stir a passion.

The theme is still domestic strife—
That ancient clash of good and evil!
One man allures another's wife,
And sin is favored by The Devil!
And crowds of gables flock to gaze
Upon the casuistic cooling
Of sensuous fools, in folly's maze,
Pursuant of their own undoing.

Here's Drew—carnation gone to seed!—
Stout Irwin, with her pond'rous antic;
A. Daly, of the faddy breed;
And burly Hackett, the "romantic";
B. B.—of all the bees the queen;
Maxine, the vapid and the natty;
Old Mr. D. T. Evergreen;
And Russell, trying to be Patti.

Well—here's the story of the time
(Like catching flies, grotesquely busy);
And here's a careless bit of rhyme
From one old head, exceeding dizzy,
That hopes the record's not a loss
And that the studious eye will heed it;
But, if the reader's bored by this,
He has his right—he need not read it!

Van Ness

It is always an event of uplifting importance when E. H. Sothern appears in San Francisco. After a long absence, Mr. Sothern appeared Monday night, presenting as the first feature of his repertoire, Hamlet. It will be recalled that several years ago Mr. Sothern presented his idea of the melancholy Dane at the Columbia Theatre, and his portrayal aroused much diverse opinion, which was unanimous on one point, that it was original and thoughtful and as reasonable as any of its predecessors. Since that time Mr. Sothern has occasionally essayed the part and continuously studied it. Consequently the actor's pre-eminence in the role has greatly matured, and following along the lines of his previous portrayal, only adding a firmer grasp, he held a large audience, spellbound on Monday from 8:20 to close onto midnight. A splendid company reinforced the star's work. There was Sydney Mather, as Laertes; Frederick Lewis, as Horatio; Rowland Buckstone, as the First Grave-Digger, and Virginia Hammond as Ophelia. On Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights, Mr. Sothern offered Lawrence Irving's romantic melodrama, Richard Lovelace. The play is brimful of the love interest of the style of twenty years ago, and in the part of Lovelace, the fighter-poet, Mr. Sothern was a splendid figure, for there is no question that in romantic parts he has no equal on our stage. Gladys Hanson as the poet's sweetheart achieved an immediate and notable success. She is a young woman of tremendous charm of person, a beautiful and mobile face, and a voice that is unusually gratifying in both speaking and singing. John Taylor was very successful in his presentation of the character of Col. Hawley. On Friday and Saturday nights, Mr. Sothern will present the famous family characterization, Lord Dundreary.

Princess

Kolb and Dill are in their last week of The Politicians, and notwithstanding the fierce weather, the theatre has been enjoying a fine business. Next Monday there will be presented the merry travesty, Bankers and Brokers, and the production promises to be as attractive as any of the musical comedies which Manager Loverich has staged at the Princess since the two Dutch comedians arrived at that popular playhouse. No expense is being spared to make the presentation a spectacular and a comedy success. Among the newcomers, Adele Rafter, the prima donna, is making many friends at the Princess and is proving herself a comedienne of no small ability.

Alcazar

So great has been the success of Sweet Kitty Bellairs that the public will be allowed another week of this charming costume comedy. An ideal performance of a fine play is what the stock company is giving, and if ever a great response was deserved it certainly was in this case. The actors have been fitted to a nicety with their parts, and the production is worthy of any stage in the land. As a prominent New York manager said to the writer the other night, Broadway should see something like this and then there would be less of that idiotic idea that the world revolves about New York. Nothing seen there in years can exceed the beauty and good taste of this production.

Valencia

Sherlock Holmes will probably always remain the favorite play of mystery. Wherever it is adequately presented it may be depended upon to do business. The Valencia Company this week have every reason to be proud of themselves. Robert Warwick, the robust and impressive leading man, shows his artistic calibre by a masterly handling of the character of Sherlock Holmes. His wonderful voice is employed to every advantage in the repressed and intense characterization that has come to be associated with the part. Mr. Warwick scores heavily. Darrell Standing who marks his first effort as stage director by putting on this superb performance, really shares the honors in the role of Moriarity. Mr. Standing played the part in London, and he has done nothing previously that shows up his abilities quite as much as does his handling of this character. Thomas McLarnie puts up a pleasing and natural Dr. Watson, and Peggy Monroe is a pleasing, energetic little Billy. Gerald Harcourt presents another side of his artistic equipment by appearing as the Cockney crook, Sid Prince. His Cockney dialect is the finest seen in this city, and his whole conception of the character was immense. Miss Stoddard was a very lovely Alice Faulkner, and Helen Lackaye presented a handsome and commanding picture as Madge Larabee. Beatrice Nichols was cast as the French maid, and she was there with her charming and dainty personality and a real French accent. Chas. Dow Clarke, Robert Homans and George Baldwin played their parts pleasingly. The scenery was worthy of special mention, and the lighting effects throughout were conceived and executed with absolute mastery.

American

Florence Roberts, whose name has been a tremendous drawing card in the West for years, is still a power in retaining her admirers, as is to be conceded by noting the large houses that have been in attendance at the American this week, despite the storm. Miss Roberts returns this season with a new play, written around the English divorce laws that permits a husband to divorce his wife for infidelity, but denies the wife the same resource unless it is aggravated by physical cruelty. Additionally, the new play is of the fashionable mold, inasmuch that it has only seven people in the cast and but two scenes. Frankly, the play is but ordinary stuff. It affords the star less opportunity than any other play she has appeared in since she became a great attraction. But to offset this, the piece is most admirably treated by a company of consummate actors. Miss Roberts has still the forceful, tear-compelling quality in her acting that won her her first recognition. In addition, she has developed a restfulness and a repression that adds greatly to the charm of her work. This is in line with the development of her artistic sense and is only what could be expected from so serious and highly endowed an actress. Arthur Forrest gave admirable support as the profligate husband. Thurlow Bergen was the young London physician in love with Lady Joan, and he is to be commended for a wonderfully well poised, intelligent and attractive presentation of the conflicting emotions that come to a man placed in a position like his. Ann Warrington, as the Duchess of Banff, gave a fine characterization of the woman of intrigue, who carried on a liaison shielded by an established social position. Hallet Bosworth, recognized under a new name, has returned to the line of work especially suited to his personality—that of eccentric characters—and gave a cleverly-drawn picture of old Dr. Roland, a Swiss country doctor.

DeGrassi at the St. Francis

Notwithstanding the protracted inclement weather and the heavy downpour of Wednesday evening, an assemblage of the musical critique gathered in the ballroom of the St. Francis, which would have done honor to an artist of greater renown. Antonio de Grassi, the latest Italian virtuoso to make his debut to an American audience, was the attraction, and the manner in which he was received and sustained would have been a pronounced compliment to the great masters of the instrument with the human soul—the violin. His interpretation, bowing, phrasing and technique were so complete and his manner so captivating that it was not a question as to how enthusiastic and even forbearing his auditors should be in order to deport themselves properly, but how many encores would he respond to without forgetting that there was a limit to physical resource. However, there might have been an inspiration in his work, for we are told that Cupid has perched upon his wrist ever since he met Miss Winefred June Morgan in Prague, about a year ago, and to whom he was married in St. Paul's Church, Oakland, last Thursday evening. Miss Morgan was a fellow student, and it was she who drew him to the altar of Hymen and caused him to seek his victories among a free and patriotic people. Mrs. Lillian Birmingham, contralto, a vocalist of prominence, rendered a number from Grieg acceptably, and Frederick Maurer, pianist, measured well to his standard as an accompanist.

Suit Against Goodwin's Company Dismissed

Reno, January 5.—Following a secret conference by the attorneys of both sides today the suit brought by Warren Miller, formerly vice-president of the corporation to dissolve the Nat Goodwin Brokerage Company and asking $100,000 damages, alleging fraud and mismanagement of funds, was dismissed on motion of the attorney for the plaintiff just before noon today.

Mme. Melba's Farewell

Mme. Melba ended her brief engagement at the New York Manhattan Opera House Saturday evening, January 16, making her last appearance there for this season as Gilda in Rigoletto. This is only the third part in which she has appeared here since her recent arrival, the others being Mimi in La Boheme and Desdemona in Otello; and these have been altogether too few to suit the public appetite to hear Mme. Melba's singing. The audience Saturday evening was a very large one, and its applause for the departing prima donna was prolonged and intense. After the third act she was recalled many times, sharing the applause with Mr. Renaud till he finally slipped off and left her to take it alone. Gilda is the only part that Mme. Melba has sung this season in New York in which she returned to her old love of brilliant coloratura and vocal ornaments, and the part is not overabundantly supplied with them at that. Her voice was beautifully pure and rich in quality; but were the few ornaments that she sang in the Caro Nome as brilliant and sparkling and as spontaneously strewn upon the vocal pattern as they used to be? It hardly seemed so, and the fact was, in a manner, to be regretted; yet there was compensation in the beauty with which the really musically beautiful parts of that air, and the others that are given to her in the opera, were sung. To Mr. Renaud went, of course, most of the honors of the performance that were not Mme. Melba's. His interpretation of the title role is one of his best known ones, but this, as are all his performances, is always a study in the operatic fitness of things. In Rigoletto that happens to be, purely and emphatically, heaped-up theatricalism. Rigoletto, the part, cannot be presented other than theatrically, and Mr. Renaud plays the game for all it is worth, both in his singing and his acting. Mr. Constantino sang the music most effectively, and with no little vocal skill. Mr. Armondi's Sparafucile was excellent and Mme. Ponzano sang with hard and incisive enunciation as Maddalena. Once more Mr. Gilibert as the melodramatic Monterone won admiration for his dignified and impressive impersonation of a minor part for which ordinarily no spectator has either eyes or ears.

Spotlights

Klaw & Erlanger's great play of the Arizona desert, The Round Up, is back in Chicago playing to receipts equalling those of two years ago when it opened in that city at McVicker's. On Christmas night at the Nixon Theatre in Pittsburgh The Round Up played to $3,770. This play is one of the most massive ever staged. The battle scene in the third act equals the equipment of an ordinary show.

A Stubborn Cinderella by Hough and Adams will be the first musical comedy production to be seen at the Van Ness in some months. It will be offered early next month. The play is upon a decidedly higher plane than The Time the Place and the Girl, The Girl Question and The Honeymoon Trail by the same authors. The company is a large one and the production is said to be one of the most elaborate offered in years.

Vaudeville

J. P. BOGARDUS, Vaudeville Editor

Orpheum

The hit of the week's bill is undoubtedly furnished by Jewell's manikins. This act is gotten up in elaborate detail and shows the stage set as a theatre, which has boxes, orchestra, stage, etc. In the boxes are manikins who applaud vigorously, and occasionally smoke with amusing volume. The orchestra plays, and on the manikin stage there appears a regular vaudeville programme. The dancing in particular is marvelous and could give pointers to many a human dancing act. Julie Herne has a pleasing sketch of Western life and enacts the part of a mountain Cinderella most effectively. Edward Latell returns for a week and kills time for a considerable period while the stage is being set by telling a whole lot of amusing yarns. Bert Howard and Effie Lawrence have an entertaining act. Mr. Howard is a clever pianist, and Miss Lawrence a splendid dancer. The Chadwick Trio; The Josselin Trio; Mrs. Gene Hughes, in their amusing skit, Suppressing the Press, and The Three Yoscarys, athletic eccentrics, together with new moving pictures, complete a good programme.

Wigwam

Jeffries, the heavy champion, proved the heaviest kind of a champion drawer—turn-'em-away houses every performance. Managers Pincus and Harris' enterprise in engaging Jeffries has been a financial success, and placed an era in the history of the Wigwam, and resulted in a permanent contract to play him all through the East. Jeffries has been re-engaged for a second and final week at the Wigwam. He overshadowed the vaudeville people, but still there were bright acts to recall in Dolph and Susie Levino, Hypnotizing a Wife, original in plot and matter and capably acted; Joseph and Myra Dowling in A Snap Shot; William Thompkins, the jolly monologist; Mallon and Bart and others. Jeffries and the following vaudeville teams will furnish the bill next week at the Wigwam: Madden and Fitzpatrick, in The Turn of the Tide; Mr. and Mrs. Esmond in The Soldier of Propville; Zello Troupe of acrobats; Blockson and Burns; Herbert Cyril; the Coopers.

National

The feature here was Mlle. Summerville and her dancing horse, Columbus, in the best horse act ever seen here. The other turns showed talent and variety. They were furnished by Alice, Winona and Maud Francis, the champion women rifle and pistol shots; Holmes and Hollinston, in Looking for Betsy; Payne and Lee, superior singers and dancers; Brown and Hodges, Indians, capital as singing cartoonists; dashing Maxine Mitchell in her singing turn; Mizunos, the Japanese foot juggler, and his two wonderful tumbling boys; Lolo Radcliff, a neat soubrette, and John Birch, in his ingenious hat characterizing act. Next week's bill has Mike Bernard, the accomplished pianist, and Little Blossom, the coon-shouter; Joe Deming & Co., The Traveling Man; Stephen Gratton & Co., in Locked Out at 3 a. m.; Cree, enigma of century; Gus Bruno, with funny views; Sabine and Vera, variety entertainers, and the moving pictures.

Pantages-Empire

Alexander Pantages this week bought the interests of all the former stockholders in this theatre except that of the Empire's late manager, W. Z. Tiffany, who will remain connected with the house. The theatre will hereafter be known as the Pantages, and be conducted under the management of Melvin G. Winstock, as formerly. Mr. Winstock contemplates making some improvements in the house and present a line of improved attractions for its patrons. The Pantages sufficiency bill this week includes the great Florenz Family, renowned European acrobats; Kohler Grand Opera Trio; Burton and Brooks, comedy sketch, The Limit; Ballard-Albert & Co., dramatic playlet, A Night Out; Brandon and Wilson, singing and dancing; Martinez and Martinez, Gypsy minstrels. On Sunday Manager Winstock presents La Reve des Artists (The Artists' Dream), with Sisters Bellefonte, Parisian Models, imported to pose as ancient and modern Venus, Psyche, the Maid in the Moon, the Chilly Model, Diana and Innocence. The subjects were chosen and will be staged by Mr. Winstock. The new company will also consist of Clayton, Glenn & Co., picturesque burlesque, The Matador, with five people; Rentfow and Jansen, The Second Mr. Fiddle; Southern Quartette, Plantation Pastimes; Leonard Kane, the Dancer in the Golden Frame; De Kock Bros., human and canine equilibrists.

Washington Square

The vaudeville bill here for the coming week presents: Camila, La Moines, Harold Yates, Grace Sisters, Mizunos' Japanese Troupe. Business good, and prospects better all the while.

Thalia Concert Hall

The rain had little effect upon the current of life that runs in Pacific Street. The crowds were there and driven in by the rain filled the Thalia Concert Hall to its capacity every night. The acts for next week are Eldora, Thomas and Payne, Ah Sing Foo, Welch and Earl, and others.

Vaudeville Notes

How Alexander Pantages is increasing his theatrical holdings in California! Several weeks ago we mentioned that he had purchased the interests of Mr. Weis and Marcus Bloom in the Pantages-Empire Theatre of this city, and last week he bought out the interests of Edward Ackerman and Jerry Driscoll, making him the sole owner of the theatre, with W. Z. Tiffany, one of the original stockholders. This week the Pantages agency will book two houses recently converted to vaudeville—the Forrest Theatre in Stockton and the Gem Theatre in Chico. More to come.

Tommy Burns is now playing vaudeville engagements in Australia, under the management of his brother-in-law, Larry Keating, the Oakland and Portland manager. Mr. Keating cables from Sydney that the two of them are coining money. Mrs. Keating will join her husband, leaving here by the next boat that sails.

Vaudeville Notes

Harry Hilliard, who will be remembered as an exceptionally clever and popular juvenile man at the old Alcazar, is headed this way, via the Orpheum circuit, in The Never, Never Land.

Carlyle Moore is coming down the Coast, playing vaudeville dates. Carlyle is only recently a father, Mrs. Moore (Ethelyn Palmer) having, on January 5th, presented him with a son and heir.

John Hayes, who appeared last week at the Pantages Theatre, Sacramento, with the World's Comedy Four Quartette, was stricken with paralysis this week and removed to the Sacramento County Hospital, where he now lies in a critical condition. Hayes was not feeling well on the week of his appearance in Sacramento at the Pantages, but despite his suffering he nobly volunteered his services, with the other three singers, to help in the relief of the unfortunate people of Italy.

Lee Beggs' sketch contains an idea that is something new and original to vaudeville. It tells the story of an old couple who have been married 35 years and have never had a quarrel. While they are having their evening tea they receive a special delivery letter from a friend in the city, telling them that their daughter is quarreling with her husband and that the couple are about to get a divorce. The old couple arrange to quarrel violently in the presence of the young married couple, that they might see the absurdity of their conduct. Example has the desired effect of curing the young couple of their desire to separate. Mr. Beggs has secured the services of Frank T. Montgomery and Mildred Fitzgerald to support him in his forthcoming vaudeville tour.

Two weeks of heavy showers and warm rains, cloud-bursts and melting snows in the mountains have flooded the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys to an unprecedented extent, and inundated some of the interior towns and much reclaimed land. Except from the blight in business that the storms caused San Francisco, situated on its hills, from which the rains run off as from house roofs, suffered no damage. The attendance at the theatres has shown no great falling off. San Franciscans are prone to go to theatres when they can't go to church.

Mizunos, now at the National, is famed as a Japanese foot juggler, and is in the front rank of his profession in that line. He has been a star in Forepaugh and Sells and Ringling's circuses. And yet the two bright boys who perform with him are doing things in their lines that rival him in popular favor. Their acrobatic feats in hand-springs, twisting, somersaults and hand-walking, balancing on high pyramids, and feats in ladder act are superior to any Jap boys' act we have had here.

W. J. Holmes and Ivia Holliston are laughing hits at the National in their real life comedy sketch, Looking for Betsy, in which Mr. Holmes as a Rube and Miss Holliston, a breezy city girl, sharp and witty with contagious laughing humor, personates the "Betsy." Mr. Holmes is very happy and humorous as the fidgety Chief of Police of Milpitas, and Miss Holliston's vivacity and geniality captured her audiences, and in a duet evinced a noticeably superior singing voice. The act closes with a surprise, Mr. Holmes giving a vivid portrayal of James A. Herne's quarrel scene in Shore Acres. Mr. Holmes supported Herne as Martin for five years, and will be remembered here, also, at the Grand Opera House in his own rural play of One Night in June, in 1905.

Hundreds of women and children were horrified in Los Angeles last Sunday when Charles Williams, 30 years old, fell thirty-five feet from a high wire at the Chutes Park, on which he was trying to ride a bicycle. Williams struck on the edge of the pond and his body rolled into the water. He was rescued and at the Receiving Hospital it was found he was suffering from severe concussion of the brain, lacerations and bruises. He may be injured internally and the surgeons give little hope of his recovery. A number of women fainted when the man fell.

Mlle. Summerville an attractive horsewoman, and the trained white steed Columbus were the feature of the show at the National—woman and horse moving as one figure. The superior intelligence and trained ability of Columbus, the only horse that really dances, were exhibited in his waltzing, two-step marches, side-step dances, fancy dances, cakewalks and finally bringing down the house when he does an original equine buck and wing dance. He knows his part thoroughly and needs nothing more than the music for his cue. Columbus has won more blue ribbons than any horse in America, having won championship and first prize at the following horse shows, for which he has the ribbons to show: Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, St. Louis, Louisville, Indianapolis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Milwaukee, Des Moines and other cities.

California has contributed more than its share of sensations to the show world, and in the owner and trainer of Columbus, the wonderful dancing horse, Mr. C. F. Hafley, is another eclipser on the vaudeville stage. He also is owner and manager of the Winona and Francis woman rifle shooting act at the National, one of the best on the stage, that was a feature of Buffalo Bill's Wild West European tour. But his greatest sensation was his horse, schooled to make the forty-foot high dive with a woman rider on his back into fourteen feet of water and swim out three times a day at Dreamland Park, Coney Island, last season. In his younger days Mr. Hafley, known as "California Frank," started his career as a cowboy and broncho buster in California, and later was Deputy Sheriff of Tulare County, California, for seven years, and Deputy United States Marshal in Southern California until the war with Spain, when he joined the Sixth California Volunteers. At the close of the war he launched into the show business, and has been connected with all the large Wild West companies, including Cummins Indian Congress at the Pan-American Exposition and at Coney Island, Pawnee Bill's Wild West for three seasons and 101 Ranch Wild West at Jamestown Exposition.

The Commencement of a New Circuit

The Gaiety, formerly the Novelty Theatre, corner of O'Farrell and Steiner Streets, takes an entirely new departure tomorrow afternoon, when it opens under new management in vaudeville and becomes the entering wedge of a new vaudeville circuit into San Francisco. The theatre is large and commodious and has been repainted and renovated throughout. The local manager will be George Clayton, a well-known manager here, but behind him will be Al Hagen, of the Grand Theatre in Salt Lake, and the widely known firm of Pelton & Smutzer, who have theatres in Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, Idaho and Utah, and the now-forming White Rats of America Circuit in the Western States. Popular prices will rule—15 and 25, and 10 and 20 at matinees. The opening attraction will be Comedian James Post and Company and his "Buty Korus," in his funny comedies and burlesques, as stock stars, and three vaudeville acts added. The latter are the MacDonald Troupe Cyclists; O'Brien and Darrah, comedy sketch; Billy Howard, musical and singing comedian. They are booked through Bert Levey's Independent Vaudeville Circuit, who will be the San Francisco representative of the coming Eastern circuit. The performers coming here will play the Colorado circuit first, closing at the Curtis Theatre in Denver. They will play at the Grand in Salt Lake. Thence to the Gaiety, and play the Bert Levey time on the Coast. The circuit between Chicago and the Pacific Coast will be arranged to go in working order in September next.

The Streeter-Bryan Company are playing The Devil and The Resurrection through Texas.

The Cramer Company is stranded in Marshfield, Ore. The Cramers had been playing stock there for the past three months, and the advent of the James Keane Company there stretched the situation to the breaking point, and the weaker company had to give way.

At a Grand Opera Performance

Two men indulged in the following conversation at a grand opera performance. The dialogue will be recognized by everyone as strictly true to life:

"Well!"
"Well!"
"You?"
"I."
"Here?"
"Guilty."
"Whew!"
"Warm?"
"Roasting."
"Musical?"
"Nope."
"You?"
"Ha, ha!"
"Drinkables?"
"Yep."
"Where?"
"Upstairs."
"Coming?"
"Sure."
"Rye?"
"Scotch."
"When?"
"Enough."
"How."
"How."
"Good."
"Um."
"Another?"
"Certainly."

The Loneliest Place in the World

When she was a very little girl in Philadelphia, Ethel Barrymore used to go behind the scenes at her grandmother's theatre to see Edwin Booth act. One night Mr. Booth stopped in dead silence in the middle of a speech. For a few seconds the crowded house was absolutely breathless. Every eye in the audience was strained on Booth's blank Hamlet face. When he resumed and finished the act he was recalled over and over again. After the play he picked up little Ethel Barrymore to talk to her as she sat in his arms—an almost nightly habit with him. "My! but I am a good actor tonight, eh?" said Booth with a little laugh. "You stuck dead," the child answered. "I had to," was the actor's answer, partly to himself and partly to the child, "the audience was dead until I did. If they show signs of dying again I'll tumble over a chair; they'll think I've been drinking and they will watch me like cats and help me out." Some years later Miss Barrymore sat in front one night, watching Booth's performance of Richelieu. She still remembers that he played one entire scene crossing and recrossing the stage many times, supporting himself by holding to the back of a heavy chair. Miss Barrymore naturally went back to see whether the great man would be able to finish the performance. He met her with a hearty laugh. "You thought I had been drinking or that I was ill," he said. "Why, I had to hold on to that chair. I was carrying that whole audience, the dearest weight in the world. I tried 'sticking' for what seemed like five minutes in the second act, but it did not concentrate their attention." All of which amply illustrates that not even the great ones can enter the spirit of a part unless the people in front come along. There is no place in the world as lonely as a stage inhabited by an actor conscious that the audience is not giving him its undivided attention.

Spotlights

The Veteran Fireman's Association will give a theatre party at the Valencia next Tuesday evening, Jan. 26. In addition to the regular bill of "When Knighthood Was in Flower" a number of special features will be introduced and the old fire fighters and their friends intend to fully enjoy themselves.

"The County Chairman," another of George Ade's typical comedies, will receive an early production at the Valencia Theatre. The success of The College Widow was so great that the Chairman will undoubtedly be another winner.

Maxine Elliott has mortgaged her new theatre for $235,000, at 5 per cent interest.

A theatre will soon be built in Mojave.

A heavy damage resulted from the severe wind last Wednesday at the Valencia Theatre. The huge electric sign which has marked that place of amusement was blown down just before the matinee was concluded. The sign fell to the sidewalk with a crash, startling the audience and pedestrians. The glass was wrecked, necessitating the rebuilding of the sign. The loss will be about $1,000.

After having once fallen through, a deal has at last been made whereby the Del Lawrence Stock Company will go to the Grand Theatre, Sacramento, on February 8th, to remain as long as business warrants. Arrangements were completed last Saturday to that end, and on the date mentioned the Acme Theatre will be given over to vaudeville, while Manager Godard will retire from the moving picture business for a while, at least.

Having exhausted the possibilities of Oakland, Fer-Don, the medical show man, it is reported, will open soon at the Victory Theatre in this city.

Negotiations are now pending looking to the return of the Del Lawrence Company to Vancouver in May, June and July, at the old combination opera house.

Sullivan & Considine Give Up Their Lease on the Star Theatre in Portland

PORTLAND, ORE., Jan. 18.—HEILIG THEATRE (Cal. Heilig, mgr.; William Pangle, resident mgr.)—This theatre has been dark since the engagement of The Great Divide, which was here the fore part of last week. It reopens tonight with Ben Hur, which fills in the entire week. There is a big advance sale for the production. Brewster's Millions follows.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Geo. E. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—One of the best productions that has been made at this theatre since it became the home of the Baker Stock Company was presented yesterday, and players, management and stage attaches are to be congratulated for their fine work. The play offered was A Royal Family, made famous by Annie Russell. The three individual actors who carried off the especial honors were Donald Bowles as the King, William Dills as the Cardinal, and Mrs. Mina Gleason as the Queen's mother. As I have stated they made the individual hits of the play, although the entire company gave a very high class presentation in every respect. Miss Jewel and Mr. Ayers as the Prince and Princess were equal to the demands made upon them. The play was produced up to the usual high standard we are sure to find at this theatre. Next week, A Navajo's Love.

BAKER THEATRE (George L. Baker, Mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—Something new under the sun is at this theatre this week, it can be called a musical melodrama. The Flower of the Ranch is its title, and it is by Joe Howard, who has given us several good ones. This offering from his pen ranks up with the best of them, and the audiences present at this theatre yesterday were all of one opinion "that it would do." Frankie Drew who plays the leading part is one of the cutest little bits of femininity that has come this way. She sings and dances well and is chic enough to satisfy the most fastidious. Howard Hume is the chief comedian and kept the audience well keyed up with his comedy work. The chorus is good to look at, and they can really sing. Next week, Theodore Lorch in The Lieutenant and the Cowboy.

ORPHEUM THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—Announcement was made this week that C. N. Sutton, who has been managing this theatre, since its opening, was to be transferred to Butte to take charge of the Orpheum in that city, and that Mr. Ericson would take charge of the local house. Since Mr. Sutton came to this city he has made many friends, and although he goes to another city, he takes with him the best wishes of all who met him for his future success. Mr. Ericson, who has had charge of The Grand in this city, will take charge of this house, and although we are sorry to see Mr. Sutton leave, no better or more popular man could have been put in his place than Mr. Ericson. Mr. Ericson starts with this week with the following bill: George W. Leslie in The Naked Truth; Byron & Langdon; Wayne & DesRoche; Gaston & Green; Donald & Carson; Hathway & Siegel; and Carroll & Baker.

STAR THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—With this week's bill, In a Woman's Power, the lease of Sullivan & Considine upon this theatre comes to an end, and the Stair & Havin popular priced shows will be without a home. No mention is made as yet as to the future policy of the house, although there are rumors that S. Morton Cohn will open the same as a moving picture house.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—Another good bill is offered by the stock company this week, and business is satisfactory. It is a long time since The Galley Slave has been presented in this city and no doubt it will do a good week's business. Orral Humphrey and Corinne Walton in the leads gave good performances; and Ralph Belmont was also well cast. The staging and comedy work of the play were looked after by Charles Connors in his usual good manner. Mrs. Lillian Griffiths also gave a good portrayal of her role.

GRAND THEATRE (John F. Cordray, mgr.)—This house will hereafter be under the management of John F. Cordray, he succeeding Mr. Ericson, who goes to the Orpheum. For this week Halliday & Curley are headliners; others on the bill are Connolly, Wenrich & Connolly; Girdeller & Co.; Margaret Severance & Co.; Chas. Williams; Caron & Herbert, and Fred Bauer.

Pantages has Thaler's Dog & Pony Circus for their feature act for this week.
A. W. W.

MARGARET ILLINGTON, wife of Daniel Frohman, is in town and a guest at the St. Francis. Miss Illington's fine work in The Thief at the Van Ness Theatre in this city last season will be long remembered.

Spotlights

Marie Doran, through her solicitor, Col. Milliken, on December 19th, in the United States Circuit Court, Brooklyn, obtained from Judge Thos. I. Chatfield an order vacating and setting aside the injunction, or restraining order, that Burton Nixon had obtained December 9, 1908, restraining her from interfering with the Beulah Poynter dramatization of Lena Rivers.

Sherlock Holmes will be produced at the Valencia Theatre at an early date. Robert Warwick will have an ideal role in the character made famous by William Gillette.

The Wolf, from the pen of the same playwright who gave to the stage the great success, Paid in Full, will be an early attraction at the Van Ness.

Frank Baum has given up stock at the Briarwood in Omaha, temporarily, and is tempting fortune with Salome on the road.

There are no broilers with the production of the musical comedy, A Stubborn Cinderella, but their place is taken by a group of fifty pretty show girls. A Stubborn Cinderella is by the same authors who are responsible for The Time, the Place and the Girl, The Girl Question and The Honeymoon Trail.

Clyde Fitch's comedy, Girls, will soon be seen here.

Billie Burke has given her one hundred and fiftieth performance of Love Watches at the Lyceum Theatre, New York.

John Drew is to come to San Francisco this year with his latest success called Jack Straw.

The Wolf is the title and the Hudson Bay country the scene of a new play by the author of Paid in Full. It is a drama of the Canadian woods in three acts and deals with the rugged manhood of that far Northern country, which resists and defeats the plans of an adventurer among women. Andrew Ronson, a splendid actor, will be seen in the leading role, that of Jules Beaubien, a half-breed. The Wolf will be the attraction at the Van Ness Theatre following the engagement of E. H. Sothern.

Victor Herbert's latest composition in the Red Mill, which will be heard here in the near future. Whitehead and McNeil play the leading roles. The scenes of the musical work are laid in Holland, and the two acts are crowded with color, music and comedy.

The song hit of A Stubborn Cinderella has the unique title When You First Kiss the Last Girl You Love. The song hits of the music play are a dozen in number.

Signor Antonio de Grassi will soon marry Winifred June Morgan, a well-known Oakland girl and a talented musician. De Grassi's first formal concert will be given in the St. Francis ballroom, January 20. It was while Miss Morgan was studying the violin and voice abroad that she met her future husband, who was making a study of the violin. After their marriage, which takes place the latter part of this month, they will start upon an extended concert tour, which is to extend from San Diego to Vancouver. They will be accompanied by Miss Margaret Bradley. The tour will be under the direction of Johann Nieymeyer.

Corinne is reported as scoring the success of her particularly bright career in the McNally, Jerome and Schwartz musical work, Lola from Berlin. The production was originally staged by Klaw & Erlanger in the Liberty Theatre, New York City, where it received the popular verdict of the press and all those who witnessed it. The original paraphernalia will be used on the tour of the cities, and the cast of Broadway favorites is a strong one, including a singing and dancing chorus of beautiful girls.

Tedd Brackett, under the name of The Central Comedy Company, is playing My Jim, A Moral Coward (otherwise Paid in Full) and The Girl of the Golden West about the Stockton country.

Los Angeles Lodge, No. 35, Theatrical Mechanical Association of the United States and Canada, met at the Elks' Hall, December 23, 1908, and elected for the year 1909 the following officers: President, Leo C. Wells; vice-president, George M. Adair; past president, H. J. L. Atwood; recording secretary, J. W. Schmidt; financial secretary and treasurer, P. O. Paulson; marshal, F. Baumann; physician, C. E. Stoner; sergeant at arms, Wm. Allen; trustees—Wm. Breuner, H. C. Wilkerson, W. Horne, W. Bean, G. Young. This lodge wishes to state that it has been very lucky during the year 1908, not having a single death, and is in good financial standing, having over $2,000 in the treasury and candidates to be initiated nearly every meeting. Hurrah for No. 35!

The Blunkall stock, playing at the Bentley Grand in Long Beach, has established a reputation as a clever company, but the town has been lukewarm in the support. The company may not stay much longer.

Erlanger on New Theatrical Conditions

Abraham Lincoln Erlanger, the theatrical manager, when introduced to 250 diners at the fifth annual dinner of the Association of Theatrical Managers at the Hotel Astor, New York, recently, as one, like his namesake, profoundly loving peace, devoted a third of his speech to a discussion of the "group of millionaires who are going to run the New Theatre as a hobby" and who purpose to use the fruits of New York theatrical managers' labor "as their latest hobby-horse and give them back to the managers as soon as they tire of them." Mr. Erlanger had some jibes at the directors of the Metropolitan Opera House in his repertory as well. What he had to say about people "who produce grand opera for art's sake and then send their companies on tour for revenue only" was a fair part of the pacific speech that the partner in the firm of Klaw & Erlanger delivered. Everything that he forgot, Marc Klaw, who followed him later, inserted. "Probably a new theatrical era is about to dawn upon us," said Mr. Erlanger after he had reviewed in humorous vein the troubles that a theatrical manager learns to accept as his portion in life. "The millionaires, having tired of ping pong and the horse show, are now taking up the management of grand opera and the theatre as a hobby. These millionaires form a stock company, limit their responsibility, take all the boxes and give New York a season of grand opera for art's sake. Then they give Sunday concerts and send their company on tour for revenue only—for the same purpose that you gentlemen send your companies on tour. Now are these stockholders, limited in their responsibility, entitled to the credit of an Oscar Hammerstein (loud cheers for Oscar), who builds his own opera house, engages his own company, takes all the risk himself and sells his boxes to the public?" Mr. Erlanger said that the town was going to have the New Theatre up on Sixty-third Street, where the patrons, as he put it, would not have to wait for their carriages through press of traffic. "And what is going to be done there?" asked the manager. "Create new stars? No; they are going to offer positions to the stars that were made through your energy, experience and capital. They certainly do not want us to think that the New Theatre is intended as a place of amusement for the people. Many hundreds of millions of dollars are invested in theatres throughout the country, all of which were acquired before the millionaires took up theatre management as their pastime. The successful stars I have referred to all made their reputations and pleased theatregoers before the millionaire angel appeared on the scene. The first tune that is played in the New Theatre ought to be:

I want to be an angel,
And with the angels star;
I'll crown upon my forehead
I'll have a checkbook in my hand.

The junior partner of Klaw & Erlanger went on to say that if these millionaire theatre managers wanted to do some real good they should follow the pattern of Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Carnegie and establish a school for the instruction of worthy juvenile thespians; for such an institution they could rely upon the support of every theatrical manager in the country. "Such an institution might inspire some of the young millionaires themselves into a nobler ambition, and instead of passing their time driving prize horses at the horse shows and becoming their own chauffeurs, they might become actors." Mr. Erlanger came so near forgetting something more about the New Theatre and the Metropolitan that he had to put his final fling in parenthetically at the end of his speech. "I see that at the Metropolitan Opera House they have called in dramatic physicians," said he. "I hope that Drs. Dillingham and Latham will be able to relieve the financial pain, but take it from me when they call for first aid to the injured at the New Theatre it will be surgeons they require, and veterinaries at that." When Toastmaster Charles Burnham called upon Marc Klaw later in the evening, Mr. Erlanger's partner said that he thought his partner had made a magnificent speech and that he could add little to it. Nevertheless he contrived to do so. He announced that by a fortuitous circumstance a report that Mr. Dillingham and Mr. Latham had made to the finance committee of the Metropolitan had fallen into his hands, and he proceeded to read some of the recommendations whereby the Metropolitan could be made to pay. What was needed was a little bit of advertising. Caruso and Dippel might be scheduled to run a Marathon in Bronx Park. Montgomery and Stone should find a place in Die Meistersinger, with Blossom to interpolate appropriate lines for them. The directors might steal a march on Oscar by producing The Tales of Hoffmann and introducing Gertrude in a Salome dance. When Oscar Hammerstein was called upon he did a surprising thing. He had left the Association of Theatre Managers four or five years ago, he said, because he believed at that time that it lacked the spirit of dignity. Now he wanted to get back. "I believed when I left the organization that the theatrical managers should cease to crawl and cringe and should rise in their manhood and demand that their business should be recognized as other businesses are," he said. "I believe that the theatre license should be abolished; that men who risk their all in great enterprises which do more than anything else to make people happy and better should not be supervised by any official more than other businessmen are supervised. I now make application that the association take me back, but on the proviso that its first step in the future should be looking toward the abolition of the theatre license." Mr. Burnham called a meeting of the board of directors right there, and Oscar came back in the fold with loud acclaim. But that was not all. The wearer and sole patentee of that hat had some words to say about Philadelphia. "Nothing has ever riled me so much as that experience down there," he said. "If I had invested my million and a half in a shoe factory or a corner liquor store I would have had some standing in the community. But no, I am an adventurer, wandering operative manager without credit and without reputation. When I ask for a paltry loan of $400,000 on my investment of a million and a half they view me with condescension and suspicion. Then what do I say? 'You want to be entertained, to be instructed—on my money? You can't do it. You're too damned cheap!' That is the spirit that makes a theatrical manager. It is the spirit of combativeness. They say we are bullies and fighters. No. We are men." What Percy Williams had to say about the Sunday closing law and the iniquity of keeping alive the gloomy Scotch Sunday helped to keep the diners at the high tension of enjoyment. William Harris, the veteran, told of the palmy days of yore when he had to brakebeam his way across a ferry because he couldn't swim the Tippecanoe River out in Ohio. Daniel Frohman also added a word in defense of the theatrical manager and his art.

Appeal to Hammerstein

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 11.—Oscar Hammerstein's retention of John G. Johnson as his attorney inspired the box-holders of the Philadelphia Opera House today with the belief that the loan of $400,000 desired by the impresario had either been placed or soon would be, and that grand opera as originally planned for the temple of music at Broad and Poplar Streets would be given in this city. Mr. Johnson's official relations with financiers of Philadelphia, and the further fact that he is counsel for P. A. B. Widener, was accepted as evidence that measures are being taken to clear the way to a resumption of cordial relations. Women prominent in society launched a movement today to influence Mr. Hammerstein to reconsider his action to close his opera house to high-class productions. Miss Margaret Corliss headed a delegation of the Ladies' Opera Club that called upon Mayor Reyburn and requested him to use his influence to have the season of grand opera continued. After the interview Miss Corliss mailed a letter to Mr. Hammerstein in New York, signed by all of the members of the Ladies' Opera Club, and asking for the continuation of the season. Mme. Tetrazzini was enthusiastic in her praise of her reception in Philadelphia. "Mr. Hammerstein will conduct the full season of grand opera," she said "I feel certain of that. Why, he built the Philadelphia Opera House partly for me, and I am sure that things will be arranged so that I can sing before the people of that city."

Helen Goff

Few mezzo-sopranos before the public today have the charms of the beautiful tone quality to their voices, handled with the masterful technique to gain for them the distinction enjoyed by Helen Goff. This artist possesses a voice of soulful sweetness, and has made much of her opportunity during the past four years in securing a following along the Coast and Middle West. Recently she has suffered from a severe illness, but reports tend to show that a long rest has given her tones a depth and richness of even greater melody than before. Miss Goff was heard to excellent advantage during the week on the program that called out the vast audience to aid the surviving sufferers of the Sicilian earthquake, given Tuesday at the Los Angeles Auditorium. Her position on the program caused a rather weighty comparison to be made with Mme. Gadsby, but Miss Goff arose to the occasion in her own artistic manner, and captivated, with the high approval of the madame herself. This brought the mark of approval for the California singer nearer the zenith of endeavor, and added fresh sprigs to her heavy wreath of laurels. Miss Goff is intensely a California woman, because of her native birth, and since she has become of interest to the music public the most of her time in this country has been spent within the State. Two years ago she sang alternate leads in mezzo parts in the French opera at New Orleans, and her following there has a firmness not always enjoyed by American singers in such surroundings. While yet unable to enter into her work with her accustomed zeal, Miss Goff but awaits the complete return of her health before accepting a contract with a leading New York manager.

How to Hold a Corner in Playwrights

At his little flat-topped desk in his office at the Empire Theatre last week, Charles Frohman was asked his mission as a manager. "As life goes today, I think it is a far finer thing to make the playgoer laugh than merely to set him wondering. Plays like Mr. Barrie's make a playgoer laugh optimistically. Problem or decadent plays merely set a playgoer wondering at the value of life itself or his place on earth. The best kind of a thoughtful play or drama of ideas is the kind of play that makes the spectator think positively on the good there is in life; and the worst kind of thoughtful play, or drama of ideas, is the one that makes him think negatively, or about the wrong there is in life." If Mr. Frohman should aspire to divert the spirit of entertainment on the English-speaking stage into a channel of optimism he has a better opportunity than any other man, for just now he controls the services of the most popular and successful playwrights in the world. Some day it will be a subject of interesting speculation how one man, and that man an American, can obtain a corner in playwrights. If these playwrights under contracts to Mr. Frohman were only of one nationality, his control of their services would not be so remarkable. But in the world-wide group, to which he refers as "My authors," there are Americans, Englishmen, Scotchmen, Frenchmen, Germans—all speaking differing languages, holding differing views of life, and endowed with differing senses of humor. How one man is able to hold in leash so many authors of different nationalities is not a difficult problem, according to Mr. Frohman. Said he: "You have, close to you, we will say, twenty intimate friends, each differing from the other in nationality, social standing and disposition. How do you keep them bound to you? Simple enough. By finding out, maintaining and enlarging that little strip of common ground upon which you found yourselves cast, when first you met, by fate or circumstances. The bond between myself and Bernstein, Barrie, Maugham, Caillavet, De Flers, Marshall, Ade, Gavault, Thomas, Fitch, Morton, and all the rest, is not made of paper, but of something stronger, perhaps because seemingly intangible—personal sympathy, understanding, and deep regard. We are friends in council, not manager and playwrights. They are very delightful—these meetings. For example, one morning in the Hotel Ritz, at Paris, I stood talking with Gavault, who had just delivered me the manuscript of The Richest Girl. We had talked for some time. Then I said, 'Well, we must see each other at another time, because Bernstein has an appointment with me for this hour.' At that moment the door opened and Bernstein entered and walked up to where we stood, saying, as he drew near us, 'The Master is dead.' He meant Sardou. I could not but think of the coincidence that I, an American manager, should be in Paris at the death of this great playwright, who has contributed so much to the American as well as the French stage. My words of sympathy to Bernstein, who deeply felt the loss of Sardou, were, I think, true—"The master is dead; long live the master!" Without Sardou's great amount of 'preparation,' Bernstein is more than the heir of Sardou. His Israel shows that, building upon Sardou's genius, he will eventually evolve a finer drama than Sardou ever dreamed of. But I was going to say that we then sat down and exchanged a set of interesting Sardou anecdotes. I told him, for instance, of how I once sat on one side of a table while Sardou sat at the other. The great playwright had just come in to see me, and his first remark on throwing himself into the chair was: 'Well, it's a pity, but Dumas fils is dead.' I was amazed. I exclaimed, 'You don't mean it! I didn't even know he was ill.' 'Oh,' replied Sardou, 'he breathes, walks about and seems alive, but he is really dead. The newspapers are praising him.'"

Corinne

Corinne, who is being starred in the name part in the McNally-Jerome-Schwartz musical comedy, Lola from Berlin, is one of the few "infant prodigies" that have made good the promise of their early youth as public entertainers. Corinne, which is the only name by which this volatile young woman is known to the public, was a theatrical star when little more than an infant, and she has never since that time been relegated to the ranks. Corinne acquired the habit of being a star at the age of six, and has maintained her individual supremacy in very excellent company year after year since then. Originally a singer with a wee bit of a voice that made her efforts stand out as contrasted with the work of clever and experienced associates, she has with advancing years developed into one of the foremost of the singing comediennes on either side of the big pond. Corinne as the star of a comic opera company attracted attention because her repertoire included roles made famous by the most popular prima donnas of the last decade. Called upon to create important roles in recent musical comedy successes, Corinne rose to the occasion in every instance. Funny women are rare enough on the stage, but fun makers of the gentle sex who are fair to look upon and who can sing an aria from Lucia without being adversely criticized by the most exacting student of grand opera are so very very rare that they can easily be counted upon the fingers of one hand. Corinne can sing, she can dance, she has the good looks and she can act. In Lola from Berlin she has an opportunity to show just how clever she is. Incidentally, John J. McNally, who has written many of the big musical comedy successes of the last decade, William Jerome and Jean Schwartz, who furnished respectively the lyrics and the music, have added to their reputations in providing this last entertainment.

Ben Hur Is Doing Its Usual Enormous Business in Portland

PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 25.—HEILIG THEATRE (Cal Heilig, mgr.; Wm. Cingle, resident mgr.)—Ben Hur opened at this theatre, 11th, and remained a week, and upon this, its third visit, again duplicated the enormous business that it was favored with on its previous visits. The production is kept up to the usual high standard of its owners, Klaw & Erlanger, and the company itself was equal to all demands. Mr. Thearle was satisfactory as Ben Hur, and Loyola O'Connor, a Portland girl, was very good in her role. Florence St. Leonard also gave a presentation of her role. Last night Brewster's Millions returned and opened to a good house. It remains for four nights. It can be truthfully said that it sustained the good impressions left on its previous date in this city. Robert Ober was good as Brewster and kept the audience in a jovial mood throughout. Charlotte Lambert and June Mathis carry off the honors of the ladies in the cast.

Coming, Lambardi grand opera company, February 1.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—A Navajo's Love packed this theatre yesterday at both performances. As is pretty well known the piece is from the pen of Sedley Brown, late of the Valencia Theatre of San Francisco. The play is entertaining enough. Sydney Ayers played Navajo, and without a question gave us one of the best pieces of work since joining the stock forces. William Mong, who recently joined the Bakeronian forces as heavy man, made his debut, and gave a highly finished portrayal of the part of La Salle, and no doubt will be a valuable addition to the company. Miss Seymour was the best of the lady members of the cast, although Miss Jewel and Miss Kent were equal to the demands made upon them. The piece gives plenty of scope for stage dressing, and, of course, they were well taken care of by the management. Next week, The House of a Thousand Candles.

BAKER THEATRE (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—Western drama has a berth this week at this house, where Pelton & Smutzer are offering their play, entitled The Lieutenant and the Cowboy. It opened yesterday and drew good houses at both performances. The play is along the usual lines of melodramas dealing with this section of the country. George R. Matison plays the lead and shows himself to be a clever actor, and Lorraine Keense is also well in evidence in her part. The support is good. Next week, San Francisco Opera Company.

ORPHEUM THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—Last week's bill at this theatre was one of the best ever presented to vaudeville lovers in this city; that was the consensus of opinion on all sides. It truly was a cracker-jack of a bill for the opening week of Mr. Ericson as manager of this house. Commencing tonight Helen Grantley and company are headliners; Farrell-Taylor company; Dick Crolius; Mlle. Bessie Stern; Leon Rogee; Sophie De Wolf, and Rachter and Lobder.

STAR THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—Ten-cent vaudeville is the offering at this house for this week, with Gladys Van as the bright star of the bill. Others on the bill are Chester and Corbett; Mahony Brothers; Jarvis and Martin, and Smilata Brothers.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—The offering of the stock company this week is The American Girl. It went well yesterday, and the company is to be commended for giving such a perfect performance upon its opening. Orral Humphrey, Charles Connors, Ralph Belmont of the men gave good performances, and Mrs. Lillian Griffiths also gave a good performance.

GRAND THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—Baker Troupe of cyclists are headliners. Others on the bill are the Carvers; Watson and Little; Les Theodors; Musical Brandons, and Fred Bauer.

Pantages has Marjorie Lake and her company of sixteen boys and girls as their feature act for this week.

A. W. W.

"Learn to Act"

People tell me that in New York today the better class of people are deserting the theatres for the opera houses and the concert halls. Probably it is because they hear better works performed in the latter places. And surely, to take one example, when to Mozart's heaven-kissed melodies you add such melodies. 9—thdluo you add such acting as Renaud's in Don Giovanni, the public is not to be blamed for preferring it to Little Nemo. I say, with the oldest of the critics, to all young aspirants for operatic honors, "By all means learn how to sing as well as anybody can teach you; you'll need all your knowledge to keep your voice." But I also say, with the younger critics, who have been raised since Wagner and the War: "For heaven's sake learn to act also; learn that there are new works to be interpreted, new operatic tendencies to be fostered, new things clamoring at our doors to urge us forward; learn that opera today is not a costume concert, but a throbbing, vital, human portrayal of loves and hates and passions—of red passions of the earth and subtle passions of the soul; learn that today a voice without a brain is like faith without works."—From the February Everybody's.

Now Here is a Real Practical Idea

One suggestion made by Augustus Thomas, the playwright, in the course of his address before the Actors' Society of America, at the latter's building on Forty-fifth Street, Sunday evening, January 3, will probably be acted on very shortly by the society, and is expected to result in an innovation which will be of great value to authors, actors and managers alike. Mr. Thomas suggested that the society choose from its members a "play-reading committee," or a "play-producing committee," whose duty would be to read carefully manuscripts from young or unknown authors and pass on to the society the ones they considered available for a trial production. The cast would be composed of members who chanced to be idle, and the "trial matinee," as it might be called, would occur at some theatre whose manager, Mr. Thomas thought, could be induced to offer the use of his house if he were promised the first option on the piece should it prove a success. For the trial performance, the actors would receive no compensation, but if the play "made good," the members of the company would receive their regular salaries during a run on Broadway or a road tour. The plan seems an ideal one. The author would receive his regular royalties, after success came to the piece, the society's members would receive lucrative engagements and the society, in payment for its pains to give the play a hearing, would become part owner in the production. Thomas A. Wise, the president of the Actors' Society, and George Seybolt, the secretary, are heartily in accord with Mr. Thomas' suggestion, and definite action on the plan will doubtless be taken very soon.

Chas. B. Hanford is Receiving Great Praise in Los Angeles for His Shakespearean Portrayals

Los Angeles, January 27, 1909.—BURBANK—Raffles, resplendent in his silvery locks, smart society mapers and clever thievery, is entertaining the clientele at the Morosco stock house this week, with William Desmond duplicating his former success in the title role, and A. Byron Beasley cast as the detective. Mary Hall is Raffles' admiring sweetheart, Lovell Alice Taylor the exposing Nemesis, and Harry Mestayer, Bunny. John Burton as the aged supporter of the wilful Gladys, and Henry Stockbridge as Lord Crowley are both good. Of Desmond, it would appear that a more reserved and less youthful manner would make the characterization more effective, while his make-up is possibly subject to somewhat the same stricture. Beasley's detective is a very clever piece of work, well toned and finished throughout. Miss Hall seems to carry her part well in hand, and is more than popular with the houses, but Miss Taylor seems hardly at home in her part. The offering is a most enjoyable one, and has been liberally patronized all week.

BELASCO—The current revival of The Girl of the Golden West bids fair to be well nigh as popular as the original presentation here a year ago or thereabouts, when the piece ran eight weeks. By that I don't mean that I look for another eight-week run, but the public is taking quite as cordially to Florence Oakley in the role of "the girl" as they did to Alice Treat Hunt, whose tragic death following her interpretation of the part is still an incident green in the heart of that public which loved her. Miss Oakley's "girl" is fresh with the buoyancy of youth, and yet carries with it a convincingness and finish in the heavier scenes that makes for a thoroughly artistic interpretation. Lewis S. Stone is seemingly at his best in the part of the gentlemanly road-agent, while Howard Scott's sheriff, Jack Rance, is as masterly a characterization as one might well ask. Charles Ruggles repeats his good bit as the Greaser road-agent, and Burke Clarke and Leslie Preston present worthy characters in their Indian roles. The balance of the cast has little to do individually, but the effect of the whole is distinctly a credit to the house and to Director Hartford, as well as to the players. As on the occasion of the run a year ago, there was an all-night rehearsal the night before the opening, and Monday everything was running like clock-work.

MAJESTIC—Charles B. Hanford and a competent company are presenting some very high-class Shakespearean plays at the Majestic this week. Mr. Hanford's abilities in Shakespearean roles is so well known to theatre patrons that it needs no commenting from me, and he has surrounded himself with a very capable company. Miss Drof-nah assumes the leading feminine role, and the men of the cast are fittingly placed. The opening performance, The Winter's Tale, was repeated Monday and Saturday nights, Othello on Tuesday and Friday nights, Much Ado About Nothing at Wednesday matinee, Merchant of Venice Wednesday night and Saturday matinee, and The Taming of the Shrew, Thursday night. All were accorded liberal patronage and no one who saw his performances regretted having attended such a capable presentation.

MASON—A Stubborn Cindarella, at the Mason this week, is a clever show well presented by clever people. The company but recently left Chicago, and the costumes and scenery are new. There is nothing stage-worn about the performance at all, and it goes with considerable more verve and spirit than anything seen here recently. The ballets in each of the three scenes are charming. In the last act the scene is laid at the Hotel del Coronado, at Coronado Beach. The story of the piece is well adapted for a musical comedy theme, giving ample opportunity for introduction of musical and dancing specialties.

GRAND—Ferris Hartman and his very excellent company give a good performance this week in The Wizard of the Nile. Mr. Hartman follows Frank Daniels rather closely, but occasionally he springs a few merry quips of his own and gets away with it nicely. Anna Little does some very good work this week and gives promise of a brilliant future. Arling also appears to advantage, as does Lett as King. Muggins Davies as Abydos makes a very captivating boy. The chorus does good work, and the costuming is all that it should be.

ORPHEUM—The Orpheum Road Show fills the bill at that house again this week. Two new acts are on the programme, taking the place of the Franklins and the Majestic Trio. The two new acts are Rogers and Deeley, two amusing chaps, who are billed as The Singer and His Valet, and who live up to their billing, and Gus Edwards' Schoolboys and Girls.

LOS ANGELES—There are two headline acts at the Los Angeles Theatre this week. Sherman and De Forrest's A Jay Circus is the funniest act seen at this house in many months. A Rural Substitute is the second, and the fun in this act comes through the efforts of two aged admirers of a widow to win her favor. Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Frederick return to the local stage in a new sketch entitled Her Cowboy Visitor. Smith and Brown have a singing and dancing act; the Pelots are jugglers, and Joe A. Hartman a monologist. Sam Hoffsworth with his picture ballads and the usual motion pictures complete a good bill.

EMPIRE—Jolly Ray Snow, with a live line of patter, reaps a harvest of laughs for his work at the Empire this week, and by way of good measure sings I've Been Told and The Lobster and the Wise Guy. Dainty Frankie Preston has been receiving well deserved applause by her rendition of I've Taken Quite a Fancy to You, Carlissima and When the Moon Plays Peek-a-Boo. Some extremely clever banjo playing by the Lamonts, a double change of costumes and a well sung duo of songs by the feminine member of the team completes the list of newcomers. There are the usual illustrated songs and motion pictures, and All in a Minute is the title of the sketch given by the stock company, in all a most satisfactory bill.

FISCHER'S—When Tracy McDermott sings Kitty to the helress during the play of that name at Fischer's this week, the house will hardly let him stop. The helress is a clever little musical comedy with a melodramatic flavoring and a continuous enough story to maintain interest throughout. My Gal Irene, Highland Mary, I Wish They Do It Now, Ask Her While the Band is Playing and Burlesque Queen are among the popular musical numbers. Ben T. Dillon, Dot Raymond, Tracy McDermott, Nellie Montgomery, Max Bloom, Pearl Jardiniere and Frank Vack are all suitably cast, and the show moves well from its musical opening to the Virginia Reel, which closes it.

UNIQUE—The offering at the Unique this week is a three-act musical comedy entitled The Brokers' Troubles. There is plenty of fun in the piece and the cast has ample opportunity to demonstrate its talent in the various roles. Lillian Sutherland, as the popular actress with whom the brokers have been in love, fills the soubrette role in her usual clever manner. She has two songs, Idolizing Ida and No, No, No, Fle. The other characters in the piece are all well taken by the rest of the members of the company and the musical numbers are also very well rendered. The Irish comedy of Will Armstrong is worthy of particular mention. This young man has made himself very popular with the patrons of the Unique.

WALKERS—The bill for the week at the Walker Theatre is a very satisfactory one. In Early Days, a rural act, is pleasingly presented by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Young. Fenchler and Jenkins are tricycle bicycle riders and they do some clever stunts. Amelia Mazette is an acrobatic dancer as well as a singer. Robert Baker, The Merry Minstrel, appears in a brief and original monologue. Mildred Mannan is a winsome soubrette. Ida Wharton has a new list of illustrated songs.

AUDITORIUM—Cinderella runs for the second week at the Theatre Beaufort first. The performances this week have been a vast improvement over those of last week. Every one knows their lines and the show in the stage business have been climactic and the show runs smoothly.

C. M. EMER last

Los Angeles, January 21.—Impress All L. Belymer has brought his troupe, headed by Karl Germain, the wizard, back to town, after what is announced as a successful tour, to rest before filling the rest of the Southern California time booked. C. M. Fischer has resigned his post as musical director at the Burbank, to accept an offer in the East, and has been succeeded by N. Laramie, well known locally and a musician of ability and experience. The big Glazier benefit last Friday afternoon at the Majestic netted something like $1,900 for Mrs. Glazier and her son. The members of the Burbank company, personally as individuals and unitedly as a company, put forth their best efforts, and to them is largely due, with Manager Morosco and his associates on the arrangements committee, the success of the undertaking. Jack White, head bill man at the Burbank and Majestic theatres, has been having a fine run of bad luck this week. First he lost a wallet with $23 therein (significant number), then the next day he was relieved of his bicycle, and the day after that somebody who didn't like his bull pup assisted in the departure of that valuable (?) animal. White is heart-broken. Harry Earle, Grace Rauworth and Irwin Miller, managed by Phil White, formerly assistant treasurer at the Belasco, are presenting a sketch on the southern vaudeville circuit. Libby Blondelle and Aubrey Carr, who have been at the head of Herr Fischer's company for a number of weeks, have returned to their vaudeville work, and are succeeded by Dot Raymond and her husband, Tracy McDermott, both old Los Angeles favorites.

AUDITORIUM—The Auditorium Extravaganza Company, presenting Cinderella, opened what it is proposed to make an extended season of spectacular musical extravaganza at the Theatre Beaufort Monday night last. The list of principals includes Maude Beatty, cast as the prince, Olga Stech in the title role, Billy Onslow and Walter Reed as the "sisters," Marguerite Walker as Huldebrand, Luella Davis as the Fairy Queen, and Ben Sellers as Pedro. There is a chorus of sixty, who have been trained in their work by Florence Leslie. There are liberal, and, for the most part, well rendered musical numbers, and the incidental music is furnished by Bruce Kinsey Gordon on the big Auditorium organ, several pieces of brass and the piano assisting.

MASON—The Wolf, with Andrew Robson and a company of really capable players in the cast, is at Manager Wyatt's house this week. The play is by Eugene Walters, author of Paid in Full. It tells a strong, virile story, and tells it interestingly. Telling the tale of a girl who is betrayed and sent to her death in the Canadian Hudson Bay country, it provides Robson with a strong part in the role of her half brother, who seeks out the deceiver, finds him as he is about to ruin another victim, and kills him. There are some unusually effective scenic provisions in the current production, and the piece is worthy of packed houses everywhere.

MAJESTIC—Lola of Berlin, with Corinne as the stellar feature, is proving a drawing card at the Majestic this week. The offering is an excellent one, the play possessing an interesting and highly humorous plot, as well as being garnished to repletion with good music. Corinne hasn't lost any of the lure in her eyes, and makes a winsome little missing helress, despite the absurd wig she affects. Mark Sullivan is the most notable of her supporting cast, doing better than one would expect with the comedy situations, and contributing his share of musical entertainment as well. The balance of the cast is entirely adequate and there is a good looking chorus. A good mounting and liberal costuming completes a pleasing ensemble.

BELASCO—Once more our old friend, Charles' Aunt, has been dug out from Manager Blackwood's play-store room, dusted off and refurbished for the delectation of Los Angeles play goers. I don't just remember whether this is the third, fourth or fifth appearance of the old lady from Brazil, "where the nuts come from," since the opening of the local Belasco some four and a half years ago, but certain it is that the managerial judgment is unimpaired in this visitation, for the patronage is more than generous. I asked Blackwood during one of the former revivals why he inflicted so old and well worn a play upon the public. His answer was to conduct me from his office into the theatre proper, point out the capacity house, and smile blandly as he murmured, "That's the answer. The public wants it, and anything the public wants that I can give it, I will. You show me that there's bad judgment in putting on a play that can draw capacity houses for a fortnight and I'll quit." And I guess he's right. Perennially funny, this comedy should be hailed with joy, since it affords Richard Vivian a stellar role, and this week serves to re-introduce Howard Scott, back at work again after several weeks of illness. Vivian has played the part several times before, and is even better than he was then which says enough. As for the rest of the company, they're all at home in their parts. Charlie Ruggles, "Red" Neves, Leslie Deane, S. C. Jennings and all the rest of the cast are in the house. Florence Oakley, as the girl, is a very good one. I can't say a bad thing against the show and Mason is one of the REAL kind of comedians. He just acts naturally and that's about all he has to do to make a go of it. The piece is not of the one-act kind, but gives others a chance to make good. 18, Charles B. Hanford played Taming of the Shrew, preceded by The Old Guard. Mr. Hanford, as usual, was very clever in his work and has a support as good as his own. I went to the last night, and the house was filled with a large audience. This most intensely interesting play was well received and capitally rendered. Coming—26, The Wolf; 29-30, Pinafore, by local talent. Homer Clason and Mr. Rafael of The Stubborn Cinderella company were entertained while here by Carl Smith, who has known both of them for some time. Mr. Smith is the proud possessor of a new auto and took pleasure in showing them the sights about Redlands, and there are a few. The Elks began rehearsals this week for their coming production of Mrs. Temple's Telegram. The following is the cast: Frank Fuller—Carl Smith, Jack Temple, Hal Smith, Captain Sharp, George Carter, John Davidson, Gordon Suther, Wilson, a brother, Ed Modland, Dorothy, Mrs. Henry Stockbridge, Mrs. Frank Fuller—Miss Frances Hamilton; hosts the native atmosphere. Roberts, a good teller a charming story no Carl Smith. The GRAND—The Tenderfoot is the last offering of the Ferris Hartman company at the Grand. This piece serves to bring to the front the best soprano we have heard in the company—Anna Little. Charles Arling also has his first chance in this show. Josie Hart has a character part which she does well, and Muggins Davies is good as she always is. Walter de Leon is as funny as ever, and Viva McNeill shines in an eccentric role. The rest of the parts are all well handled and it is more than likely that The Tenderfoot will run at least two weeks.

ORPHEUM—The Orpheum road show, organized and routed under the personal direction of Martin Beck, is at the Orpheum for a fortnight. It includes some of the best of the Orpheum entertainers, with Mile, de Dio, the Parisian danseuse, and Merian's dogs played up as headliners. In the judgment of the audience George Ade's comedy sketch, The Mayor and the Manicure, produced by Edwin Holt and company, and Hyman Meyer, "the man at the piano," deserved most of the perlimmons. When Otis Milford, the mayor, says something about his boy being at Atwater, you know that an Ade sketch is coming, and you begin to listen. When it comes you enjoy it. Hyman Meyer's piano skit is an eccentric combination of monologue, impersonation, imitation, burlesque and musical travesty which made the audience so persistent in its recalls that Mr. Hyman had difficulty in breaking away. The Terpsichore's Dream dance of Mile, de Dio is not new, but it still holds its attractiveness and is as dazzlingly beautiful as ever. Charles and Fannie Van appear in a snappy little vaudeville sketch called A Case of Emergency, in which the stage carpenter is called in to take the part of a comedian who has quarreled with his sister. Mr. Van catches the audience with his impersonation of the stage carpenter. Frank Work and Rheinhold Ower do an acrobatic burlesque which very properly places them among the Orpheum stars. The musical selections include some of the best of the recent operatic successes.

UNIQUE—The Servant Lady, by the Unique musical comedy company, under the direction of George Rehn, the new producer is making a decided hit at that house. The comedy, which is in three scenes, has many catchy song numbers, good clean wit and farcical situations. Among the musical numbers are Mother Hasn't Spoken to Father Since, and Madagascar Maid, by Lillian Sutherland; Seventeenth of March, by Will Armstrong; Meat Sause, by George Rehn; Castles in the Air, by Gertrude Rutledge. Among the chorus numbers are College Girls in Rah, Rah, Rah; the Maid of Erin and the Unique Squabs in Happy Hot-tentots. The cast also includes Rosa Rehn and Jack Curtis.

LOS ANGELES—The live Teddy Bears have the place of honor in the program at the Los Angeles Theatre this week. These ungainly things are sagacious animals who have been well trained and they perform a number of very clever feats. The La Selle acrobatic trio present an acrobatic act that is a genuine novelty. The Four Musical Trumpeters contribute a musical act that is one of the best. In addition to the brass instruments, they play a cello, mandolin and xylophone, and two of the young women sing. Sam and Ida Kelly appear in a sketch entitled Fifteen Minutes on Broadway. Sam Hood offers a monologue that is funny and sings a few parodies that are funnier still.

EMPIRE—There are dancers, more dancers, and then another at the Empire this week, and each is a feature which loses nothing in comparison with that which has gone before. First there is dainty Louisa Munson, who appears in a Paris mode dress, sings several ballads and dances a few minuet and promenade steps. Billy Mack, the college lad, shows how popular songs should be sung, and undertakes to demonstrate his right to the title "Master Clogster." The Dale Sisters offer a novelty dancing feature, aided by striking light effects, magnificent costuming and panto-

Correspondence

New York, January 24.—Back to his own Broadway playhouse came Joe Weber last Monday, bringing The Merry Widow and the local, the point burlesque on the Viennese operetta and Franz Molnar's play, written by George V. Hobart and presented on the same stage last season. There have been some changes in the cast since then. Last week's audience missed Peter F. Bailey in the role of De Jollidge. His death occurred during the Chicago run of the piece. In his place was Walter Jones. Blanche Ring appeared as Fonia. Her Yip I Adee, I Aye song, which was heard earlier this season, when the company was at the West End Theatre, was as popular as ever. She also sang a new song, Bonnie, My Highland Lassie, in kilts, that made a hit. Incidental to this number Charles J. Ross gave an excellent imitation of Harry Lauder, singing She's My Daisy. Miss Ring came on to help him and they got a very hearty reception. Mr. Ross moved very cautiously and got off a joke about his broken kneecap. The result of an accident on the closing night of the original run of the play, when he slipped on a stairway in the little theatre, Mabel Fenton was another absentee last week. Her role of Elsie Eisberg was taken by Grace Griswold. Mr. Weber was as amusing as ever, and so was Albert Hart as the Ambassador. Henrietta Crossman made her first plunge into vaudeville in New York and furnished the chief feature of the entertainment last week in the Colonial Theatre. A large audience applauded vociferously, and the actress was showered with flowers at the close of Peggy O'Connor, a little play that Miss Crossman uses. In the disguise of a young Irish cavalier, Peggy O'Connor risks her life to save Charles Stuart from a trap, and in so doing meets her old admirer, a soldier in the King's suite. Complications arise, to be set right by Peggy's ready wit, her grace and captivating ways. Miss Crossman's best work has been done in just such parts, and she never looked better or played with more vivacity and charm. The little comedy is cleverly written, its action is sprightly, and from first to last it held the interest of the audience. Miss Crossman had the assistance of a competent company, in which George S. Spencer was particularly satisfactory. * * * The Easiest Way, by Eugene Walter, was produced for the first time here at the Stuyvesant Theatre last Tuesday evening. New Yorkers are getting used to plain talk on the stage. We have had Zaza and Iris and even Mrs. Warren's Profession, in all of which phases of life which are more or less common and true are plainly treated. But in most of them the truths were glossed over somewhat; an effort was made to show at least a little delicacy of treatment. Not so in The Easiest Way. Mr. Belasco in an interview printed in the programme is quoted as saying that the first function of the stage is to hold up a mirror to nature. If the picture revealed shows social weaknesses the fault is Nature's not the mirror's. And that is what Walter and Belasco have done. No effort is made to soften the picture of a man and an actress living in an unconventional alliance. It's all there—the reason for it and the result of it, when the woman really falls in love and wishes to marry. The life itself and the associates of such people are shown with a startling truth of detail. Frances Starr in a part different from any which she has played heretofore made Laura a thoroughly pathetic figure. She suggested successfully the weakness of the girl who, not in any way coarse or vicious, was forced into the position by circumstances she was not strong enough to overcome. Joseph Kilgour, too, made an impressive figure as Bruckton, and William Sampson as an old circus man out of a job and on his uppers, too, blended a little dry humor and hopefulness with a bit of pathos and produced as a result the only really likable person in the play. Emma Dunn also comes in for praise for making the most of a minor black face part. The audience on the opening night received the play with more than ordinary first night enthusiasm and of course Mr. Belasco was dragged reluctantly to the footlights to say a few words of thanks. * * * With Dustin Farnum as Jim Carston, The Squaw Man came back to this city for a limited engagement, which began in the Grand Opera House last Monday night. The play by Edwin Milton Royle, and this star are both familiar to native theatre goers, but the combination is new, as it is the first time Mr. Farnum had been seen here in the title role. He gave a very impressive performance, emphasizing the fine manliness of this part without overacting in the least. It is a role that suits him and he fits the part. Mary B. Cornwall was an attractive Diana and Katherine Fisher as the squaw was capital. Admirable, too, was Mitchell Lewis as the Indian chief, while George W. Devo as big Bill, the copperhead, won applause. * * *

Kitty Grey, a musical play, was produced for the first time on any stage in this country at the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, last week, by the London Musical Comedy Company, headed by G. P. Huntley, the English comedian. The company came direct from London. The three acts of the play, which is adapted from the French, are laid in Biarritz and London. Mr. Huntley takes the part of the Earl of Dunston, who is without funds. In his efforts to win an American heiress he is unsuccessful and joins the happy throng of admirers of Kitty Grey, the star of the Giddy Widow company. The principal member of the company supporting Mr. Huntley and the only American in the cast is Julia Sanderson, who was seen in London during the past season. She appears as Kitty Grey. * * * Jefferson de Angelis will shortly star in a play to be called The Beauty Spot, by Reginald De Koven and Joseph Herbert. It will open on March 1 in Philadelphia under the management of Gest & Comstock, and will shortly thereafter come to one of the Broadway houses. The play will deal with Parisian life. * * *

Rehearsals of Thomas Dickinson's new play, The Unbroken Road, in which Bertha Kalich is to appear, will begin today under Harrison Grey Fiske's direction. Among those engaged to appear are Frederick Truesdell, W. H. Turner, Thomas L. Coleman, George Winn, Thomas Mills, Dean Raymond, Elaine Arnold, Blanche Weaver and Merle Maddern. The Unbroken Road will be produced in Washington early next month and in New York in April. * * * Little Nemo, the spectacular musical comedy by Harry B. Smith and Victor Herbert, which has been entertaining the big and little children of the metropolis all the season, left the New Amsterdam Theatre last evening for a trip to the other large cities. I don't know whether it will get as far as the Pacific Coast this season, but if it shouldn't now, it will surely get there before long, as everything as good as Little Nemo is bound to reach San Francisco in due course of time. Little Nemo was designed primarily to entertain little folk in such a delightful way that it would require two grown-ups to take each kid to see Master Gabriel. And while the children are tickled at the antics of Little Nemo, somewhat after those originally drawn by Windsor McCay, the cartoonist, the adults laugh themselves lurch at the witticisms of Joseph Cawthorne, Billy B. Van and Harry Kelly, not to mention Madeline Marshall, who, in one of her laughing spells that is infectious, gets everybody's goat. And yet all this talent is almost incidental to the beautiful scenery and startling illusions in the stupendous spectacular production by Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger. The story of Little Nemo as told in the play, begins where the Little Princess in the palace of King Morpheus of Slumberland longs for a playmate, and the Candy Kid offers his assistance. They turn the pages of a big story book, and as they do, the various characters with which children are familiar, jump out, one at a time. In the course of the play there is a scene in a city park, another in the clouds where the weather clerk makes all kinds of weather, the Land of St. Valentine, the Isle of Table d'Hôte, an amusement park in the jungle, and the deck of a modern battleship. The production is full of good specialties, including Dave Abrams as the cat, the Teddy Bear, and Nutty, the squirrel. Collins and Hart, the well-known fake acrobats, introduce their wrestling scene as one of the things to amuse the cannibal king. The whole production is admirably stage-managed by Herbert Gresham and directed musically by Max Hirschfeld. * * * Joseph O'Mara, the Irish tenor, has just closed a long engagement at the Broadway Theatre in Patrick Bidwell's romantic comedy, with music, called Peggy Macree, which was originally written for our own Cornelius D. O'Sullivan, San Francisco's favorite baritone, who was starring in the production at the time he was taken suddenly and fatally ill. Robust "Denny Sullivan" no doubt made an ideal hero in the interesting Irish musical comedy, but many persons prefer the tenor to the baritone voice, the Brooks & Dingwell production of Peggy Macree, should it reach the Pacific Coast, will meet with a warm reception, not only among those who like to hear again the good old Irish songs like Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms, and The Wearin' of the Green, but also by the host of the late Mr. O'Sullivan's admirers, who will go just to see the last part he sang and the one which he had selected as his ideal heroic role. Mr. O'Mara is assisted by a bunch of French players with such real names as MacDermott, Moriarty, Fitzgerald, Leach and Moran, not to mention his leading lady, Adrienne Augarde, and John D. O'Hara, late of San Francisco, who is one of the hits of the play as a Scotchman with plenty of dry humor and a song in the third act that gives the good old Irish stand-bys a race for popularity. It is absolutely unnecessary to tell the story of an Irish play. Given a hero and a pretty girl, with plenty of Irish bulls, references to the old sod, and your Chauncey Olcott, Andrew Mack or Joseph O'Mara will do the rest with beguiling song. They say that Augustus Flier made a mint, first with Scanlan and later with Olcott, and now comes Messrs. Brooks & Dingwell with a grand opera tenor to share in the easy money. * * *

The Vampire was produced at the Hackett Theatre last week for the first time, with John E. Kellard in the leading role. The play is by Edgar Allan Woolf and George Sylvester Viereck. Telepathy is not a new thing on our contemporary local stage. Augustus Thomas employed it in The Witching Hour in combination with hypnotism, but the authors of The Vampire have carried it several steps further and approached the subject from a new angle. Their telepathist cannot only tell what a man is thinking about, but can even tell the exact words he is about to speak. And he is not, like Mr. Thomas' telepathist, a benevolent operator. On the contrary, his influence is sinister for all he touches, though he justifies himself on the ground that he, like Shakespeare, only uses the ideas of other men in order with them to touch the great heart of humanity. An original theme, on the whole, and one which is likely to interest a good many people—a theme which is likely to meet much more respectful consideration than if it had been propounded here ten years ago. Mr. Kellard discharged the difficult task of putting genius under the microscope and did it with grace and dignity. Katherine Florence exhibited her familiar grace and personal charm in the part of the painter who loved the young novelist. Mark Smith engagingly impersonated a slangy and amiable patron of the arts who vanished away all too soon, and Warner Oland gave a realistic view of the sculptor who suffers from nerves. * * * Having laid aside The World and His Wife, William Faversham, actor-manager, artistically cried Next, and produced The Barber of New Orleans at Daly's Theatre last week. The author is Edward Childs Carpenter, financial editor of the Philadelphia Inquirer. The applause of a large audience precipitated two speeches at the close of the third act—one by Mr. Faversham, who said his most courteous Thank you, and asked that all the credit go to the author. Then Mr. Carpenter was called out and he began by thanking the audience for staying. After that he said some things gratefully. The barber is a gentleman. He comes of noble French stock, but had to flee to New Orleans when France grew too uncomfortable for aristocrats; and so he turns barber, but he is at the same time a master at fencing, dancing, poetizing and play-writing. This is the role acted by Mr. Faversham, and he is excellent in it. So is Julie Opp as the woman he loves and whose name he clears. Her handsome appearance availed her much in some of the scenes. * * * The Shuberts have accepted for Mary Manning a new play by Langdon Mitchell, which deals with contemporaneous conditions in America and is entitled Step by Step. In this play, which she will begin rehearsing immediately, Miss Manning will make a radical departure from all her previous productions by appearing in the role of a working girl. Langdon Mitchell is the author of Becky Sharp, the dramatization of Thackeray's Vanity Fair, and of The New York Idea, in both of which plays Mrs. Fiske has appeared. * * * ROB ROY.

San Bernardino, Cal., Jan. 26.—At the Opera House (Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, mgr.): 20. A Stubborn Cinderella presented to good house. This musical comedy is somewhat above the average in point. The principal roles are well handled, and the chorus shapely and tuneful. 23. The Lion and the Mouse also drew a good house, but deserved a better. Coming: 27. The Wolf; 30. Who's Your Friend; Feb. 8. Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch. At the Unique, Raymond Teal, with a musical comedy company holds the boards this week, and drew a large crowd last night at the opening. Thursday night will be Elks' benefit night, and a packed house is assured.

New Orleans, January 17.—Tulane Theatre—Blanche Walsh's new play, The Test, while extremely interesting and entertaining, appealed to the more substantial theatre goers—those that find a hidden motive and moral a pleasure to ponder over. In that respect her engagement was a positive success, for the star was seen at her best, giving the role all of the intellectual touches that her talents and artistry contain. The character of Emma Eltyng in the hands of Miss Walsh becomes a breezy entity, and those that have seen the actress in her former triumphs can readily appreciate the careful study and dramatic force given to the role. The supporting company was in every respect worthy of the star. Geo. W. Howard, Fred. McVane, N. Sheldon, Lewis Morris, Zink and Beatrice Morgan were respectively meritorious. Next week—The Clansman, 25; Frances Wilson, Feb. 1; The Man of the Hour, Crescent—Miss Roscoe Morrison in her father's old success, Faust, had a successful engagement. The supporting cast was capable and the scenic effects especially noteworthy. Next week—The Time, the Place, and the Girl; 25, Just Out of College.

Laramie, Wyo., Jan. 25.—Nothing doing at Opera House the past week. Henry Miller presents The Great Divide tomorrow night. Moving picture shows doing business.

Salt Lake City, Utah, Jan. 26.—Salt Lake Theatre: The Burgomaster and The Lion and the Mouse, are the attractions at the Salt Lake Theatre for the present week. Both are good plays and ought to make it a good week for manager Pyper. Colonial Theatre: Babes in Toyland at the Colonial is drawing capacity houses. The music is good and the costuming artistic and new. The Orpheum presents a strong bill, headed by Gus Edwards' Blonde Typewriters. At the Bungalow (formerly the Lyceum), Willard Mack will hold the boards with a first-class stock company. Mr. Mack appears the present week in The Heir to the Hoar. The Bungalow is now entirely finished and presents quite a contrast to its appearance upon the opening night. The Grand Theatre has again changed management. Mr. Held having resigned because of personal business, to which his whole time must be devoted. A new manager will immediately be named. The present week, Theodore Lorch presents for the first time in Salt Lake, A Struggle for Gold. Mr. Lorch is supported by a strong company.

GLENN SMYTH.

Carson City, January 24.—Carson City Opera House (Chas. Peters, mgr.)—The Holy City on Jan. 29, by LeComte and Flesher's Holy City company. M. E. S.

Marysville, Jan. 23.—Owing to railroad washouts the house has been dark for the past week. Florence Roberts billed for the 15th inst. was forced to return to San Francisco by way of Tehama and Brewster's Millions billed for the 21st inst. was unable to get here from Sacramento. Next attraction—Jas. J. Jeffries and a vaudeville company.

Carson City, Nev.—Carson Opera House (C. H. Peters, mgr.)—A record-breaking house greeted the amateurs in the performance of H. M. S. Pinafore, Monday evening. The entertainment was for the benefit of the Leisure Hour building fund, and the exchequer of the club will be augmented by nearly five hundred dollars. Hon. Sam Platt, U. S. District Attorney for Nevada, was manager of the entire affair, and he is justly entitled to the showers of praise that have been bestowed upon him since the performance. Miss Mabel Stewart, a prominent society belle, sang the leading role, and she made a most excellent Josephine, her strong, melodious voice ringing out in all its clearness and beauty in the most difficult passages. Mrs. E. B. Yerington, who is gifted with both musical and dramatic ability to a marked degree, made Little Buttercup a reality, not a stage personage alone, and she was repeatedly recalled. Miss Edith Edwards, in the person of Hebe, the first cousin to Sir Joseph Porter, sang the small role with excellent effect, and between the acts sang most exquisitely the new and captivating song, Glow-worm. She was assisted by eight tiny maidens, representing the glow-worms, and the beauty of the scene was further enhanced by electrical effects that were new to a Carson City audience. The part of Ralph Rackstraw was assumed by C. C. Lewis, whose easy stage presence and sweet voice, accompanied by an innate knowledge of love-making, made him a general favorite with the immense audience. Hon. Frank R. Nicholas, State Engineer for Nevada, made a "corking" good Captain Corcoran, and his magnificent baritone rang out lustily and tunelessly in either solo or chorus. The character of Sir Joseph Porter was admirably enacted by Hon. W. U. Mackey, ex-mayor of Carson City, and his ready wit and familiarity with stage work was exemplified more than once during the evening.

O. W. Tennant, cashier of the First National Bank, is an old-time favorite on the boards, and his impersonation of the thankless character of Dick Deadeye was one of the best pieces of acting of the evening. Dr. W. H. Cavell was the Boatswain, and though he paralyzed the audience in his first speech by telling his fellow-sailors that "I don't like you" was "no good" he did not lose his self-possession nor did he make any further error in his lines. A chorus of fifty voices and an orchestra of eighteen pieces, skillfully conducted by Mr. Platt, rendered the music faultlessly, and they were accorded frequent and tumultuous applause. Before the opera began, the orchestra executed a new march, composed especially for the occasion by Professor A. L. Smith, leader of the Carson Band, and entitled "The Leisure Hour March." It is full of harmony and brilliancy and is sure to become a general favorite with the public.

Chihuahua, Mex., January 16.—Having been boycotted completely by the majority of the citizens of this city on account of the immorality of their performances, the theatrical company which has been playing an engagement in the Coronado Theatre has left Chihuahua, notwithstanding the fact that their contract had not expired. The couplets sung by the company, as well as the gestures and double meanings they employed, so disgusted the people here that toward the latter part of their season it was a common sight to see an audience of but ten or fifteen persons in the theatre.

San Diego.—Garrick (Morosco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—22-23, Charles B. Hanford in Shakespearean repertoire did only fair business on account of the inclement weather. Mr. Hanford treated us to some of the grandest acting seen here in many a day. A Winter's Night being his masterpiece. He is ably supported this year by Miss Drofna and a company that is distinctly above the average. 24-25, The Wolf proved to be one of the strongest dramatic offerings of the year, and did good business. The play is a peculiar one, the plot being laid in the Northwest, and only requires six characters. It must be seen to be appreciated. 26-27, Arizona; 28-30, The Cameraphone; 31, Harry Beresford, in Who's Your Friend; Feb. 1-3, The Bell Boy. Pickwick (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—Week Jan. 25, Myrtle Vane company in True as Steel, a strong drama dealing with life in Washington. Miss Vane as the self-sacrificing heroine is at her best. Will D. Howard, as the hero, does excellent work. Jack Bennett, as Samuel Mead, also gives a strong interpretation. The balance of the company is well cast, and the scenery, etc., is up to the Pickwick standard, which means Al in every respect. Inez Bayard does a clever specialty this week and scores a big hit. Queen (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.)—Week Jan. 25, high-class vaudeville. Blondelle and Carr, in The Bathing Girl; Amick and Moriz, musical act; Odell and Whiting, comedy sketch artists; Grace Darnley, contortionist; Carlos Prinsino and his wonderful dog; latest moving pictures. Very good show and business. Grand (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.)—Week 25: Sylvester, trapeze act; Billy Mack, comedian; Dale Sisters, singing soubrettes; Maud de Alma, illustrated songs. Latest moving pictures. Good show and business. Empire (W. Bosley, mgr.)—Roberta, the great milk can mystery; Elmer Ballard and company, in A Night Out; Henry M. King, illustrated songs and moving pictures. Good show. Capacity business. Bijou, Union and Star, with moving pictures and illustrated songs, report good business.

Bakersfield, Cal., Jan. 9.—The Bakersfield Improvement Company, owner of the opera house, has leased the house to F. A. Giese, manager of the Victory Theatre in San Jose and the Yosemite in Stockton. J. F. Mollenhauer of the Yosemite Theatre, Stockton, will be the resident manager, and Mr. Horne, who has been Robert Barton's manager, and family will return to their home in Oakland.

Monterey, Cal., January 25.—The two performances given Saturday afternoon and evening by the Elleford company at the T. A. Work Theatre were the best attended during the week, showing that the company have many friends here who are glad to come out if the weather permits. Their week was altogether successful, and a return date has been booked. In fact, the matinee was one of the largest ever seen at the T. A. Work Theatre. The pretty fairy tale, Cinderella, was well played; the spectacular effects were greatly enjoyed by the children, whose sympathies were all with the heroine who never grows old.

Monterey, January 28.—Regardless of wind, rain and the disagreeable results of mud and water, very creditable audiences assembled each evening in the T. A. Work Theatre during the week of promised favorites by the Elleford company, whose dates for presentation of seven great plays had been arranged for the time following January 18, and included a number of very satisfactory productions. Compliment is due the whole membership, who show a very great improvement over their work of last year and reflect considerable credit on the road management, whom we all know, Frank Wyman, always congenial and a popular friend of both young and old. Willis Bass, too, never forgets a card in his address paper, and taking all in all, little complaints remained after the advent of such powerful amusement. Although, let it be whispered only, that return of the company during the summer season of '09 could be gambled on with perfect freedom. The engagement of the Matheson-Paul company in Twelfth Street failed to materialize as one angel failed to come through with the coin. The Monterey Dramatic Club will give a vaudeville performance at the Work Theatre on Friday evening, January 29th, when clever specialties in varied amusements will produce a program worthy of good attendance. About February 1st Manager Scholer of the T. A. Work Theatre will accompany A. G. Metz, cashier of the First National Bank of this city on an extended pleasure trip to Mexico, and both gentlemen are receiving daily congratulations on such fortunate opportunity of pleasant change. Both the Victory and Star theatres continue drawing large audiences who witness exceptionally good programs of entertainment in moving picture productions and picture songs. Each giving first and second entertainments during the one evening, with change of program some weeks.

Watsonville, January 26.—The popular Redmond stock company began their week's engagement at the local opera house last night by giving a very enjoyable performance of The Romance of a Bachelor. All of the old favorites, Ed Redmond, Chauncey Southern, Estelle Redmond, Leslie Virden, Garna Virden, Carl Case, and Clifford Thompson, were in the cast, as well as four new ones, Harold Holland, Sydney Payne, Thomas Holland and Viola Lambert. The Redmond company has always had the reputation of being one of the best in the State and they certainly have not fallen in the estimation of the local playgoers. Tonight the company will give a dramatization of Miriam Michelson's great novel, In the Bishop's Carriage.

Palo Alto, January 26.—Robert A. Hazel has taken a year's lease of the opera house at the corner of Lytton Avenue and High Street, and has arranged to present many first-class attractions during the season. The first entertainment will be staged about February 1. Among the attractions already secured are Papa's Boy, Hi Henry's Minstrels, Richard Jose, the Josephine Deffrey stock company, the Redmond stock company, the Ellefords and a number of others that are now on their way to the Coast from the East. The opera house is to be refitted with new scenery and put in first-class shape. Only the best aggregations will be booked, and at least one show a week will be given. Prices will be 25, 35 and 50 cents. Mr. Hazel has been associated with the stage since he was a child and is familiar with every detail of the business. With only well-known companies engaged, there is every reason to believe that a good patronage will be accorded this enterprise. Mr. Hazel has signed an exclusive contract with the Great Western Theatrical Circuit to furnish the attractions.

Redlands, January 21.—The Wyatt (H. C. Wyatt, mgr.; E. J. Underwood, bus. mgr.)—16, A Stubborn Cinderella, with Homer Mason was one of the best musical attractions we have ever had in Redlands. One cannot say a bad thing against the show and Mason is one of the REAL kind of comedians. He just acts naturally and that's about all he has to do to make a go of it. The piece is not of the one-man kind, but gives others a chance to make good. 18, Charles B. Hanford played Taming of the Shrew, preceded by The Old Guard. Mr. Hanford, as usual, was very clever in his work and his support is good. 21—Despite a pouring rain The Lion and the Mouse was greeted with a large audience. This most intensely interesting play was well received and capitally rendered. Coming—26, The Year 2999, Pinafore, by local talent. Home Mason and Mr. Rafael of The Stubborn Cinderella company were entertained while here by Carl Smith, who has known both of them for some time. Mr. Smith is the proud possessor of a new auto and took pleasure in showing them the sights about Redlands, and there are a few. The Elks began rehearsals this week for their coming production of Mrs. Temple's Telegram. The following is the cast: Frank Fuller—Carl Smith; Jack Temple—Hal Smith; Captain Sharp—George Carey; John Brown—Gordon Sucher; Wigson, a butler—Jim Medland; Dorothy—Mrs. Henry Stockbridge; Mrs. Frank Fuller—Miss Frances Hamilton; Mrs. John Brown—Miss Lorette Gage; Mrs. Jack Temple—Mrs. Carl Smith. The Elks have a repertoire of Incog, A Bachelor's Honeymoon, and Brown's in Town, any one of which they can play at short notice.

Chico, January 20.—Thursday evening, Jan. 14, Florence Roberts was seen here in The House of Bondage, and though the audience seemed very responsive, its size was not such as would warrant the best of feelings from the management. Very bad weather was to blame for only a fair house. Jan. 23—Papa's Boy, Feb. 5—Hi Henry Minstrels, Feb. 10—Chas. Hanford. At the Gem vaudeville house, Mr. Edmundson has a contract with the Pantages circuit for permanent service, and will now be able to offer his patrons the same high class

Harry Campbell Home From New York

Harry Campbell, who went to New York several weeks ago to select a new stock company for our musical theatre, the Princess, returned Tuesday night, after a trip that was full of results and that embraced seeing all the theatrical successes and novelities in New York. Mr. Campbell has selected what looks to be an extremely strong company, by far the best the Princess has housed. There will be three comedians—Frank Moulan, Fred Mace and Bud Ross. Mr. Moulan was the original Sultan of Sulu, Fred Mace was in the original comedy part of The Umpire and Bud Ross is well known here as a clever dancer and light comedian. Edward Stevens will be the new baritone. He has never been here. Edward P. Temple, who has been a director for Colonel Savage and at the New York Hippodrome, will have the stage. Oscar Walsh is the tenor. He came to this country from England with The Blue Moon company. Selli Simonson will be the musical director. The women will be May Boley, Helen Darling, a clever soprano; Zoe Barnett, soubrette, and Ethel du Fre Huston, character contralto. Among the pieces secured are Sultan of Sulu, Peggy from Paris, Piff, Paff, Pouf, The Umpire, Nancy Brown, Moonshine, Smiling Island and The Honey-moon Trail. Mr. Campbell says theatricals in New York are in great shape—the good shows are getting the money and the medieval ones are not. Optimism is reigning there and a good spring season is looked for. He ran across George Lask, who was just leaving for Virginia to put on the annual show at the State University, and other Californians were also doing well. Mr. Lask had put in the winter for the Shuberts in putting on new plays.

Coquelin Is Dead

PARIS, Jan. 27.—Benert Constante Coquelin, the great French actor, whose culminating triumph had been awaited in Edmond Rostand's The Chanticleer, which is now being rehearsed, died last night at Pont-aux-Dames, Seine-el-Marne. The death of M. Coquelin is an incalculable loss to the French stage. Only a few days ago M. Rostand, who recently has been giving the finishing touches to The Chanticleer, arrived in Paris from Cambo and was ready to begin the rehearsals of the play, in which M. Coquelin, who had the leading role, was expected to duplicate his famous success obtained in M. Rostand's Cyrano de Bergerac. Only yesterday M. Coquelin recited gayly long passages of The Chanticleer to some of his friends, but he succumbed suddenly at midnight to an acute attack of embolism, from which he has long been a sufferer. Coquelin's stage laurels were gathered around the world. His genius transcended the restrictions of a single tongue. In France the last half century of the drama is inseparably intertwined with his career; in America his sympathetic character portrayal and his almost Yankee comedy perception gave him a place to which few foreigners could attain; in Germany he was hailed as an authority on matters pertaining to the theatre. The noted actor will be remembered by San Franciscans in connection with his visit here in 1901, when he played at the old Grand Opera House in Mission Street with Sarah Bernhardt. He played Flambeau to her Duke of Reichstadt in Rostand's L'Aiglon, but it was as Cyrano that he scored his greatest triumph here. It was the good fortune of many who attended the closing performance of that engagement to see Coquelin's portrayal of light comedy parts. He was particularly effective in a bit of monologue in which he depicted the idiosyncrasies of a somewhat pompous Englishman. Even those to whom the words were unintelligible grasped the keen humor of his expressive movements and gestures. It was in 1860, when he was but 19, that Coquelin made his debut. He had taken the second prize for comedy the year before. His early successes were in Figaro and Misanthrope. An affiliation with the Theatre Francais was interrupted in 1888 and again in 1893 by American tours. Upon his return to Paris in 1894 he entered into an engagement with the Renaissance Theatre. This led to a lawsuit with the Comedie Francaise, in which the actor was compelled to pay damages. His last visit to America was in 1901. Coquelin gained renown as a writer and lecturer on the drama and some of his works are standard.

Mary Garden Gains Her Point

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Oscar Hammerstein's latest operatic trouble ended today when Lina Cavalieri sent him a letter withdrawing from the role of Thais, thus removing the cause of Mary Garden's resignation. Hammerstein dispatched Miss Cavalieri's note to Miss Garden and tonight received a letter from her, stating she would remain a member of the Manhattan Opera House company and attend the rehearsal of Salome tomorrow. Miss Garden at present refrains from crowing over the noted impresario, who for the first time has been compelled to submit unconditionally to a prima donna's demands. She was not talking for publication tonight, being "indisposed." Cavalieri, although Miss Garden has kept her from appearing as Thais, will sing in several operas in the Manhattan, Hammerstein being pleased with her action today in settling the affair. Hammerstein still believes Mary Garden will be physically unable to appear in all the Salome performances and also sing Thais, Louise and her other French characters in the Manhattan repertoire.

LILLIAN RUSSELL's coming engagement at the Van Ness Theatre will be limited to one week. She will appear in her latest success, Wildfire.

Charles L. Ackerman Is Dead

Charles L. Ackerman, a well-known corporation attorney, promoter and legal counsel of numerous amusement enterprises, died January 25 at his residence, 2201 Van Ness avenue, after a lingering illness. Although the immediate cause of his death was muscular atrophy, exhaustion from overwork was regarded as a contributory means. Mr. Ackerman was born in New Orleans in 1850 and came to California in his childhood. He graduated from the Harvard Law School and studied in Boston, being admitted to the bar there. On returning to San Francisco he entered the law firm of Naphthaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman, but retired from law practice several years ago to devote his attention to his various enterprises. Embraced in the unusual life of activity of the decedent was his tenure of office as vice-president and promoter of the Equitable Gas Company, president of the A. D. T., vice-president of the Municipal Burglar Alarm Company, vice-president of the Rapid Safety Filter Company, vice-president of the Orpheum circuit and Tivoli Opera House, attorney for the Sutter Street Railroad and promoter of the Chutes. Surviving Mr. Ackerman are his widow, Mrs. Carrie Ackerman, and one son, Irving C. Ackerman, of the law firm of Ackerman & Oppenheim.

Van Ness

Mr. Sothern has given a notable repertoire this week and an equally notable performance of three widely differing plays. On Monday and Wednesday nights he gave his finished and understandable portrayal of Hamlet. On Tuesday and Thursday nights he again appeared as Lord Dundreary, and on Friday he presented for the first time his idea of Richelieu. This performance will be repeated tonight. The attendance all through the week has been gratifying. The success of the engagement has been achieved by Hamlet, although Dundreary was a close second. The only mistake has been Lovelace. This play has not appealed at all to our theatregoers. It is not our purpose to go into details in reviewing the merits of Mr. Sothern's various characterizations. We merely wish to state in our opinion that he is the best actor on the American stage. His work shows a thoroughly artistic conception, an admirable effort toward the highest ideals and a versatility that is rarely good and singularly valuable from all points of view. Versatility is apt to be the downfall of most actors. This actor's intense personality, his close application to his work and his predominating intelligence guard him largely from the weakness that strives for success in diverse characterizations. As a romantic actor he is most convincing, as a comedian he is most satisfyingly funny, and as a serious actor he is intensely interesting. From the standpoint of endurance he is a marvel. Just think of an actor playing Dundreary from 8:20 to 11:20 in an almost continuous monologue and never tiring his audience by a lot of vapid, foolish and antique comedy. In fact, he started the chuckles early in the play and kept them going all through the evening. Then, when we think of following this performance with one of Hamlet, from 8 to 12, in one of the longest parts ever memorized by an actor—a part that requires the heaviest possible drain on a man's vitality—we begin to marvel when we see one who can apparently come through such an ordeal in a season and retain his buoyant vitality. One more reference to Dundreary: Mr. Sothern, it may be said, is par excellence the monologist of the age. There isn't a vaudeville performer today who can equal him as an entertainer. Just hear him explain about the birds flocking together, and there can be no dissent from this opinion.

Valencia

The hero of the Valencia Street is Robert Homans. A difference of opinion between Robert Warwick, who was to play Charles Brandon in When Knighthood Was in Flower, and the management of the theatre developed on Monday and on Tuesday, when the play was to go on, the breaking point had been reached. There was a leading man who would not observe the call-board, and there was a manager who is noted for getting what he had planned. So, after a little conference on Monday afternoon, there was no longer a handsome leading man in the person of stalwart Robert Warwick. But there was Bob Homans—a man with a marvelous brain, who had done emergency stunts before, so Manager Seeley gave him the manuscript from which to pick out his lines, and he was told to go to it. He did, and on Tuesday night he amazed everyone by an almost perfect knowledge of his lines. He had saved the night and the week, and as a sort of public acknowledgment, as the psychology of events sometimes show, the public has been going to the theatre in large numbers all week. Mr. Homans, under the circumstances, gave a splendid performance of the part of the dashing lover. Blanche Stoddard, as Mary Tudor, the beautiful and spirited royal maiden, is the hit of the show. Miss Stoddard has caught the idea of the character to a nicety, and the way she embodies the coquetry, the sweet witchery of beautiful young womanhood and the shrewish traits of inherited tendency reveals much study and an aptitude for such parts. She made the girl of royal blood a most bewitching lover. Thomas McLarnie, too, has his chance in the role of Henry VIII. Mr. McLarnie, who is a make-up artist of exceptional qualifications, has pictured the merry monarch most faithfully, taking his idea from the acknowledged best portrait in existence today. In depicting the character, the actor has brought forth the chief characteristics of the king as he is best known, and it must be acknowledged that his performance is a most illuminating one. In those parts that call for research and scholarly insight, Mr. McLarnie is at his best. Darrell Standing is a splendid Cardinal Wolsey, and George B. Baldwin and Thomas Lowell, handsome young gallants, as Buckingham and the Duke of Longueville, respectively. Gerald Harcourt was very much in the picture as Caskoden. Helen Lackaye, who is every inch a grand dame, was truly regal as Queen Katherine. Beatrice Nichols was a dainty Jane Bolingbroke, and Marion Tiffany and Grace Travers were likewise charming as the other two maids of honor to Mary Tudor. The performance is a thoroughly enjoyable one.

Central

The business of the week has centered at the Central, where the Lombardi Opera Company, under the direction of Sparks M. Berry, has been holding forth. The large auditorium has been packed to the doors every night. The efforts of the singers have been generously applauded, and San Francisco has been pleased with the company. The management, likewise, is greatly pleased at the money they have made. The operas have been produced as follows: Cavalleria Rusticana—Santuzza, Celi Campoli; Lola, A. Giana; Lucia, A. Bugamelli; Turiddu, Eugenio Battain; Alfio, Angelo, Antola. Pagliacci—Nedda, Ardizino Tosi; Arlequin, A. Giana; Canio, Eugenio Battain; Tonio, Angelo Antola; Silvio, Pompeo Elena. Il Trovatore—Leonora, Elvira Campoli; Inez, A. Giana; Count Di Luna, Giuseppe Pimazzoni; Manrico, Alessandro Scolabrini; Azucena, Dolores Frau; Ferrando, Attidoro Maureri; Ruiz, A. Neri. Lucia—Lucia, Cecilia Ta-manti Zavaski; Alice A. Giana; Edgardo; Eugenio Battain; Henry Ashton, Alessandro Modesti; Raymond, Artidoro Maureri; Lord Arthur Buckles, A. Neri. La Boheme—Mimi, Ester Ferrabini; Musetta, A. Giana; Rudolfo, Gerardi Graziani; Marcello, Alessandro Modesti; Schaunard, Pompeo Elena; Colline, Giovanni Martino; Benoit Alcindoro, Natale Cervi. Carmen—Carmen, Dolores Frau; Michaela, Olga Simzis; Frasquita, A. Giana; Mercedes, A. Bugamelli; Don Jose, Eugenio Battain; Zuniga, A. Maureri; Escamillo, Angelo Antola; Morales, Pompeo Elena; Remensado, A. Neri. And Faust, to finish the week, the cast not being obtainable at time of going to press.

American

Thomas Jefferson, the son of his father, is presenting the Jefferson idea of Rip Van Winkle very much as we saw it when Mr. Jefferson appeared at the California Theatre several years ago. This time, however, Mr. Jefferson's company is not as good. There is a charm about this play that holds auditors until the final curtain fall. Mr. Jefferson's farewell appearances will be made Saturday afternoon and evening, and at the Sunday matinee Corinne, the dainty little comedienne who is a favorite in San Francisco, will liven things up with John J. McNally's latest musical play, Lola from Berlin. She will be supported by Mark Sullivan and a clever company of 40 and promises to provide a jolly and thoroughly satisfying entertainment. The musical interruptions by William Jerome and Jean Schwartz will be many and pleasing.

Princess

Bankers and Brokers are drawing large houses. This piece has been seen here a number of times before and is familiar to theatregoers. On Monday night the piece did not run as smoothly as it might, owing to the extreme nervousness of the principals. The rough edges have been smoothed away and the play is now going better every night. The work of Sydney de Gray in the part of the man who is always looking for a millionaire is once more calling attention to the fact that he is a very clever actor. Kolb and Dill are funny and Adele Rafter beautiful. The chorus work is most commendable. Bankers and Brokers will be continued next week, after which Lonesome Town will be put on. The engagement of Kolb and Dill at the Princess will terminate February 28.

Alcazar

Sweet Kitty Bellairs is in its third and final week and the nightly attendance is large enough to justify the management in continuing the Belasco comedy another three weeks if contracts for other plays did not stand in the way. In fact, the success of Sweet Kitty Bellairs has topped even that achieved by The Rose of The Rancho. The Crisis will be given next week. This drama was James K. Hackett's starring vehicle for two seasons. It is an adaptation of Winston Churchill's novel of the same title, which is still among the "best sellers," although it was first published almost a decade ago. In the cast will be all the Alcazar favorites and many supernumeraries, and the pictorial side of the production is to be taken care of with the Alcazar's well-known fidelity to realism and detail. Evelyn Vaughan and Bertram Lytell will be very happily disposed of in The Crisis.

What is Morris' Purpose Out Here?

Wm. Morris, the New York vaudeville agent, who is fostering the Independent vaudeville movement, which is backed by The White Rats, left Thursday night for Portland, where he will be gone a week. He will return here and go to Los Angeles. The Dramatic Review will have some news concerning his movements out here upon his return. There is no question but that Morris' movements are causing a flutter of interest. He has come prominently to the front as a circuit promoter in the past year and is operating the following houses: The American Music Hall, formerly the Garden Theatre, in Chicago; the American Music Hall, and the Lincoln Square Theatre, in New York; the Orpheum, in Boston; the Fulton, in Brooklyn; the William Penn, in Philadelphia; and the American Music Hall, in Washington. In St. Louis he has a place under construction, which he expects to open soon under the name of the Orpheum Music Hall. He is building a place in Buffalo, which he will call the American Music Hall. He promises to open another house in New York in September, which will be known as the Broadway Theatre. His presence here to sign Jeffries for a tour of his vaudeville houses is only an incident of his trip.

LOS ANGELES LETTER

mime dancing. Illustrated songs by Nell and Vior Hill, and a farce, Mistaken Identity, complete the bill.

FISCHER'S—Ski Hi, at Fischer's, is the best of the very excellent musical comedy offerings produced by Charles Alphon during his tenure as producing director. The playlet originally written in two acts and produced at the Madison Square roof garden last summer, is tuneful to a degree and full to the brim with appealing humor which seems to reach the mid-ribs of the audience without any of the clap-stick methods commonly resorted to by writers of the popular priced musical comedy. Tracy MacDermott and Dot Raymond, new leading man and leading woman, possess singing voices of real sweetness which they handle rarely well, while Ben T. Dillon, Max Bloom, Frank Vack and Pearl Jordnere prove an able quartet of fun makers. Nellie Montgomery is also much in evidence and sings a real song in the lullaby. The plot has to do with a certain title hunting young woman who, being unable to marry a nobleman on earth, borrows Dick Ferris' balloon and birds' houses, stranded upon the domains of King Ski-Hi, Jupiter. Chief among the musical numbers are I'm Looking for a Sweetheart, Naughty Eyes, The Sights We See Down Below, A Woman's Only a Woman, and Workmen of the King.

WALKER—The bill for the week at Walker's is a very strong one. Grace Darnley, an acrobatic dancer of more than ordinary merit, is billed as a headliner. De Vaule and Lotta have a sketch entitled The Pipe Dreamer and the Directoire Girl. The Alder Trio, jugglers, in a new act and Moss—Warrior in old-time ballads, Libby Blondelle and Aubrey Carr, who are not strangers here, having been connected with Fischer's company for some time past, break into vaudeville. They have a snappy singing specialty, which includes some beautiful gowns and quick changes.

Vaudeville

J. F. BOGARDUS, Vaudeville Editor

Orpheum

Sketches are predominant on the bill at the Orpheum this week. Harrison Hunter, that excellent actor, last seen here with Katherine Gray, was the headliner in The Van Dyck. Cosmos Gordon Lenox's effort is an unique and entertaining affair and is greatly enhanced by Mr. Hunter's clever work. The sketch left a marked impression. Another sketch, enacted mostly by a pair of bare arms, two funny legs and two very dexterous feet, a little plot and two other people, was given by the Chadwick Trio. Ida May Chadwick, The Hee-Haw Girl, is certainly a clever dancer and a very real success. Julia Herne's sketch, A Mountain Cinderella, is a clever Western playlet and acted very well. The Murray Sisters are typical American girls who sing American songs. They are nicely gowned and deliver their songs with telling effect. Jewell's Manikins are always interesting and marvelous and proved, as during last week, a very strong attraction. Bert Howard and Effie Lawrence, in The Stage Manager, played, sang and danced cleverly. The Harvey Family, three women and two men, do an excellent wire act that secures decided approval. The Josselin Trio do some good aerial work, quite on a par with the Orpheum offering.

Wigwam

The reign of Jeffries, the big war chief at the Wigwam, closes tonight. His two weeks' engagement has been the most notable and successful one ever played in vaudeville here. Ralph Pincus and Manager Harris divined and produced him as a star, and his stellar qualities have exceeded their highest expectation and resulted in William Morris jumping across the continent and securing Jeffries for a twenty weeks' contract to appear in the Eastern theatres in Morris' circuit at $2,500 per week. The other turns were furnished by Madden and Fitzpatrick, in The Turn of the Tide; Mr. and Mrs. Esmond, in The Soldier of Propville; Zello Troupe of acrobats; Blockson and Burns; Herbert Cyril; the Coopers. Next week's bill comprises Mlle. Summerville and her dancing horse, Columbus, in the best horse act ever seen here; Alice, Wenona and Maud Francis, the champion women rifle and pistol shots; Holmes and Hollinston, in Looking for Betsy; Payne and Lee, superior singers and dancers; Brown and Hodges, Indians, singing cartoonists; John Birch, the man with the hats; Thomas and Payne, roller skate dancers; Don Carlos, the only trained gorilla in captivity.

National

A goodly company at the National included Mike Bernard, the accomplished pianist, and Little Blossom, as the tramp and the soubrette. Joe Demming and company, in The Traveling Man, were the features in their Pullman car act, where the traveling man and his companion entertained their audiences in the liveliest kind of way. Stephen Gratton and company, in Locked Out at 3 A. M., a very laughable skit; Cree, enigma of century;

Gus Bruno, with funny ways and voices; Sabine and Vera, variety entertainers, and Mamie Franklin, a clever soubrette. Manager Grauman's next week's attractions will be Buster Brown and Tige, with a supporting company, in Auntie's Visit; Phil Staats, the jolly jester; Petching Brothers, in a scenic and musical novelty; Emily Benner, the baritone songstress; Carson Brothers, the Apollos of vaudeville; Lamar and Gabriel, acrobats.

Pantages-Empire

Manager Winstock entered the field as producer this week in presenting La Reve des Artists (The Artists' Dream), with Sisters Bellefonte, Parisian models, imported to pose as ancient and modern Venus, Psyche, the Maid in the Moon, the Chilly Model, Diana and Innocence, sixteen studies in all. The subjects were chosen and staged by Mr. Winstock and the act was a big draw. The De Kock Brothers did some wonderful things in head balancing, with a dog as intermediate balancer. Then there were Clayton, Glenn and company, picturesque burlesque, The Matador, with five people, including Will Visscher, the old-time journalist and humorous newspaper writer; Rentfow and Jansen, The Second Mr. Fiddle; Southern Quartet, Plantation Pastimes; Leonard Kane, the Dancer in the Golden Frame. Another great bill for next week: Thaler's dogs and pony circus; Hodges and Launchmere, in feline opera; McCune and Grand, eccentric comedy acrobats; Kresco and Fox, Prattling Pals; The Munsons, comedy sketch, The Hold Up; Jim and Kitty Brady.

Thalia Concert Hall

The sun shines again on Pacific Street as well as Pacific Avenue. As for the illumination at night, especially around the Thalia, the avenue was never more than a penny candle compared to the street. The rain dampened the Thalia's customers but not its business. It drove them in in crowded numbers. The new people for next week are the Neapolitan Opera Trio; Morse and Brown; Wayne the Wizard; Rose Stevens, Ella May and Salome.

Gayety

James Post and company will produce one of their comedies on Sunday, with vaudeville acts by the Ranaldo Duo, comedy acrobats; Dow and Dow, Hebrew comedians; Frank and Irene Maloone, comedy singing and dancing act.

Novelty

Well, well, it looks as though George Clayton had turned the trick, for the Novelty has been doing a land-office business this week, with a combination of Jim Post and vaudeville, three shows a day. The Sunday opening was a corker, and business was big all through the week. Jim Post and his beauty chorus put on his familiar Murphy in Paris, supported by J. Edwin Matthews, Joe Hayden, Millar Bacon, Paul Angelo and May Ashley. The skit went with a hurrah. Paul Angelo is a clever young comedian and Millar Bacon a juvenile who can sing. Post was his very funny self and Joe Hayden was unctuously

Vaudeville Notes

Martin Beck, general manager of the Orpheum Circuit, arrived here Wednesday on a flying visit to President Morris Meyerfeld. Mr. Beck left Friday night for Los Angeles, and will return here Monday on his way to Salt Lake. Mr. Beck's tour of inspection includes all the theatres of the Orpheum Circuit. He is accompanied by Mark A. Luescher, general press agent of the Orpheum Circuit, and Pat J. Casey, a prominent New York vaudeville booking agent.

Vaudeville Notes

Two pistol shots caused Policemen Wood, Heggarty and O'Brien to hurry to Sutter and Steiner Streets at 3:30 last Monday morning, where they found D. J. Grauman of the National Theatre, very much excited and holding a smoking pistol. He said that he had been approached by a footpad, who pressed a revolver in his face and demanded his valuables. Grauman says that he had noticed the fellow following him and so was prepared. He jumped back, and when he drew his revolver the hold-up man turned and ran, and only to Grauman's poor marksmanship does the would-be robber owe his escape.

Hugh Emmet, the entertainer, is playing Eastern dates. His route is as follows: Jan. 25, Hathaway's, Brockton, Mass.; Feb. 1, Hathaway's, Malden, Mass.; 8, Bennett's, Ottawa, Can.; 15, Bennett's, Montreal Can.; 22, Keith's, Portland, Me.; March 1, Keith's, Boston, Mass.; 8, Keith's, Providence, R. I.; 15, Keith's, Philadelphia, Pa.; 22, Broadway, Camden, N. J.

Robert Hargrove, formerly employed as a watchman for Ringling Brothers' Circus, was on January 22 in San Bernardino sentenced to thirty-five years at Folsom for robbing J. C. Harter last September. Harter was beating a ride on a circus train and was robbed brutally handled and thrown from the train going thirty miles an hour. On his description of his assailant, Hargrove was arrested at Yuma, A. T., a week later. The principal witness against Hargrove was Lloyd Mitchell, a San Quentin convict, to whom Hargrove confessed while both were in the county jail in San Bernardino.

John Considine has been a week in Southern California, and has added the Queen Theatre in San Diego to the S. & C. Circuit. Levy sends people down to open at the Queen on Monday. See our booking lists.

W. J. Holmes and Ivia Holliston are now singing that sweet song, When Sweet Marie Was Sweet Sixteen, as a duet, with charming effect.

The simultaneous visit of Martin Beck and William Morris to San Francisco does not appear to be an aggressive one. On the contrary there is no talk of acquiring new theatres and vindictive opposition warfare. We think the movement will result in Morris getting a line of theatres to the Coast and the Orpheum, Sullivan & Considine and Pantages Circuits retaining their territories unchanged, and the three acting in concert to retain their circuits intact against all outside invaders.

Colonel Will Visscher, a well-known political speaker and newspaper man, visits San Francisco after some twenty years absence, being connected with the Clayton, Gleen and company picturesque burlesque, The Matador, at the Pantages-Empire Theatre. Visscher was on Figaro when last here.

Curtis Theatre, Denver, week Jan. 24: Three Sadas, jugglers; Misses Patrick and West, singing and dancing; Claude Markley, banjo king; Frank and True Rice, comedians and acrobats; Adonis and his dog.

D. J. Grauman would not be held up. As the founder of the National Theatre was going to his home at 1722 Steiner Street early on Monday morning in the rain, he was stopped by an armed footpad with an order to throw up his hands. Those who know of Grauman's quickness of mental resolve and vigor of action will not be surprised to learn that before the footpad could act, Grauman whipped out his revolver and fired two shots at the speed-dancing sprinter. That the night was rainy and the vision dimmed saved his life. A couple of policemen rushed to the scene, but could find no traces of the footpadist.

HENRY B. HARRIS, manager of The Lion and the Mouse, The Third Degree, The Chorus Lady and other current successes, early in his career managed Lottie Collins, who made Ta-ra-ra-boom-de-ay famous in a far-cical operetta, The Devilbird.

attractions that play the larger cities. The crippled conditions of transportation in this locality makes it impossible to state the bookings for the coming week.

C. H. CHACE.
Eugene, Ore., January 25.—Tonight Hi Henry's Minstrels invaded the histrionic calm that has prevailed of late. They played to fair business, considering that patrons of burnt cork are awaiting the advent of local Eagles' lodge talent in mid-night complexion, 28-29. The Lieutenant and the Cowboy, Feb. 2; Kerry Gow, 5.

OTTO GILSTRAP.
Tacoma, January 16.—The extreme cold weather was bad for business at the local playhouses, but with milder weather and many legislators from Olympia in town to spend Sunday, the theatres are all doing record business tonight. The cold kept many away from the Jefferson presentation of Rip Van Winkle. Thomas Jefferson has improved greatly since his last appearance here and gave an excellent rendition of his famous father's play. The supporting company was a capable one. 16—The Devil's Auction. The same old show is on the boards tonight at the Tacoma, with Shore Acres, 17. The Strollers, 18; and The Alaskan, 23-24. The King and Queen of Gamblers at the Savoy had as many dramatic situations as lovers of melodrama could possibly wish. Miss Thornton, as the heroine, played her part in a finished manner, ably supported by Noel Travers as a Western gambler in a make-up much like his Rance in The Girl of the Golden West. Marie Van Tassel, Wm. Thorne, Carl Hinkley and Blanche Bryant add materially to the success of the production. Nothing that the Star Theatre has offered its patrons has pleased more than Mrs. Temple's Telegram, which was the week's bill. Miss Oswald, who wore some fetching gowns, was at her very best. Robert Lawrence as the husband and Allan Holluber as the prevaricating friend, made a lively pair and John McCabe as the butcher and Ed Lawrence as the hairdresser (the same role he played here last season with a road show), were comical in the extreme. Miss Cordray and Mr. Vané in small parts played their roles with the same excellence that characterizes all their work. Miss Robeson in a make-up that was ridiculously comical, created much laughter and her little scene with Mr. Holluber was one of the best bits of comedy in the play. The living room where the scenes were enacted was a very pretty bit of stage furnishing. Next week—Puddin'head Wilson, with Henry McKee in the title role. Tom Sullivan, well known here when with the Allen company, and Marie Van Tassel, who has been appearing at the Savoy, have been especially engaged for the production. At the Pantages, Thalers' dogs and ponies gave one of the finest acts of the kind seen here, the fox terriers being unusually bright. Hodges and Luncheon were truly funny, especially with their cat concert, and no better colored comedians have been seen at this house. The Hickman-Miller comedy of Twins, which employs five people, is a good act. The rest of the bill was ordinary. Jan. 18—Lewis and Lake musical comedy company, sixteen people; Stubblefield Trio, aerial trapezists; Clare Dagneau and Wilson and Murray, singers and dancers; Ross and Adams, German comedians; Phil La Tosca, juggler. Mr. George Keane, the popular singer of illustrated songs, has returned from California, and was again heard at the Grand Theatre this week, singing Tipperary. The military travesty, The Battle of Too Soon, by Halliday and Curley, was a sure cure for the blues and won much favor. Caron and Herbert, acrobats, offer some startling and eccentric stunts, their whirling somersaults being particularly well done. Earl Grudeller had four clever dogs who won much applause. Connolly, Weinrich and Connolly pleased with their singing and Margaret Severance and her company of five people in a sketch entitled New-Adams, made up an entertaining program of vaudeville. Jan. 18—Carlye, Moore and company; Geo. P. Watson and Little Florence; Leo Theodors, acrobats; Henry and Alice Carver, sharpshooting and juggling; Jack Cutter and Ida Boulden. A. H.

Sacramento, Cal., Jan. 28.—The stormy weather has interfered with the show business lately, although some good attractions have been presented. The biggest business ever done in the Clunie was the Ben Hur production, 15-16, many people coming from out of town to attend. Fifty Miles from Boston gave a fine show, 17. The Native Sons Minstrels had good houses, 18-19. Brewster's Millions drew big, 20. The Holy City gave a splendid performance, 24. The Clunie has been the following so far for February: E. H. Sothorn, 1-2; Thomas Jefshooters, were unusually clever. Jack Cotter and Ida Boulden were a big hit in Tacoma, and will be welcomed back. Their dancing and singing win them many admirers. George Watson and Florence Little, in their Matrimonial Bargain had a clean and amusing sketch, and Les Theodors, in their acrobatic stunts, pleased. Jan. 25: Lewis McCord & Co.; Art Adair; Marjorie Barrett, in imitations; The Three Van Die-mans, aerial gymnasts; Jarvis and Martin, comedy jugglers; Lukens Pony Circus, Mandel Lourie, manager of the Savoy Theatre Stock Co., is said to have failed to pay his players for the past week, and he could not be found today by the angry Thespians. Lourie appeared at the theatre last evening, after having been absent since Friday night, and is said to have escaped serious injury at the hands of angry creditors by a narrow margin. Following the alleged disappearance of Lourie, members of the troupe took charge of the theatre and have been running it. Members of the company said this morning that they would continue running the theatre until they "split loose" or "made good." One of Harry Lukens' seven performing bears, which appeared at the Grand Theatre several months ago, will have a "Made-in-Tacoma" wooden leg. The artificial limb has been built by the Tacoma Artificial Limb Company, 245 South D Street, and will be sent to Lukens, who is at present entertaining theatregoers of Southern California with his famous Patrons of the Grand Theatre will probably remember that the largest cost of the bear was minus part of a leg. Bruin lost his foot in a trap. The artificial leg is covered with hair and has real claws. The leg is so balanced that it will be difficult to tell that the performing bear has not four real for-sure legs.

A. H. Watsonville, Cal., Jan. 27.—Elleford Co., Jan. 14-16, to capacity business, notwithstanding rainy weather. Kidnaped, Dr. Bill, Cinderella and The Town Constable, all presented in the most libelous and comic manner. Stetson's Uncle Tom's Cabin Co., Jan. 21, to very poor business. This was of the awfully comic, cheaply acted type. The Ed Redmond Co. opened, Jan. 25, to good house. Business was good both Tuesday and tonight, and will probably be capacity before the engagement ends. The Redmond Co. presents good, clever people in well-mounted plays, and is one of the most popular companies that has ever appeared here. The Little Theatre continues with motion pictures, illustrated songs and vaudeville, to capacity business. The Blossom sketch artists, are the headliners this week.

Ask Me!

A mental stomachic ballad, respectfully dedicated to those who have been there.

You ask me why I'm on the Wagon?
What's the rush and what's the hurry?
Simple the answer to one who knows
"Omaha and Bill Murray!"

How oft have the agents landed there,
Bright-eyed, ardent, without worry
Who muttered palsied on going away—
"Omaha and Bill Murray!"

Palsied, soused, and with fearful headache!
Tongue with taste like polecat furry!
Blear eyes that tell the old, old story!
"Omaha and Bill Murray!"

With lips that jabber senseless twaddle,
Hearts that beat in fearsome flurry!
It's heaven to meet but hell to beat
"Omaha and Bill Murray!"

You ask me why I'm on the Wagon—
Ice-wagon, Ash-cart, Hearse or Surrey
Simple the answer to one who knows
"Omaha and Bill Murray!"
—Sworn to by John F. Harley (in Kansas).

Personals

CHARLIE WALKER, who has the theatre in Ventura, is very popular in that town, and he is turning his intimate knowledge of the show business to good effect. Ventura should appreciate his efforts.

OLIVER DOUD BYRON, who is playing John Burkett Ryder in The Lion and the Mouse, was a member of the company that was seen in East Lynne the first time it was ever produced on any stage, the premier taking place at the Holiday Street Theatre, Baltimore, in the spring of 1861.

FRED LEE, who tried to make a show town out of Roseville Junction, threw up the opera house there last month, after a disastrous two or three months' trial. The usual reason was the cause of this—rental so high that it would make a manager hustle to pay a like amount in a city five times as big.

MARK HANNA, the proprietor of the Star Theatre, Monterey, has purchased the Sunset bill posting plant in that city and hereafter will conduct the business. Mr. Hanna is familiar with this line of business and will give the bill posting and distribution of advertising matter his personal attention. Mr. Hanna has been a decided success in Monterey and has a few surprises up his sleeve that will be of interest to the show situation in the Salinas Valley.

HENRY B. HARRIS, accompanied by his wife, will sail for Europe on February 18, touching at the Azores and Madeira, and, leaving the vessel at Gibraltar, will make a tour of Spain, afterwards visiting Nice, Monte Carlo, and then proceeding leisurely through France, will arrive in London the latter part of March, in order to be on the ground to prepare for the London engagement of Rose Stahl in James Forbes' comedy, The Chorus

Lady. It was Mr. Harris' original intention to make a trip to Japan and the Orient before proceeding to London, but on account of the postponement of the engagement of The Third Degree, which was originally booked at the Hudson Theatre for January 4, and which has been changed to February 1, Mr. Harris has been compelled to forego his long-cherished plan to visit the Orient.

The San Francisco Opera Company Returns to Seattle and Pleases

SEATTLE, Jan. 25.—MOORE THEATRE—Mme. Gadski packed the house last Saturday evening to a more than appreciative audience. Mme. Gadski was at her best and very graciously repeated every encore. Ben Hur opens tonight for the entire week. The advance sale of seats have been enormous.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE—The popular San Francisco Opera Company, with many of the old-time favorites and some new personalities that urge attention, arrived at the Grand yesterday, producing The Strollers, and which will run for the entire week. A big audience extended the glad hand to Teddy Webb last night, and Frank Bertrand, Russell Powell and Eugene Weiner were also included. In fact, all the familiar faces in the ensemble came in for their share. Amy Leicester, being the only feminine portion of the Healy forces to return, was received like a long-lost sister, and the two new members, Evelyn Kellogg and Lucille Palmer, were made to feel at home. The Strollers is the best thing that the company have produced in this city for some few years, and has a splendid chorus to back up the principals. Tonight is Elks night, and in compliment to J. Russell Powell the theatre will be decorated the purple and white of that order. A large number of the seats have been reserved and Mr. Powell's friends will be there in force.

SEATTLE THEATRE—Jane Eyre is this week's attraction at the Seattle, and the company is a good one. The piece is well staged and dressed and the most cheerful piece of news is that the same company will stay over for another week, playing Thorns and Orange Blossoms.

LOIS THEATRE—The Pantages stock company is this week producing The Judge and the Jury. The play presents a large number of characters and they are all well interpreted. Mr. Frawley handles the leading role with his usual ability, and Miss May is exceptionally good in all scenes. The entire company did good work, Sheffield and Longsdale being especially effective.

ORPHEUM THEATRE—The Orpheum still continues to be one of the biggest drawing cards in the city, opening with an entire new bill weekly. This week's numbers are: Imro Fox, the unique comic conjurer and deceptionist; At the Sound of the Gong, a dramatic incident; Bill Gaston and Ethel Green in their sketch, Spooneyville; Tony Wilson and Mme. Heloise, in their bounding mat act; the Amoros Sisters, in their Parisian novelty gymnastics; Claudius and Scarlet, expert banjoists; Armstrong and Verne, a quaint pair of Australian entertainers, and a new set of motion pictures.

E. MORGENSTERN.

Socialistic Play

Upton Sinclair, the novelist, whose play, Prince Hagan, was a failure, will make a new departure in presenting to the public the Socialistic policies he supports through a dramatic company he will put on the road. The company will consist of actors to be selected and drilled by himself in three one-act plays he has written on socialistic lines. One of the plays is entitled John D., and Sinclair has advertised for an actor whose physical and facial appearance resemble those of the oil magnate to take the title role. "I think it will prove an interesting venture, as there has never been a socialistic theatrical company on the road, so far as I know," said the author. "The characters in the play to which the advertisements refer are entitled John D. and The Author. The scene is a beach in Southern California. The presentation of John D. is thoroughly good-natured—in fact, much more sympathetic than any other I know of. John D. is greatly interested in the socialistic view of himself—he is astonished to find there is one person in existence who appreciates his perplexities and regards him as a benefactor in the community. His ardor chills very suddenly, however, when he learns how the concentration in industry he has effected makes it easy for the people to take his money away from him. In the end he is left appalled before the vision of the impending revolution."

Chas. Erin Verner writes: Antioch, Cal., Jan. 25. We were to play Rio Vista, 2 nights, but got a big flood instead, and no show till tomorrow evening. As the sunshine remembers the flowers, as the seal remembers his path through the ocean, as the bee remembers the honeyfilled bowers, as the sea remembers its undulatory motion, and so I will always remember thee. The rain is only like broken patches now of bad weather, and I think it has begun to clear, which will be very nice for us unwilling voyageurs, don't you know. Berch sends his best regards. He has just returned to the show for a day, having been ahead. We play return date to Coalinga by request, also play Fresno and other places which to remember are confusing to a young mind like mine. I am getting all the fun available here, which is to be found standing on the bank of a mud-mixed river, watching things float by that should be on terra firma, such as dog-houses, pigpens, sections of fences, frontier lavatories, hats, caps, general merchandise and defunct specimens of the cat, dog, sheep and rat families, floating onward to the beautiful land of I-don't-know-where. Au revoir! G'luck!

Alcazar

The Crisis, which is announced as the Alcazar's attraction for the coming week, is a dramatization of Winston Churchill's famous story. It deals with that intense period of American history at the time of Lincoln's first election to the presidency, when the Civil War began, and the scenes are laid in the city of St. Louis, then in a state of ferment. According to the story, of which the play is the pith, The Crisis is the crucial period of a nation and of two lives, and the audience is made to feel it by the power of the gifted author, and the clever, artistic manner in which the creations are wrought out by the Alcazar company of actors and actresses, who stand at the topmost round of their profession. The play, though in the hotbed of it all, is not in any sense what is familiarly known as a war play, being merely in the atmosphere of and intensified by its near presence and suggestion. In the costumes of half a century ago, and with such sterling dramatic material to interpret, the Alcazar players can be depended upon to make The Crisis an exceedingly interesting offering.

Orpheum

The program at the Orpheum for the week beginning this Sunday matinee will reach the highest possible standard of vaudeville excellence. Johnnie McVeigh and his College Girls will present an act specially originated for them by B. A. Rolfe, called An Incident in a Dormitory. McVeigh is a capital comedian and the four handsome girls who support him are excellent singers and dancers. Leander de Cordova, a magnetic and popular actor, will with the assistance of a sterling company appear for one week only in a thrilling dramatic incident, entitled Wireless. Frank Byron and Louise Langdon will introduce a new edition of their famous skit, The Dude Detective. Seldom's Venus, which is considered to be the finest exhibition of living statuary ever witnessed in Europe, will be seen for the first time in this city. The Venus is the chief of a series of groups reproducing such masterpieces as Samson Bound, Reaching the Winning Post and The Fountain. Charles Wayne of comic opera popularity, with the assistance of Gertrude des Roches, will appear in a tabloid musical comedy, called The Morning After. Paul La Croix, an eccentric comedian and juggler, will appear for next week only, which will be the last of the Murray Sisters and those wire walkers, the Harvey Family. A series of motion pictures, specially imported for the Orpheum Circuit, depicting scenes of the recent Italian earthquake, will conclude the performance.

Valencia

When Knighthood Was in Flower, staged and costumed in sumptuous fashion and splendidly acted, will be presented for the last times this Sunday afternoon and evening, and on Monday night the versatile members of this hard-working stock company will take a long jump from the sock and buskin period of King Henry VIII and come to the extremely up-to-date time of A Contented Woman, Charles H. Hoyt's great satire on woman suffrage. The action takes place in Denver, where members of the fair sex are allowed the ballot. As the politically inclined wife, Blanche Stoddard will have a distinct opportunity to shine in her own winsome way, and as her husband, Benton Holme, Thomas MacLarnie will have a lively and congenial role. Charles Dow Clark will have a part that fits him like a glove in henpecked Uncle Toby, and Lillian Andrews will also revel in Aunt Jim. Reginald Travers will be Vandyke Beard, a colored butler, and will sing The Best I Get Is Much Obligated to You, assisted by two young ladies. Other specialties will be contributed by Gerald Harcourt, Grace Travers and Antoinette Crawford, and all of the capable members of the Valencia stock company will be at their best in the crisp, marked Hoyt type of characters in A Contented Woman. Herman Heller and his orchestra of soloists promise an unusually interesting musical program, and the production will be up to the high standard established by the Valencia management. The Prince Chap, which will serve to introduce Mace Greenleaf, the new leading man of the Valencia stock company to a San Francisco audience, will follow A Contented Woman.

American

Thomas Jefferson will be seen in his characterization of Rip Van Winkle for the last times this Saturday afternoon and evening, and at the Sunday matinee Corinne, the peerless singing comedienne, who has a remarkable record of brilliant achievements in farce, musical comedy, comedy drama and comic opera, and who is a great favorite in San Francisco, will begin a week's engagement in the musical play, Lola from Berlin. The lyrics and music are of the liveliest and catchiest style imaginable. The company engaged to support Corinne includes such well-known musical comedy artists as Mark Sullivan, Hazel Carlton, Franklin Vail, Henry Carl Lewis, Lillie May White, Osborn Clemson, Anna Mortland, Stephen Stott, Adele Irish and Pearl Revare, together with a comely chorus of singing and dancing girls. Corinne will be followed at the American by a lavish production of Martin V. Merle's powerful love story of early Rome, The Light Eternal.

Spotlights

The Josephine Duffrey Company, after four weeks of rain ever since they landed in the State, are laying off in San Francisco, enjoying the present period of sunshine.

Great credit is due the various vaudeville artists and members of the Shirley Company who so generously donated their services for the benefit held January 15th at the Spokane Theatre for the relief of the Italian sufferers. Managers Muller of the Orpheum and Walker of the Pantages are also deserving of mention for their work and efforts to make the Spokane benefit a great success.

The Moore Stock Company, well known in Utah and Nevada, produced the melodrama, While the City Sleeps, at the Utahna Theatre, Ogden, week of January 17th. In the company are: Seldy Roach, Harry G. Roscoe, Fred'k Moore, Frank L. Whittier, Pearl Ethier Moore, Wm. S. Donovan, Ira E. Earle, Joan Storm, Amie Ince and Jas. Blunt.

Big Comedy Season in Process of Incubation

The presence of Arthur Williams here, ahead of The Wolf, recalls most vividly some of the most pleasant memories connected with San Francisco theatricals. Mr. Williams first struck San Francisco some thirteen years ago with Hotel Topsy Turvy, which was a laughing conglomeration headed by Eddie Foy and Bertie Fowler. So well did that venture of musical comedy pan out that some three years later he piloted to the old California the most celebrated company of farceurs and entertainers ever known here. What a grand collection that was, and what a fruitful season in a financial way resulted! Probably never before was gathered such a galaxy of performers of the first water. There were Mathews and Bulger, Tony Hart, John Dunne, Walter Jones, May Marble, Norma Whalley, Bessie Tannehill and a lot of others whom we do not just now recall. It would be impossible now to get together such a company at salaries that would give the management a chance to live. San Francisco will never forget that aggregation nor the nerve and initiative that prompted John W. Dunne to risk so much in bringing them here. Years have passed and the memory of that season is still fresh with us. Last year Mr. Williams, who had been longing to try out the musical and comedy taste of the Coast reappeared, with no special booming or trumpeting, bringing with him a bright musical farce called Dream City. It proved to be a hummer, the best musical show of the season and it was a big winner everywhere. It was another success for John W. Dunne. People all along the line kept asking Mr. Dunne to come again, and soon, for he seemed to possess the knack of knowing exactly what our people wanted, and his selection of players could always be depended upon. In Dream City there were Little Chip and Mary Marble, Bob Hearty, Johnny Johnson, Dan Marble, May Franchonetta, Susie Rocamara, and a splendid chorus. It was a dream of a show. Mr. Williams, since arriving here, has been besieged on every hand to take up the matter of a big revival here of the shows that Mr. Dunne has been identified with and he has already gotten into communication with Mr. Dunne, who has expressed a willingness to bring West this summer a great aggregation of farce comedy stars and revive A Milk White Flag, George Ade's A Night of the Fourth, Dream City and a host of others that are great American comedies, and he is ready to bring many of the originals in these plays with him. Could he be induced to do this, what a summer for us—with say four weeks in Seattle, two in Portland, eight in San Francisco, and six in Los Angeles.

Play Stopped by Queen of Earth

Los Angeles, January 24.—While the chimes were ringing out the hour of 12 o'clock and the prince was hunting vainly for the fleeing Cinderella at the fairy extravaganza at the Auditorium Theatre yesterday afternoon, the big audience was treated to a specialty which was new down on the bills nor provided as an extra turn by the management. Cinderella had disappeared, running with all her might to get back to her rags and hearthstone, and the prince with the glass slipper was rushing around trying to find this mysterious "ladye of high degree," when there stalked on the stage a fair young woman clad in conventional street costume, who held up her hand and commanded the performance be stopped. The young women and men who were taking part in the performance are not trained to meet emergencies like this, and they stopped as if rooted to the stage. Their lines were forgotten, the prince dropped the glass slipper, which wasn't glass at all and consequently didn't break, and the chorus scattered to the wings like the frightened fairies they represented. Only the orchestra of trained musicians kept right along, and this alone held the audience in check. "I am the queen of the earth and the handmaiden of heaven," announced the young woman, "and this unholy performance in a holy house must stop. There is but one consideration whereby it can continue, and that is that I be put in charge of it." By this time the stage manager and a number of stage hands had collected their wits, and the young woman was hustled further back in the wings and the police telephoned. Before the patrol wagon arrived, however, the young woman had escaped by the stage door, and when the officers arrived she was found in Central Park and was taken to the detention ward of the receiving hospital, where Dr. Sumner J. Quint examined her and signed a certificate of insanity. The unfortunate young woman is Miss Ollie Hurst of 2119 Brandon street, Edendale, a painter of china, who from overwork and the constant reading of religious articles has become demented. It is believed a few months' rest will restore her to full health.

Wants Edna's Auto

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—Charles E. Littlefield, trustee in bankruptcy for A. O. Brown & Co., the defunct brokerage firm, filed papers in an action in the Federal Court today against Edna Wallace Hopper, the actress, and A. O. Brown, asking the defendants to account for the value of an automobile and a life insurance policy, and for judgment to that amount. The automobile is valued at $7,500 and the policy was $25,000. Mr. Littlefield says these things were given to the actress by Brown without proper consideration.

Back Wall of Grand Theatre of Sacramento Falls

A portion of the back wall of the Grand Theatre on Seventh Street, K and L, Sacramento, fell Monday afternoon upon the stage, smashing scenery and sending a cloud of brick dust and mortar into the theatre. Four employees of the playhouse were the only ones in the building at the time. They state that when the crash came it shook the entire building and sounded like an explosion. A member of the Buster Brown company named Dwyer, who plays the part of Tige, was hit in the face by a small piece of flying brick, but was not seriously injured. He was standing at one end of the room by a mail box and when the crash came ducked out of the door, not quite soon enough, however, to escape being hit. Charles Sovereign, the property man, had just gone into another part of the building for a broom. His escape seems almost a marvel. Just a second before the wall fell he was standing directly under it. Mike Smith, one of the owners of the building, was also on the stage. He was standing near the footlights and escaped being hit by the falling bricks only by jumping into the orchestra pit. That none of these men were injured seriously is considered marvelous. Heavy south winds that have been blowing for the last few days are said to be the cause of the trouble. The Grand Theatre is so situated that the back of the building is almost entirely exposed to the wind and rain. The part of the wall that fell was just where the sheet-iron extension roof is joined to the brick. There was not a brace of any kind on the inside or outside, and the whole section of the building over the stage is almost without support. Proprietor Godard of the theatre stated that he would continue the show without delay in the Acme Theatre next door, which has been run by him as a motion picture house for the last six months. He said that he could not estimate the loss, but thought it would not be heavy. A great deal of the scenery was ruined. He said the Grand would not be used for vaudeville performances any more, but the Acme would be utilized instead. The stage of the theatre is to be enlarged and prepared for the Del Lawrence Stock Company, which will open there some time next month.

Spotlights

The Half-Breed, a striking story of life in Arizona, by Oliver Morosco and Harry Cottrell, and in which Mace Greenleaf, the new leading man at the Valencia scored a great hit in Los Angeles, is booked for an early presentation at that playhouse.

The Del Lawrence Company, after their week at the American Theatre, will return to San Jose. They decided not to fill the time in Sacramento at the Grand after the back wall fell down, and having lost out on a proposed invasion of Seattle, there was only San Jose to fall back upon.

The County Chairman, which will follow The Prince Chap at the Valencia Theatre, and which will undoubtedly reduplicate the success of The College Widow, George Ade's other comedy, which broke all records during the holidays, will have another assortment of capital characters for the members of the stock company. Charles Dow Clark is already hard at work on the part of Sassafras, the colored politician, and Helen Lackaye will have another part equally as strong as Flora Wiggins.

John Drew will bring Jack Straw to the Van Ness Theatre in the spring. He will be accompanied by all the members of the cast that appeared with him during the New York run of the play.

The Red Mill will be an early attraction at the Van Ness Theatre. Charles Dillingham will send a big cast and an elaborate production for the engagement here.

There will be one matinee only of The Wolf, and that will be given on Saturday.

Clyde Fitch's comedy triumph, Girls, will be here a short time hence.

A dramatization of The Spoilers, one of the most widely read novels of the day, will be presented at the Valencia Theatre shortly.

Richard Carle, the comedian, author and composer, will make his first stellar appearance in San Francisco on March 20th, when he comes to the Van Ness Theatre with his new musical comedy, Mary's Lamb. It is fully fifteen years since Mr. Carle was on the Coast. When he was last here he was playing minor roles with James T. Powers in A Mad Bargain, and with the late Peter F. Dailey in A Country Sport. However, he is known here through The Tenderfoot, The Mayor of Tokio and others of his musical comedies. He will remain two weeks at the Van Ness, then making a tour to the north, to return to Chicago Memorial Day in a new musical comedy, The Hurdy-Gurdy Girl.

The Valencia Theatre management is making great preparations for a stupendous production of Barrie's delightful fantasy, Peter Pan, next month. Lloyd Carleton, former stage manager for Maude Adams, and patentee of the flying devices used in the play, will be brought from New York especially to produce the piece, and Tony Kenner, the house electrician, who acted as head of the lighting department during Miss Adams' tour, promises that the effects in his department will be perfect.

Willie Collier Writes a Criticism

WE went to see Miss Billie Burke in Love Watches last Thursday afternoon as a critic. WE sat through the entire play, but in all other respects WE were a critic. WE even read what all our other brother critics—from the Dean to the property man with the company—wrote about Love Watches before writing our own notice. WE agree with the Dean that there is visible at the Lyceum Theatre—an institution whose function is partly educational, partly recreative and partly neither—an entertaining fabric that has entered upon a career that promises continuance. That's perfectly true. The last metropolitan performance will be given next week. But the audience were well pleased. The comedy looks like a success (Herald). WE have no hesitancy in declaring Love Watches in every respect better than the Waterbury's. It is the best comedy New York has seen since The Patriot. In fact, it is another Patriot—almost. Further than this WE do not care to go. Lack of space prevents us from going into the details of the performance. Its success (Herald) is not to be wondered at. It was produced before a large and appreciative audience by a rising young manager (about 6 A. M. every morning); it is acted by a rising young actress; it could not be brighter if it were subjected to rising sun stove polish. Further than this WE do not care to go. There were frequent cries of "author," "author"—after the third act, but WE never moved a hair. In reviewing the play from London last summer WE prophesied its American success (Herald). We said then that Charles Frohman would make no mistake in presenting Miss Burke in Love Watches in America. WE believed so then: WE believe so now. WE are glad WE believed so then and now because WE believe that Charles Frohman as a rising young manager should be encouraged. As further encouragement WE tell him—reviewing the play from America—that it will go well in London. WE have no reason for believing so; but WE tell him so just the same. Further than this WE do not care to go. On the other hand, what has Charles Frohman ever done towards encouraging the native drama of Iceland? Dramatic material is lying all around us. It lies so much that it looks as if it will never get at the truth of the matter. But about Love Watches. It is said to be an evening's entertainment in four acts. That shows its inferiority to The Patriot, which accomplishes the same thing in three acts. The story of Love Watches has already been told in these columns. Neither time nor space nor city editor will permit us to go into it again. Jacqueline Burke is supposed to be engaged to Abbe Crompton. In this scene Miss Burke's successive manifestations of pity and fear for the poor broken-hearted poet were perhaps the best examples of the scene painter's cleverness with his brush and the expense account to be found in any play now current in New York—except The Patriot. Further than this WE do not care to go. The second act reveals Miss Burke's name printed on the program "Billie" Burke (sic 'em). WE take this opportunity to point out the inadequate service done by Miss Burke in placing her before the public. Why should Charles Frohman in this enlightened twentieth century and in a theatre close to the great white way advertise Miss Burke as "Billie," instead of adopting the more dignified form of William Burke? Does Mr. Frohman announce "Billie" Gillette," "Billie" Collier or "Billie" Crane? True, some years ago there was a "Willie" Collier, but if the well-known star and co-author of that justly celebrated joke—The Patriot—has with stellar honors grown from "Willie" to William, why should not as much be done for "Billie" Burke. Further than this WE do not care to go. Perhaps the most touching scene in Love Watches, and surely the one most dexterously handled by Miss Burke, is that which opens the second act. Her Mrs. Newlywed passages in that act are undoubtedly the most amusing tid-bits to be found anywhere in the modern drama—barring certain similar trifles in The Patriot. What could be neater than Miss Burke's googley-goo reading of the lines spoken to Mr. Newlywed—"Kiss me because we did not see Naples on our honeymoon"; or that other stirring speech in the same scene but in another act—"Kiss me because we did not see The Patriot?" The intense realism, the successive cadences of anguish and joy, the tender pathos, the rhapsodic delight with which Miss Burke delivered that speech will long remain in the memories of all playgoers—who have seen The Patriot. But further than this WE do not care to go.

Sequel to The Squaw Man

Edwin Milton Royle has just completed a sequel to The Squaw Man, which he has called The Halfbreed. It will be remembered that in The Squaw Man the Indian wife and mother kills herself and the English father and the little boy go back to England to assume the title and estates of a baronet. The Half Breed takes up the fortunes of the little son. When the play opens he is a grown man and an English earl. The Indian blood in his veins makes him long for his native land, and finally he deserts his father's land and title and goes back to the plains of the Southwest, from which his father had taken him so many years before. We wonder what Ollie Morosco will do with this appropriation of his title. Mr. Morosco is the owner and co-author of the most successful Western play ever written by Western authors and it is always a big money maker. It is the original Half Breed.

After Josephine Dunsmuir's death it was found that tradesmen held bills against her, aggregating $836. The bills have been pending ever since and Miss Hopper has just presented payment for them.

A Stubborn Cinderella, although by the authors of The Time, the Place and the Girl, The Girl Question and Honeymoon Trail, is an entirely different class of entertainment than its predecessors. Its characters are drawn from more pretentious walks of life, its scenes are laid in a different class of society, and even its musical numbers are more ambitious than in the former plays by these authors. It will soon be a Van Ness attraction.

Personals

JAMES G. MORTON, after a surgical operation at St. Joseph's Hospital, Tacoma, Wash., is now convalescing at that institution.

ANNIE YEAMANS is dangerously ill of pneumonia at her home in New York. Her advanced age, 73, is causing her friends much anxiety.

EUGENE WALTER, the author of Paid in Full and The Wolf, has turned out another success in the play called The Easiest Way. It has been produced by David Belasco.

LOUIS A. ELLIOTT, who has had the song-book privilege with the Georgia Minstrels the past season, left the show at El Paso and went to a hospital there for a while. Later he was taken to Chicago to await an operation.

BLANCHE HALL, who was such a favorite at Morosco's Burbank Theatre in Los Angeles for about four years, is to return there. Miss Hall will probably begin her new engagement on February 8, opening in Maude Adams' play, Peter Pan.

MACE GREENLEAF, the new leading man of the Valencia stock company, has arrived in San Francisco and is ready to begin rehearsals on The Prince Chap, the idyllic play by Edward Peple, author of The Love Route, and in which he will first face a local audience.

AN elaborate and handsomely appointed breakfast will be given Sunday at the Bohemian Club, complimentary to E. H. Sothorn. A majority of the members of the club have subscribed toward the affair, and it promises to be memorable in the annals of the club as a typical Bohemian affair. It will take place at 1 o'clock, and Dr. J. Wilson Shiels, the clever president of the club, will preside as toastmaster.

American

The comedienne, Corinne, and her clever supporting company will make their last appearance in Lola from Berlin this Saturday afternoon and evening, and at the Sunday matinee Martin V. Merle's The Light Eternal will be presented on an elaborate scale. Aside from the underlying basis of religion, the plot and story, in the beauty of its lines and the massiveness of its construction, would carve for this work a distinctly defined destiny in realms theatrical. It contains more elements of success than any play of any age which has for its foundation a Biblical theme, and everywhere it has been presented it has called forth from every walk of life—from the loftiest to the lowliest—encomiums of praise which cannot leave a doubt as to the wonderful impression it has made. From priest to layman is the verdict just the same. The company which will interpret The Light Eternal is headed by Del Lawrence, as Marco, and Jane Kelton, as the Princess Artemia. Harry Beresford in Who's Your Friend? comes next to the American.

Valencia

Hoyt's highly amusing political satire, A Contented Woman, with its hundreds of laughs and bright specialties, will be played for the last times this Sunday afternoon and evening, and on Monday night The Prince Chap, Edward Peple's beautiful love romance and brilliantly successful play, which ran for nearly a year in New York and half a year at the Criterion Theatre, in the English metropolis, will make you smile and then cry and then smile again. The Prince Chap will serve to introduce to San Francisco Mace Greenleaf, the new leading man of the Valencia Stock Company, and who comes highly praised by the press and public of other cities. Another important member of the cast will be little Bebe Daniels, one of the cleverest child actresses on the stage and who will play Claudia, before she is grown up. Blanche Stoddard will appear in the third act as the adult Claudia, and Helen Lackaye will be the American girl, Alice Travers. Thomas MacLarnie will have a congenial role as Jack Rodney, the Earl of Huntington, and Charles Dow Clark, the comedian of the company, will be in his element as Marcus Runion, a typical English man-servant. Robert Homans and Gerald Harcourt will be artist friends of Peyton, and Thomas Lowell, Grace Travers and Beatrice Nichols will complete the cast. In addition to the usual Wednesday and Sunday matinees, there will be a special performance on Friday afternoon, in honor of Lincoln's birthday. George Ade's best comedy-drama, The County Chairman, will follow The Prince Chap at the Valencia.

Orpheum

The exalted standard which vaudeville has attained will be splendidly instanced in next week's programme, when an intense, dramatic episode, entitled The Never, Never Land, by the celebrated writer, Israel Zangwill, will be presented for the first time in this city. Its cast will include Helen Grantley, who will be supported by Harry Hilliard and James M. Colville, actors of merit and popularity. The Never, Never Land is best outlined in the following description written by Mr. Zangwill himself. "At the moment of death the dying sometimes see and live over again a tragic event in their lives. Upon this basis I have built up this weird dramatic situation, in which the vision that comes before the soul of a dying woman is shown upon the stage, and the eventful happenings of her past enacted half a century before the curtain rises is again revealed to her in all its dramatic and passionate intensity. Dick Crolus of "Biff" Donovan fame in Peaches will present a brief race-track incident, entitled Shorty, which is described as a vaudeville slang masterpiece. Mr. Crolus' engagement will be limited to next week only. Other new acts in the coming programme will be the always-welcome and popular Farrell-Taylor Trio in their highly diverting black-face offering of music and comedy, That Minstrel Man, and Leon T. Rogee, a graduate of the Hungarian Conservatoire of Music, who imitates the cello, trombone and other musical instruments with marvellous accuracy. Next week will be

Alcazar

Merely Mary Ann, announced as the attraction the coming week, is simply a new version of the fairy tale, Cinderella, in a modern setting. It is best known as the play which enabled Eleanor Robson to win her footing in England. Written by Israel Zangwill, for three months it packed the Duke of York's Theatre, London, at every performance, and the best dramatic critics in the world unanimously pronounced it one of the finest things that ever came out of America. Mary Ann is a "slavey" in a London apartment house, and the story chiefly concerns her and one of the boarders, a young composer named Launcelot. We feel all the time that the young composer is a man of honor, that the lodging-house drudge is a girl of innate refinement, and their romance touches us keenly. In the character of Mary Ann there is no transformation from the rustic except that the rustic is made wistfully vivid. Mary Ann is open-eyed and eager at every experience. Her mind and heart and soul are in a pure white flame about everything. Miss Vaughan has devoted extraordinary study to the leading part, and rehearsals show that she will make it quite as effective as did the clever woman who created it, for she has power, sympathy, a moving voice—all the gifts that are requisite to make Mary Ann appeal to the best that is in humankind. Mr. Lytell and the other Alcazar players are also happily cast in this comedy of the heart.

Los Angeles Will Soon Boast of a Magnificent New Orpheum

BELASCO—The Girl of the Golden West is doing a big business for its second week. This will make the eleventh week that this play has been produced by the Belasco company within the past eight months.

GRAND—Ferris Hartman and his company, in Tar and Tartar, give us one of the best performances of the season. Anna Little is even better than she was last week and her song, Dear Land Divine, is very well rendered. There are other songs that are also well sung, and among them are Sultan, O Cease Thy Slumber, and I'm on the Water Wagon Now. The piece is well staged and worthy the patronage that it is receiving. Robert Lett, Muggins Davis, Josie Hart, Walter De Leon and the rest of the company are cast to advantage and the star outshines them all.

ORPHEUM—Wilfred Clarke heads the bill at the Orpheum this week in his own farce, What Will Happen Next. The supporting company is good, and although the play is not a new one it has not lost any of its good points, but seems rather to have improved with age. The Rooney Sisters and the Salvaggi Sisters offer dancing acts, but of widely different nature. Edward Latell has been ill and so unable to appear in the sketch Dull Care, and his place has been taken by Charles and Fanny Van. Gus Hibbert and Fred Warren do a black-face singing and dancing sketch and De Biere, illusionist, does some weird tricks of legerdemain. The holdovers from last week are Gus Edwards' School Boys and Girls, and Rogers and Deeley in The Singer and His Valet.

AUDITORIUM—Two wicked bandits, later repentant, a very bad Mephistopheles, a well trained wolf, and a charming Red Riding Hood, with an agile and ambitious chorus, combine to make that pantomime at the Auditorium this week an unusually pleasing and diverting spectacle. In scenic effects and costuming the performance is far more pretentious and pleasing than the preceding Cinderella and much more creditable. The chorus work is much better and the singing far superior to that of the opening production. The performance deserves far better patronage than it is receiving. Olga Stech is a dainty and fascinating Red Riding Hood, and shows clearly that she can sing and act as well as dance. The two robbers are impersonated by Walter Reed and Roscoe Arbuckle.

BURBANK—The Burbank stock company offers an entertaining and at times thrilling melodrama in the dramatization of Rex Beach's The Spoilers. The performance is characterized by good staging, an abundance of color and action, and a commendable seizure of the lurid possibilities afforded in the prolific theme of love and intrigue. Those who have seen other performances of The Spoilers agree that A. Byron Beasley's portrayal of McNamara is the best yet given. Mr. Beasley finds a part admirably suited to him, and plays it most intelligently and capably. Mr. Desmond's Glenister is a fascinating type of adventurer, and is artistic in every detail. Mary Hall grasps the emotional possibilities of the role of Helen Chester with admirable ease and clearness of perception. Mr. Mestayer appears as Drury Chester, the Bronco Kid, and is noteworthy in that he gives the exact shade of coloring to the character as that in the book. Mr. Stockbridge's Slap Jack Simms is one of the best character bits which Mr. Stockbridge has yet done. Miss Lovall Alice Taylor's Cherry Malotte, a woman of deep, strong impulses. The Spoilers is entertaining and thrilling with atmosphere, color and action, well worth seeing.

MAJESTIC—Florence Roberts and her excellent company are presenting what proves to be the best vehicle in which she has yet appeared, at the Majestic this week, The House of Bondage. The performance is an admirable one in point of sympathetic and intelligent interpretation of character and efficiency and adequacy of staging. In Arthur Forrest and the other five members of the cast Miss Roberts has excellent support. The story is not a new one, but it is nearly enough so to give it the appearance of novelty. Sir Vincent Meredyth is a man of strong propensities and compelling mentality. His wife knows of his infidelity and suffers. She and a great physician whom she has known intimately are forced to confess their love for each other, but, conquering her affection for him, she remains unwavering in her devotion for her husband. Sir Vincent falls dangerously ill and his life depends on the success of a delicate operation. Paul Bertrand, the physician, is the only man who can perform it. Bound by his professional ideal he performs the operation, and moved by his rival's heroism in performing the operation, he later allows his wife a divorce. Arthur Forrest appears as Sir Vincent Meredyth, by far the strongest work of characterization in the piece, both in the lines and in the acting. Mr. Forrest gives a finished and satisfying portrayal of the role. Miss Roberts supplies the high seriousness of the role of Lady Meredyth abundantly and convincingly. There is a sustained height of intensely emotional appeal throughout, which Miss Roberts carries with finished and masterful art. Thurlow Bergen is a satisfactory Dr. Bertrand and Ann Warrington gives the duchess reality and an artistic interest of its own.

MASON—Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, that delightful homily of the philosophical acquiescence to the conditions of life as fate metes them out, is delighting admirers of Madge Carr Cook at the Mason this week. The story of the play, its little triteisms and truisms and the lessons it teaches to those who will learn are matters of too obvious knowledge to require extended comment here. The play which has strengthened thousands by its philosophy and drawn tears from many by its pathos, is still full of infinite charm as when it first became famous. The production is one of the best of the season in Los Angeles. The cast is practically the same as that seen in California on two other occasions. Miss Blanch Chapman does a finished and artistic piece of acting as Mrs. Wiggs. Helen Lowell is good as Miss Hazy and all other grotesque character parts are excellently done.

LOS ANGELES—The Royal Masque Five at the Los Angeles this week offer what is perhaps the best act of its kind heard here this season. The members of the quintet are young, but they know their instruments, and the way they play Nevin's Rosary is a genuine treat. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Esmond present a pathetic and quaintly humorous little play entitled The Soldier of Propville. Mailla and Bart offer a farcical act about absurdity called The Baggage Smashers. The Coopers, man and woman, have a conversational act, and Johnnie Fields is a dancing monologist and parodist. Sam Holdsworth sings his ballads and motion pictures complete the bill.

EMPIRE—McLeod and Melville head the Empire bill this week. They have a diverting lot of songs and dances, and they accompany their dancing by playing their own harp music. Dick Parks opens the current olio, doing some clever dancing, singing a song or two and then, for a novelty, he dons a minstrel man's make-up before the audience. The soprano solos of Elma Elwood are well received. Miss Edwood has a sweet voice, which she uses well, and her engaging personality is by no means a minor detail of her attractiveness. Illustrated songs, motion pictures and a one-act farce, Who's Who, by Al Franks and the Empire Stock Company, complete the programme.

FISCHER'S—If Director Alphin continues to give us the high-class musical comedies which have been the weekly offering since he took up his work as director, producer, etc., the little First Street house will not hold the audiences. The King of Patagonia is a monarch in whose train both mirth and music are to be found, as will be testified to by anyone who visited the receptions. The fact that he isn't really a monarch doesn't hurt the fun one bit, in fact, it is only heightened by the fact that his real identity as a Jewish "striker" to Lieutenant Patsy McDermott is exposed before the finale. Ben T. Dillon as a genuine Southern major, is sincerely at home in his white flannels and picturesque hirsute adornment. Dot Raymond is a pretty girl he has selected for his son Patsy to marry, and eventually his wishes are carried out, although after many comical mixups. That's the Time, by Messrs. Bloom, Vack and Dillon; What Are the Simple Charms of Married Life by Bloom and Miss Montgomery; My Philippino Maid, by Tracy McDermott and Mare Carey, and Don't You Think It's Time to Marry Me? are among the very pleasing songs.

C. M. EMERY.

Correspondence

Watsonville, Cal., Feb. 3.—The Ed Redmond Stock Company closed a successful engagement Sunday, Jan. 31st. This is the second engagement here of this company in the last two months, and the business this time was much better than on their previous engagement. They return for a third engagement in the next two months. House dark this week. Rollin Bond, representing Harry Beresford, who appears here Sunday, Feb. 7th, in Who's Your Friend, was with us today. A representative of Mr. Beheymer of Los Angeles was in this city today endeavoring to arrange for a concert by Mme. Freida Langendorf, on Feb. 15th. It is probable that the matter will be taken up by the Woman's Club, and a society event made of the attraction. Jim Jeffries, underlined, Feb. 16th. La Petite Theatre continues to capacity nightly. This week: The Goldmans, a clever and pleasing sketch team, furnish the vaudeville, which, with three weekly changes of moving pictures, provides a cracker-jack ten-cent show. Ed Redmond Co., Gilroy, week Feb. 1st.

Napa.—Napa Opera House, E. F. Hogan, mgr.: Feb. 6, Uncle Tom's Cabin; 7, Frank Cooley and company, in The Chasman; The Farmer's Daughter, coming soon, no date set. Hayes Theatre continues with good pictures and songs to big crowds. As soon as weather permits, Miss Fisher will have ground broken for her new up-to-the-minute M. P. house.

Chico, Feb. 3.—Owing to extended storms, the theatrical business has been badly crippled here for the past two weeks, but a number of attractions have been billed for the coming week and the theatergoing public will have a chance to make up for lost time. Feb. 4, Hi Henry's Minstrels; 5, Arthur Cunningham, in Kerry G.W.; 6, Corinne, in Lola from Berlin; 10, Chas. B. Hanford; 12, Uncle Tom's Cabin. At the Grand, Mac and Ruth Bernstein are making good this week, while Wayne, the Wizard, and a company of three will be the special feature for next.

Sacramento, Feb. 4.—E. H. Sothern, in Last Dundreary and Richelieu, filled the Clunie, 1-3. Coming, Thomas Jefferson, in Rap Van Winkle, 5-6. The Lieutenant and the Lady, 7; Corinne, in Lola from Berlin, 8; Hi Henry's Minstrels, 10; The Wolf, 11; J. J. Jeffries Co., 14; Elks' Charity Minstrels, 19; Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, 20; A Stubborn Cinderella, 22. At Pantages, week Jan. 31; Cake Walk Overture, eight pretty girls; De Koch Bros., marvellous acrobats. The Southern Quartette, old plantation melodies. Renfrew and Jensen, The Second Mr. Fiddle; Leonard Kane, the dancer; Ada Williams. At the Acme Theatre, week of Jan. 31, Halliday and Curley, in The Battle of too Soon; Connell, Wenrich and Connolly, in a Melange of Mirth and Melody; Caron and Herbert, acrobatic comedians; Gail Giddeller, performing dogs, Margaret Severance and company, in Nowadays, Esco Ives, singer.

San Diego, Cal.—Garrick (Morisco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.): Jan. 31, Harry Beresford, in Who's Your Friend, proved to be one of the comedy hits of the season, and was witnessed by a good-sized audience. Feb. 1-3, Johnnie and Ella Galvan in the Bell-Boy played to fair business. The company is a small fly-by-night affair, and is hardly ordinary. 4-7, The Camera-phone; 10, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch; 11, Babes in Toyland; 15-16, The Rel Mill. Pickwick Theatre (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.): Week Feb. 1, Myrtle Vance Company in Miss Satan. This play is a laugh-provoker from the rise to the fall of the curtain and is being greeted with good-sized audiences nightly. Miss Vance, of course, is seen in the title role and as usual gives a very clever interpretation of the part. Good work is also done by Miss Knowles, Jack Bennett and Will D. Howard, Queen (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.): Week Feb. 1, vaudeville—Arthur Young and company in sketch, Early Days; Joe A. Hardman, the happy humorist; Blackson and Burns, black-faced comedians; Amelia Mazette, clever acrobatic singer and dancer; Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Frederick and company in comedy playlet, Her Cowboy Visitor, latest moving pictures. Good show and business. Beginning with this week the season will book none but Saturday matinees. Empire (W. W. Bosley, mgr.): Week Feb. 1, on account of the big business done at the Empire with Roberta and his great milk-can mystery last week, the management has reserved him for another week. The rest of the show is composed of Edith Edmondson, singing act; Sigma Roberts, comedian; Henry King, in illustrated songs and four reels of the latest moving pictures. Grand (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.): Week Feb. 1, The La Monte, Maude De Alma, illustrated songs and moving pictures; fair show and business. Bijou and Union, with moving pictures and illustrated songs, report good business.

CARL E. LUNDQUIST.
San Jose, Feb. 4.—The hit of the week has been A Stubborn Cinderella at the Valetory on Wednesday night, when a large audience gathered to witness this new musical show. At the Garden the stock company announces their last week in Trilby, for the first half, and The Light Eternal for the second half. At the Jose, Manager Beresford presents Burton and Brooks in The Limit; the Florenz Family of acrobats; Lee Beggs & Co., in The Old Folks at Home; King and White, singers and dancers; Martinez and Martinez, Gypsy minstrels, and Fred Lancaster, singer. At the old Empire, Professor Fait, the hypnotist, is giving his show at five and ten cents.

Jeffries and his vaudeville show put in one night at Vallejo last Sunday to ordinary business.

Monday came Fluffy Ruffles to further delight New York theatregoers for a week at the Grand Opera House. The musical play, based on the charming series of pictures in the Sunday Herald, with Miss Hattie Williams in the title role of the chic American girl, was seen at the Criterion Theatre early this season. Since then it has visited many other big cities everywhere, captivating its audiences with its pretty music, its catchy songs, of which Miss Williams has many; its clean and sprightly comedy and its comely and well trained chorus. The reception, the play and the players received last week was enthusiastic and was a hearty welcome back to New York. Miss Williams came in for a great deal of the applause. Her songs were especially well received. In the suffragette scene she did another capital bit of acting, and there were many curtain calls after that act. Willie's Got Another Girl Now, and Experience, were two of her songs that made big hits with the audience. In the role of Augustus, created here and played with much success by George Grossmith, Jr., William Norris, who replaced Mr. Grossmith when he had to go back to England, played with admirable comedy touches that pleased the audience greatly last night. Bert Leslie was as amusing as ever, which is praise indeed, and Jacob Gardner once more was effective in singing and acting. The chorus danced and sang with tunefulness and spirit. Altogether it was another great night for Fluffy. * * * New York playgoers were introduced to a new musical comedy last week, entitled A Stubbish Cinderella, which was presented for the first time at the Broadway Theatre. The first-night production demonstrated that John Barrymore son of the late Maurice Barrymore and a brother of Ethel Barrymore, is a better comedian than he is an artist, and his athletic antics last night, as well as his handling of the comedy lines, suggested that straight farce comedy is his real forte. Sharing equal honors with him was Sallie Fisher who is possessed of a voice of splendid volume and rare sweetness. As the unsophisticated Lady Leslie, she ably supported Mr. Barrymore, the latter being the college scape-goat. The piece possesses an individuality of its own, in that it contains an abundance of real humor which, Mr. Barrymore, in his ready adaptation of the part, made to appear as spontaneous. * * * Kitty Grey, a musical comedy in three acts, brought here from the Hicks Theatre in London by Charles Frohman, was produced as the new Amsterdam Theatre last week by G. P. Huntley and the London Comedy Company in the presence of a large and friendly audience. The enthusiasm increased as the piece progressed. The comedy differs from many other light productions in that it has an evident, if slight, plot, and is presented in some of its aspects with acting of a definite and commendable quality. The plot centers around Kitty Grey, a London actress, and the advice she gives to a puritanical wife that she may hold her husband's love. The advice is taken and everything ends well. Miss Sanderson sang sweetly and was warmly applauded in several numbers. Mr. Huntley's whimsical humor provoked much laughter. F. Pope Stamper, as Binfield; Charles Angelo, as the king; Valli Valli, as Lady Benfield; Eva Keely, as Sadie Poulson; Mabel Sealby, as Susan Bright; and Percival Knight, as Joseph, an English waiter, were all well received. The piece which is adapted from the French by J. W. Pigott, was beautifully staged. The music is by Lionel Monckton and Howard Talbot. * * * Mrs. Leslie Carter reached the height of her career last Monday at the Liberty Theatre, when she made her first appearance about thirty-five feet above the level of the stage. Not even when she did her Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight stunt in The Heart of Maryland, did she ever get quite as high as that. Mrs. Carter had not been seen in New York for something more than two years. She elected to return under her own management in a play called Kassa (and pronounced Kassha), by John Luther Long of Madame Butterfly fame. And whatever may be the ultimate fate of her present venture, so far as public support is concerned, it is doubtful if any actress ever got a louder or more prolonged welcome to our city than the lady of the temperamental tresses received last week. The fact remains that the curtain rose after the third act, which is one of Mrs. Carter's very busiest, so very many times that people got tired counting. It certainly must have been more than twenty. And the fourth act record wasn't much behind the third. If first night curtain calls spell success Mrs. Carter may congratulate herself. The supporting company was a large one and included such well known players as Charles Millward, Robert Cummings and Eleanor Moretti, who is too big an actress not to be seen oftener and in better parts. * * * If there's anything you want just keep on arstin' an' arstin' an' arstin' and you're pretty likely to get it. Forget about those saffron yesterdays and concentrate on presumably rosy tomorrows. Adopt the theory that nothing is quite as bad as you think it is—not even broken legs or Simplified Spelling. Believe in God if you can, and don't believe that He is a jealous God. Believe that He is all benevolence. Think right out of wrong; hop out of despair. Joy out of sorrow; light out of the black, black depths. This appears to be what Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett is trying to preach through the medium of her newest play, The Dawn of Tomorrow, which was produced last Monday at the Lyceum Theatre with a good measure of success, and with Eleanor Robson in the chief role. Miss Robson was Glad, and she was deserving of her name. She was charming. Her acting had a delightful frankness about it that no one could deny, and she looked as pretty as a picture, even though she was playing the part of a wife from London's East End. Mr. Fuller Mellish was Sir Oliver Holt, and he acted well; so did Mr. Aubrey Boucicault as the villainous nephew, Mr. Henry Stanford was not a very convincing Dandy, a London criminal. The stage settings were effective, particularly the one of Apple Blossom Court, in a dense fog. There was a lot of realism in this stage picture. * * * Camille D'Arville (Mrs. Will Crellin of Oakland), the singer, appeared in vaudeville last week at Keith & Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre. Her old rose gown and lace mantle with hat and complexion to match caused the audience to sit up. The singer was in good voice and was especially effective in the duet with her accompanist, Mr. Pirsch.

The Dawn of Tomorrow, a play in three acts by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, was given its first New York production at the Lyceum Theatre on Jan. 25. The play has to do with a new phase of mental science. Sir Oliver Holt learns that his physicians have pronounced him hopelessly ill. Bent on suicide he goes into the East End slums of London, and finds a wife who is trying to hide an innocent man suspected of murder. He becomes absorbed in trying to help them, forgets his own troubles and regains his health. Miss Eleanor Robson plays the part of the wife. Others prominent in the cast are Aubrey Boucicault, as a cockney tough, and Fuller Mellish as Sir Oliver Holt. * * * Emma Calve will appear in Havana February 9, 11 and 14. This is the first time a singer of such high reputation has appeared in Havana in many years. The subscriptions for the season were taken up immediately.

Philadelphia, January 31.—The difficulty of writing a play without technique is manifested in A Woman's Way, presented by Grace George and her company at the Garrick Theatre. The action in this initial drama of Thompson Buchanan, like the French Constitution in Carlyle's rhapsodic chronicle, refuses at several important junctures to march. The result is a great deal of rather aimless, though brightly written and pleasantly natural dialogue, that does little to advance the action of the piece until the final act. This last scene is briskly and effectively handled, so much so that the parting impression of the piece is a far from unhappy one and may operate materially in winning for it a measure of success. Although the company was not always letter-perfect, a competent interpretation of this extremely light and altogether unpretentious little play was given. Miss George is quite within the scope of her abilities and her performance has an atmosphere of naturalness and spontaneity that is refreshing. Frank Worthing scarcely resembled the athletic husband he was supposed to portray, but as he is an experienced and well-equipped artist, he naturally gave a satisfactory interpretation of a comparatively easy role. The other parts were in reasonably capable hands. Adelpia (Messrs. Shuberts, mgrs.)—An uncommonly clever play, ably acted and warmly received by a discriminating and fashionable audience—such briefly describes the production at the Adelpia this week; for the first time on any stage, of This Woman and This Man, a drama by Avery Hopwood, part author of Clothes, Cloths & Illusion in the stellar role of Thelia Muller. The drama is intensely interesting. At every act the principals were summoned before the curtain. Miss Nilsson's success was instant and unmistakable. Merely Mary Ann, the dramatization of Zangwill's love story of a London lodging-house, was staged at the Chestnut Street Theatre this week, with Marion Barney in the title role. The Merry Widow drew another capacity audience to the Forrest Theatre this week. John Drew repeated his amusing portrayal of the Grand Duke of Pommerania in Jack Straw at the Broad. James T. Powers, in Havana, remains at the Lyric. Brewster's Millions with Edward Abeles in the stellar part returned to Philadelphia again and is very popular at the Walnut this week. Stella Mayhew and Clarice Mayne share honors on the bill at Keiths. Via Wireless opened at the Chestnut-street Opera House Monday evening for the first time in this city. When Old New York Was Dutch returned to the Park this week. David Higgins' new play, Captain Clay of Missouri, was greeted by an appreciative audience at the Grand. CALVIN M. FRANKLIN.

New Orleans, January 30.—Tulane: After an absence of many years Francis Wilson returned to play a most successful engagement in his new vehicle, When Knights Were Bold. Those who best remember this unctuous comedian when he sang and cavorted merrily in Erminie and Half a King, and went away enthused over the pleasure derived, will be just as handsomely rewarded and entertained by the artist in straight farce comedy. When Knights Were Bold is cleverly constructed and abounds in laughter, created of course by Wilson, who is at his best. As one of our local papers editorially puts it, everybody should see Francis Wilson and his new play, for aside from the pleasurable emotions experienced from the play itself conjures up food for reflection by contrasting the pseudo-chivalry of ye old times with the present day article and especially the inferiority in the degrees of veneration held for the women of that period. The supporting company was strong and capable, and the excellent work of Edna Bruns, Helene Montrose, George Irving, Augustin Duncan, Clarence Handsides and Jno. E. Trevor, is to be highly commended. Next week, The Man of the Hour; Feb. 6, Fifty Miles From Boston. Crescent—Geo. Ade's comedy, Just Out of College, duplicated its big business on the Coast at this popular play house during the week. Standing room was in evidence at each performance. The play is light and frothy and reminiscent of the college widow. The music was tuneful and the different characters well defined and most acceptably acted, particularly the work of Wm. A. Mortimer, Jas. Cooper and Lester Crawford, the latter a young man of great promise as a comedian. Wm. Henderson and Ethel Lloyd, who essayed the leading female role. The Bingo girls are not to be overlooked for excellent chorus effect. Manager Campbell sends regards to Charley Farrell. Next week—Murray & Mack. W. L. McCONNELL.

Salt Lake City, Feb. 1.—Salt Lake Theatre (Geo. D. Pyper, mgr.)—The Red Mill, which is the attraction at the Salt Lake Theatre, is a play which has been universally successful. It is a delightful combination of music and comedy and well spiced with life and a beauty chorus. The Red Mill runs for three nights and capacity houses are assured for each performance. At the Colonial Theatre, Shore Acres will be presented for the entire week. At the Bungalow Theatre Willard Mack has conclusively proven the success of a first-class stock company in Salt Lake. Mr. Mack came to Salt Lake last December and ever since his arrival he has steadily and rapidly won the hearts of the theatre-going public. The public has shown its appreciation of his efforts, both by its financial and social support. For the present week Mr. Mack will present Secret Service, a military drama of the highest class. The Four Franklins are the headliners at the Orpheum and are at the head of their profession. The balance of the acts are good. Melodrama at the Grand Theatre is a thing of the past. With the coming of the new manager, Mr. Binford, the Grand Theatre will be turned over to popular priced vaudeville. The Grand is now on the White Rats circuit and will present the best in vaudeville. Mr. Binford is a capable manager and his determination to make a success of the Grand will doubtless be fulfilled.

Santos, Brazil, South America, Nov. 28, 1908.—Dear Friends: Perhaps twelve of the happiest people in the world can be found in Santos, Brazil, and they are members of the great Raymond company, which embarks for Buenos Aires, Saturday, Dec. 5. The last town in Brazil that we will play, Brazil has not treated us badly, but they are so very slow about anything to be done that they make a person wild that tries to do any kind of business in this country. While in Rio de Janeiro, at the San Pedro, during our last performance, Mr. Raymond was presented with a beautiful diamond studded medal, engraved on the back, "Ao Unico Raymond—Dos Sinceros Admiradores, Rio de Janeiro, Oct. 25, 1908." From Rio de Janeiro we went by train to Sao Paulo—and to say that we enjoyed the trip is putting it mildly. The scenery was glorious and when we arrived at Sao Paulo it would have taken an X ray to tell if we were white or black—we were sights from the dust and sand. The natives looked upon us with horror, for they kept their windows closed all day while Mr. Raymond and I insisted that our window be open. I think they expected to see us die at any moment, as we were sitting in the draft. We arrived at Sao Paulo, at a station that reminded us of the Pennsylvania depot on the Jersey side. Most of the railroads here are owned by English capital and the engines are from Philadelphia, the coaches from England. We opened at the Polytheamea, for five nights, when our local manager informed us that we would move to the Theatro Carlos, Campinas, a large town up in the interior, for four shows. Mr. Raymond declined, but when matters were explained that Senor Ferri, the famous Italian socialist, had been engaged to lecture there, and that two-thirds of the population of Sao Paulo are Italians, Mr. Raymond, after a number of conferences, rather than lose the attendance and good will of the Italians, went to Campinas for four nights, where we played to big business, with Frank Brown's circus and four moving picture shows against us. We left Campinas at 10 o'clock and arrived at Sao Paulo at 6:30, had our baggage moved to the Theatro Sant Anna, the show was ready for the overture at 8:30 sharp, and that means a whole lot in this country, for these people, baggage men, stage hands and all, have no idea of time. The last night of our performance the stage was a mass of flowers, and as the artists made their appearance they were greeted with a shower of flowers. They have a very peculiar custom here. Instead of sending the flowers over the footlights, they send them during the day to the theatre where they are placed in the lobby and just before the doors open they are taken from the lobby and placed in the cafe (every theatre has a cafe in connection). When the artist appears for whom the flowers are intended, at the finish of their act a "Porteiros" carries the flowers on the stage and leaves them there. The last night of the performance, if the artists have made good, flowers are thrown from the gallery, which comes up to the stage—where in the States, you find the third tier of boxes, the gallery forms a horseshoe in all the theatres in South America. The boxes (camarotes) as they are called here, are boxes forming a balcony. It looks pretty to see flowers falling through the air, and after each act they had to be swept in the entrance where they are thrown in the rubbish. It is very dangerous to the artists to have the flowers on the stage as a slip may mean a broken arm or leg. During our stay in Sao Paulo

Mr. Furby, manager of the street railway, took us around to see the town, also to see the Sao Paulo museum, which had just been completed and was erected on the site where Brazil was proclaimed a republic. They have everything one could think of in this museum, crockery made by the Indians up the Rio Jurupema, where they are just exploring at this late hour. One of the bowls contains a human head and a few bones that have furnished the Indians with a nice stew. A landau that was used by the Marquise de Santos which she used up to about ten years ago (there are quite a number of titled men and women here in Brazil yet that were honored by Don Pedro the First. We are informed that the foremost families of Brazil were given titles at that time.) There was a set of furniture from the dining salon of Don Pedro the First that would make some of the Antique Fiends back home green with envy or turn over the long green. They have fish large and small, reptiles, animals and birds, all that can be found in the "Undiscovered Brazil." If some of the ladies who are so heartless as to wear stuffed birds, wings and breasts, on their hats, were to see the display of birds that can be seen flying around this country at any hour of the day, they would insist that their milliners send to South America for their supply for the coming Spring. It seems a shame that such gorgeous creatures should be slaughtered to satisfy woman's silly vanity. We left Sao Paulo last Tuesday for Santos, by rail, and it was a trip never to be forgotten. It is claimed that the railroad that runs from Sao Paulo to Santos is one of the cleverest feats of engineering in the world. The trip is made by a regular train as far as the summit, then they switch the engines and put on a small machine that from a passing glance looked all brakes. They take two cars down at a time. They told us later in spite of the seeming danger, accidents were absolutely unknown. The Santos and Sao Paulo railroad is the cleanest, best equipped, best managed railway in South America. It is owned and controlled by English capital and every post of any importance is occupied by an Englishman. Not to mention Patrick McCarron, the traffic boss, who is of my own nationality. "Hurrah for Ireland!" Santos is the largest coffee port in the world, and while things are not at the best here at present, owing to the collapse of the coffee corner which the Brazilian government had hoped to have made millions from but is now compelled to ask a loan of seventy-five million dollars for. Fifteen million will be loaned by the National Bank of New York City, and the Arbuckle Brothers of the Arbuckle brand of coffee, will loan $16,000,000 on two million bags of coffee. This money will be for the state of Sao Paulo only, so you can judge that things will move some, and things will hum while this fortune lasts. We opened last night to a packed house and the people were buying seats at 8 o'clock this morning for the performance tomorrow night, as we don't show here on Friday. From Santos we take the "Navigazione Generale Italiana" line S. S. Umbria for Buenos Aires, Argentina, where we will spend Christmas and New Year's. In my next letter I will tell you all the news about Buenos Aires and things theatrical there. With best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to all our friends on the Coast, I am,

Very sincerely,
LUELLA CROSS RAYMOND.

San Bernardino, February 2.—At the Opera House (Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, mgr.)—January 27, The Wolf was presented to a fair house by a fine company. 30, Harry Beresford, "that odd fellow," and company pleased a fair-sized audience with Who's Your Friend. Babes in Toyland, 4; Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, 8; The Red Mill, 17; The Gingerbread Man. Lillian Russell in Wildfire, and Florence Gear in Marrying Mary, during the month.

Santa Maria, January 30.—The Ellifords opened here for a week on the 25th and played to big business notwithstanding the rain. The company is deservedly popular here.

Monterey, February 3.—Mme. Frieda Langendorff, the well known mezzo-soprano, will be seen in concert. Feb. 18, James J. Jeffries. After March 1 moving pictures will be features of entertainment at the Work Theatre, during the absence of Manager Scholer, who, accompanied by Cashier Metz of the First National Bank of this city, will leave here on February 4 for an extended trip to Havana, Cuba, New Orleans, and, on return trip will visit New York City, Washington, Chicago, St. Louis, Denver and Salt Lake City. The distance thus covered occupying five weeks' time. March 30—The Gingerbread company will likely be the attraction. The two picture show houses—Star and Victory—claim nightly attraction and promise good entertainment in future. On next Monday evening Manager Hanna of the Star will inaugurate the Synchronophone by which he hopes to increase his already splendid attendance.

J. E. UNDERWOOD.

Petaluma, February 3.—The Opera House (J. R. Reiche, lessee). On Tuesday evening, Jan. 26, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Flekenscher in concert. Good house and a fine program of high class music was rendered. Monday, Feb. 1st, Uncle Tom's Cabin played to poor business and the quality of the performance did not warrant any better. Tuesday evening, Feb. 2nd, the great actor-street, Arthur C. Cunningham, played in Storm Blame. He was supported by a very capable company and the play was one of the best seen here this season. J. P. BOOTHIE.

Grass Valley, Feb. 1.—At the Auditorium, February 5, Ed Anderson offers The Farmer's Daughter.

Vancouver, B. C., Jan. 25.—From every point of view the production of The Thief by the Howard company at the Lyric this week is by long odds the finest thing this clever company of players has ever done and a big house last night showed very plainly in applause and curtain calls that it was as well pleased with the work of the players as with the play. The outstanding feature, however, was the magnificent work of Warda Howard, the new leading lady of the company, who takes the chief role, that of the fashionable woman who becomes a thief in order to buy the money that she believes is necessary to obtain the attention and love of one long hand. In the first act she shows many of the lighter touches, but in the second, when her husband discovers that she is the real thief, Miss Howard rose to a plane of emotional acting that has rarely if ever been equalled by any actress, who has ever appeared in a stock production in this city. Miss Howard is exceptionally endowed in many ways. She has beauty, both of face and figure, and a most charming speaking voice. Greater than these, she has both intelligence and temperament. Every action is fitted to every word she speaks. In the lighter passages with Armand, her boyish admirer and would-be lover, she was delightfully clever and altogether charming. In the stress of the struggle with her husband in the second act, she simply amazed her audience with her force. She has lines which she must shriek, but there is never a suspicion of ranting. The love passages with the husband were tender and natural, the little touches of comedy clever and not overdone. Altogether it would appear that the Lyric has had the most notable addition to its strength since Mr. George Howard first opened it. Miss Howard established herself as a complete favorite last night and her reign should be long and full of triumphs. Next in importance comes the role of her husband, taken by Frank Fanning. It is only necessary to say that it was probably the finest piece of work Mr. Fanning has yet done at the Lyric. Godfrey Matthews has a difficult and not altogether pleasant role in that of the young man who consents to shoulder the blame for the thefts because of his love for the real thief. Mr. Matthews acts convincingly and cleverly. Russell Hamilton contributes a fine piece of character work as the old retired magistrate, who becomes detective for the occasion. Mr. Ryden plays the part of the father of Armand in his usual finished style and Adelaide Power, who appears to be always at home in any role to which she may be assigned, has never appeared to better advantage.

Marshfield, Ore., Jan. 17.—Well, salary did not come last week, so the Cramer stock had to close owing to lack of "funds." I will leave for Vancouver, B. C., via Portland, Tuesday, January 20, so kindly forward all matter, including my Review, each week up there. True Boardman and Virginia James, both members of James Keane company playing this Coos Bay country, were married here at Marshfield yesterday, Saturday, January 16, 1909, at 4 p. m., by Justice J. A. Penneck. Witnesses were Mrs. M. Shields (bride's mother), Miss Neva West and A. C. Cooper. Today (Sunday) they gave a reception at their home here at which they received all members of Keane and Cramer companies, and all had a fine time. Among those present were Misses Neva West, Maryland Dalton, Daisy Swybell, Edesee Fawley, Frances Fields, Florence Bell, Minnie Janicki and Messrs. James Keane, Edmund Keane, Mr. Robinson, Edmund Flynn, A. C. Cooper, Richard Clawson, Herbert Cramer, Ross Birchett, Lawrence Floyd, George Morgan and Howard Nugent.

Tacoma, January 26.—Through a misunderstanding an error was made in my report last week of the trouble between the actors at the Savoy and the manager. Mandel Lurie, who was said to be the manager, had nothing to do with the affair. Mr. Lurie says it is the lessee of the building and sub-leased it to C. J. Riley. "Riley could not pay his bills and skipped out," Mr. Lurie said. "I had nothing to do with the affair between Riley and some actors."

New Orleans, January 23.—The Clansman and The Time, the Place and the Girl are the week's attractions at the two leading theatres, the Theatre and Crescent, both of which have recently come from a successful engagement on the Coast. The Clansman by this time is pretty well known to the majority of playgoers throughout the South. The presenting company here is in every way capable, headed by Franklin Robinson, who essayed the role last season. Eugene Hayden, Chas. J. Wilson, Gus Inglis and Ruth Hart, whose work was particularly impressive, accorded brilliant support. Next week—Francis Wilson. Jan. 31—The Man of the Hour, Feb. 7—Fifty Miles from Boston, The Time, the Place, and the Girl, The Hand of Askin & Strong's attractions to be offered here this season, and takes fitting rank among the previous successes offered by this enterprising firm. In fact, its business has been to standing room at each performance, breaking the season's record so far at the Crescent. The cast is about the same as last year's, with Geo. E. Young in the leading role. Every feature connected with the piece is good, catchy music, bright lines, pleasing stage effects and a chorus comely and vivacious, and the handicraft of that master mind of Nedway Burns. John E. Young is a poet in himself, graceful and natural. Particular credit is due Lillian Goldsmith and Elizabeth Goodall. The first for her chic and winsomeness, and the latter for her intelligent rendition of the role of Molly. T. T. Rook, E. C. Albertson and Mabel Melvino are entitled to distinguished mention. Next week—Just Out of College. Jan. 31—Murray and Mack.

Luttringer & Lucas Write: Chicago, Jan. 26.—We are a couple of thousand miles away from home, but we always manage to get a Review. I have been very successful in the East (thanks to Cottrell), having played all the good time, including the Olympic, Haymarket and Majestic theatres. The sketch is well liked by both public and press. I also have O. S. Burns to thank for my opening on the Coast. He is one good fellow. I'll tell you one thing, anything that goes good in S. F. is a hit in the East. I had a swell log cabin set painted in Chicago and am carrying the same. I have taken the Canada time and expect to finish up on the Coast for Fannings. He is well thought of in the East and is called the Wm. Morris of the Coast.

Shows for the Seattle Exposition

Shows booked for the Seattle Exposition season are now pretty well defined. The Moore will in all probability run through the entire summer with Eastern combinations. The Grand will be devoted to stock, and the Seattle will present Selma Herman and an Eastern stock dramatic organization. The other houses will all continue along their present lines.

Van Ness

If Eugene Walter's play, The Wolf, is melodrama, so is life, for the playwright holds a scarcely distorted mirror up to nature, particularly to life in the far Northwest, where men struggle for existence, close to nature in her savage moods. Any one who knows the North must thrill to the realism of the play and its vivid descriptions of the country. The plot is very direct and simple, like the life it portrays, but it grips one with its strength and realism. An old Scotch settler, Andrew MacTavish, has gone half crazy with twenty years of semi-isolation in the northern wilderness. This is not melodrama, but life, as anyone who knows the country can testify. MacTavish has a pretty daughter, Hilda, and with the exception of her father, the sparsely scattered men in the district treat her with chivalrous deference. But into the wilderness come two American mining engineers, and one, William MacDonald, though a married man, is a home-wrecker—a wolf in sheep's clothing. He resolves to take Hilda south with him, and to that end preys on the cupidity and fanaticism of MacTavish. But the local lover, Jules Beaubien, a young French Canadian, stands in his path. It is the history of all primitive peoples that tragedy results when the alien tampers with the women, and William MacDonald lays traps for Hilda to his own undoing. The fight to a finish between the two rivals is enacted in the dark, to the accompaniment of howling wolves. Andrew Robson gives a strong and well-nigh flawless interpretation of the Frenchman. There is a tremendous magnetism in his presence and a great finish to his delivery. His French accent is a delight, because it is the real thing. Alfred Swenson is an excellent wolf, and always resists any temptation to overact. Louis Haines is an exceptionally gifted light comedian. Ben Lamar is always on the job as the stern father, giving a very truthful Scotch accent. Canrad Cantzen is good as a type of character who might be one of Gilbert Parker's "habitants" come to life, and Lorie Palmer is sympathetic as the old Scotchman's daughter, and the unwitting cause of all the trouble.

Valencia

The versatility of this stock company is just beginning to dawn upon the minds of San Francisco theatregoers. This week, after all kinds of romantic, sociological and spectacular plays, this company is seen in Hoyt's A Contented Woman, the perennially green satire on the woman suffrage movement. The result is very entertaining, with honors divided between Blanche Stoddard as Grace Holme, and Gerald Harcourt as Cutting Hinz. Miss Stoddard was in exceedingly good form as the loving wife and political rival of a fond husband, and her handsome and charming personality served to bring out the best points in the character she was called upon to play. Mr. Harcourt was the real fellow, and his dapper appearance, combined with a certain attractive good fellowship and insolence won the audience wholly. And when it came to his specialties, he showed that he possesses an uncommon ability in a totally unexpected field. He really could give many a singing comedian in the vaudeville field cards and spades. Thomas McLarnie played the part of the defeated husband, with good-natured nonchalance, just dwelling enough on the humor of the idea of his wife beating him in a political race, as to make the portrayal very real and pleasing. Charles Dow Clarke was a continuous scream as Uncle Tody, and Lillian Andrews, garbed a la Mary Walker, was a holy show. Gilmore Walker evidently is an entirely trustworthy connoisseur of beauty, for his selection of the maidens who did the cadet stunt was wholly satisfactory to the most critical male eyes. Robert Homans, Wm. Wolbert and Thomas Lowell were faithfully reflective of active, practical ward politicians and in minor detail the rest of the company was well cast.

In Lola from Berlin Corinne has found another vehicle suited to her. In fact, it is beginning to appear that she is equally at home in any kind of a part. She is the one child wonder that we remember who has sustained the boasts made for her in childhood and has "made good" in later years. In this play we see the same Corinne as of old, a bit more plump to be sure, but the same personality, the same vivaciousness, the same infectious smile greets us over the footlights, and we sit and wonder in view of the fact that she has been for so many years before our notice, how she makes us laugh and give her our whole attention and sympathy. From the moment she tripped in (this in a double sense) upon the stage, the audience to a man was with her and they hated the villain just as hard as the Central gallery gods ever did. In the third act she makes her biggest hit with a song entitled So Different, in which she is given opportunity to show that she has a complete mastery of several different dialects, besides the delicious "Dutch" that she uses in the play. Sharing honors very closely with Corinne is Mark Sullivan, who plays the old "legit." Unlike a great many actors whom we have seen attempt similar parts, he plays it naturally, and his songs with Hazel Carlton, I'd Rather Be a Has-Been than a Never Was at All and the Villains in the Play, were particularly good, and the audience showed that they recognized something of superior quality by the way they applauded. The balance of the company were well up to standard and limited space alone prevents us from mentioning them all. Taken all in all, Lola from Berlin is well calculated to give a good evening's entertainment. Mr. Welch, you can send all the Lolas from Berlin you have, and we will always take kindly to them.

The James Keane Company, after three weeks in the Marshfield country, closed last week. The usual cause—Keane wouldn't study, wouldn't be serious and was out for too good a time. Salaries were not forthcoming for a part of the last week and several of the company had to borrow money to get home on,

Alcazar

The Crisis is a play that in competent hands must ever be most interesting to American theatregoers. Besides the vital dramatic spark, it has the plentiful endowment of accumulative interest and a good story. The Alcazarans are presenting the play most beautifully, and the attendance is most gratifying. Both Bertram Lytell and Evelyn Vaughan are seen to advantage in the leading parts, and their love-making is most agreeably done. They are a finished pair in this kind of endeavor. But the real, valuable work of the performance, from a gripping artistic point of view is achieved by those two clever and well-rounded players—Burt Wesner as Col. Carvel and Howard Hickman as Judge Whipple. For faithful depiction to the two strong and entirely dissimilar characters they certainly are entitled to unbounded credit. Ernest Glendinning was not so successful with his German Carl Richter. Bessie Barriscale was delightfully Southern in her accent and manner, and in this respect, too, the Southern drawl that fluttered so musically from the lips of Miss Vaughan was a delight. Scenically the piece was put on in the Alcazar's best style, and the introduction of typical Southern airs was achieved most successfully by Edward Lada's clever orchestra.

Princess

Kolb & Dill will end their run of Bankers and Brokers tomorrow night and return to their favorite and old standby, Lonesome Town, by many regarded as the best musical comedy written. It is wholly a California product, and both here and in New York the comedians achieved great success. The comedy of the piece is unusually good and the songs are catchy. The cast as a whole have an excellent opportunity to shine. This play will wind up the long season of these comedians at the Princess, after which the new stock company will open.

Jake Wells in Financial Difficulties

The big news and sensation of the hour in the southern theatrical field is the retirement of Jake Wells from the general manager's office of the Leath Theatrical Company, which controls all the first-class theatres in Virginia and North Carolina, and whose strategic advantage is such that the Leath Syndicate is enabled to dominate the whole Southern field. Ten years ago Jake Wells was the captain of the Richmond baseball club. At that time vaudeville was practically unknown in the South. With a few hundred dollars' capital Jake Wells launched in this city the first 50-cent vaudeville house Virginia had ever seen. He was a prime favorite with the newspaper men and they gave him every possible encouragement and assistance. The new venture was attended by surprising success from the start. But after a few weeks the tide turned and the expensive shows Mr. Wells brought to Richmond soon exhausted his resources. Then Charles I. McKee drifted in from Pennsylvania and supplied the capital necessary to prolong the experiment. Thus backed, the enterprise was put again on a sound basis and the house began to make money. During the ensuing two seasons the vaudeville theatre floated on the crest of a wave of prosperity. Then Wells entered the popular-price field, organizing a circuit now known as the Wells Bijou Circuit, with houses in eleven Southern cities. This circuit has proven a veritable gold mine. Here Mr. Wells became ambitious. He built summer parks in Atlanta, Birmingham, Richmond and elsewhere. He backed road companies, he took on business deals with Stair & Havlin, Charles E. Blaney, Otis Harlin, John W. Dunne and others. He built penny arcades, he returned to baseball ventures. He had many irons in the fire. Then suddenly he fell upon evil days. His summer park ventures collapsed. His road companies lost money. The penny arcades lost favor with the public. The dividends of the Leath Theatrical Company and the Wells Amusement Company began to dwindle at the same time. The Wells Bijou Circuit suffered reverses. The Hotel Allen, which he had opened in partnership in Richmond with Steve Allen was another losing venture. Creditors besieged him on every side. The extent of the liabilities of Mr. Wells is unknown, but he is heavily involved. The successor of Jake Wells as general manager of the Leath Co. has not been chosen. The office will probably go to Charles W. Rex, formerly general manager of the circuit and whom Mr. Wells succeeded when he acquired holdings in the company. Mr. Rex is now in Seattle, handling a number of exposition concessions. Mr. Wells will have plenty of sympathizers in his present predicament. He is a generous, whole-souled man and a friend to the last. His show, The Wolf, which he has now in the West with Otis Harlan, is this week playing the Van Ness Theatre.

Harry Daniels

Mr. Daniels is one of those clever showmen who is always associated with one of the big money-getters. This season Harry is doing great work ahead of Florence Roberts.

Orpheum

A number of people new to San Francisco are seen in a bill that is very interesting this week. The first to appear is Paul Le Croix, an eccentric hat juggler, who is extremely clever and graceful in his work. The Harvey Family of women wire walkers are an extremely prepossessing quartet of feminines and their work is marvelous. They do all kinds of walking, dancing and balancing on the tight wire, and their work is greatly appreciated. Charles Wayne, an eccentric acrobatic dancer and comedian, presents an unique playlet that brings in to use effective moving pictures of incidents in the act he presents. Mr. Wayne is a very good comedian and he is given much assistance in his sketch by Miss Des Roche, a dainty little bundle of skirts and shape, who can smile bewitchingly and dance most gracefully. The Murray Sisters are stunning examples of young American womanhood. They have a fine idea of dressing and plenty of clothes to exploit those ideas. They are down in the program for a few songs. They do not indulge in much singing, giving the verses with very taking talking voices. Their act is a novel one and a most pleasing one. We would suggest they get a conversation act, with their sense of comedy and their refinement they would be an immense success in a field where few women have ever succeeded. Leander de Cordova has the dramatic sketch. He presents a little affair called Wireless. It is full of opportunities that are not achieved, owing to the unnatural melodramatic violence of the star. The part he plays is one calling for repression and the utmost intensity. William Gillette would be a good model. Wm. Cahill, who plays the other wireless operator, overshadows his chief. Frank Byron and Louise Langdon, with their Dude Detective, have the most amusing skit on the bill. It is a screaming hit. Johnny McVeigh and his College Girls is a song and dance affair modeled after those ideas of Jesse Laskey that have become so popular. Mr. McVeigh is a good dancer and entertainer but the sketch might be cut a few minutes. Paul Seldom's poses, representing marble figures, are artistic triumphs and are as good as any we have ever seen. The great interest of the performance was concluded by splendid moving pictures.

Wigwam

Straight vaudeville, with the exception of the big gorilla who tries to talk, drew large crowds at the Wigwam, with the following acts: Mlle. Summerville and her dancing horse, Columbus; Alice, Wenona and Maud Francis, champion rifle and pistol shots; Holmes and Hollinston, in Looking for Betsy; Payne and Lee, singers and dancers; Brown and Hodges, Indians, singing cartoonists; John Birch, the hat man; Thomas and Payne, roller skate dancers. An entire new bill next week includes this lively bunch of entertainers: Allen's Traveling Man and company in their Pullman car act. Stephen Gratton and company in their high comedy act; Locked Out at 1 a. m.; Gus Bruno, in dialect stories; Sabine and Vera, entertainers; Creo, the mystery, who will remain a mystery after you have seen her; Mors and Brown, songs and dances; Walthour Trio, cyclists.

National

Sid Grauman's assassins of bad weather gloom this week effected their purposes to all who visited the National. The fun missionaries are Buster Brown and Tige, with a supporting company, in Auntie's Visit; Phil Staats, the jolly jester; Petching Brothers, in scenic and musical novelties; Ashton and Carlyle in a comedy sketch. Other acts were Emily Benner, the baritone songstress; Carson Brothers, the Apollos of vaudeville. They all made good. The company next week will include Halliday and Curley, in The Battle of Too Soon; Connolly, Weinrich and Connolly, in a melange of mirth and melody; Caron and Herbert, acrobatic comedians; Earl Girdeller, performing dogs; Margaret Severance and company, in Nowadays; George and Lizzie Byrd, comedy entertainers; Charles W. Williams, monologist.

Pantages-Empire

This popular house has held its own with good audiences, battling against bad weather. The attractions were the Munsons, in their thrilling dramatic act, The Holdup; the Bradys in The Society Girl and the Tout; Hodges and Launchmere, the favorite colored act of America, in a capturing turn; Thaler's dog and pony circus, the cleverest pony riding dogs seen here; Kresko and Fox, a prattling pair; McCune and Grant, comedy acrobats, with Jimmy Reagan, the ban-tam weight champion, and another whirlwind sparrer in exciting rounds as extra. The new company that opens on Sunday afternoon includes Marjorie Lake and her musical comedy company of twenty-five people in opera extravagancy; Lee Beggs and company in Old Folks at Home; Ross and Adams, German comedians; Francisco Muracci, violin virtuoso; Clara Dagnau and her dancing boys; Stubblefield Trio, European aerial artists.

Thalia Concert Hall

The Thalia is typically and illuminatively the light of Pacific street, and is doing a great business. The thoroughly honest manner in which its business is conducted by "Square Dealing" M. M. Kelly and his business manager, G. A. Kelley, has won the approval of the public and authorities. Next week's new people are De Kock Brothers, champion acrobats; the Bernsteins, expert dancers; the Booth-Gordon trio of cyclists, and other acts.

Washington Square

The north end society people are taking very kindly to their splendid first-class theatre, and making it the headquarters of society events, as well as bestowing their patronage. Cora Thomas, Regina Reed and Picks, Ragtime Kelly and others put in appearances next week, with The Arrival of Jeffries as a stock farce.

Vaudeville Notes

Dot Bernard is playing with William Courtleigh in his vaudeville sketch, Peaches.

A four-story, basement, class C building is to be erected in Third street in the west side between Market and Mission streets on the Brown property. The ground floor is to be used for a picture theatre and the balance of the building for offices.

GAYETY, San Francisco—Berry, Nelson and Berry; L. R. Stockwell and company; Fanny Frankel, week of February 8.

The White Rats of America are all jubilant over William Morris' engagement of Jeffries. The great professional society in the East are all behind him to a man, and look forward to his visit to this Coast as the means of establishing a circuit for them extending from Chicago to the Coast. Theatre owners in the prominent cities out West are tendering Mr. Morris their houses, and everything looks hopeful. Mr. Morris is expected back in this city from Seattle, where he went to consult with Pantages, the man of the North, the fore part of next week. Local managers and theatrical people of all kinds here are awaiting results of that conference with anxiety.

Curtis Theatre, Denver, week Jan. 31—Three Olivers, tight rope artists; Robinson and Grant, knockabout mid-gest comedians; The Pendletons, musical artists; Cluxton, Richmond and company; Mabel Casedy, singing and dancing.

Mrs. Evans, the recently divorced wife of a naval officer, will make her re-entrance professionally over the S. & C. Circuit in the near future. She will be seen in Oakland, Sacramento, Los Angeles, San Diego, Vancouver, B. C., Victoria, B. C., Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, Kansas City, Chicago, New York and a number of other places. She will be assisted by Harry de Lain and Francis J. Gillett.

Through the agency of Jimmy Coffroth, Jack Johnson, the heavy-weight champion of the world, has been offered a theatrical engagement of fifteen weeks at $1,500 a week, or a total of $22,500 if he will come to America. As the dispatches state that Johnson and his manager, Sam Fitzpatrick, will leave Australia on February 17th, headed for the United States, it is expected that the offer will be accepted, in spite of the fact that arrangements have practically been closed for a twenty-round match in London with Sam Langford. Coffroth, who has sent several cablegrams to Johnson during the past ten days, has received no reply, but expects to have word within the next two or three days.

Norval MacGregor and Claudia Colonna open in a sketch in Oakland tomorrow.

Gayety

The second week of the Gayety has fully demonstrated the good judgment of Manager Clayton in presenting his present style of entertainment. The vaudeville section this week is composed of Charles and Irene Maloon, a singing and dancing duo; Dow and Dow, distractors, and the Ronaldo Duo, in their blackface absurdity, In Darkest Africa. The big end of the program is, of course, James Post and his company in another of his grief destroyers called The New Motorman. This is a conglomeration of fun, song and shapely marchers and dancers, and there is a continuous whirl of gaiety from the first to the last of the sketch. Jim Post is at his Irish best. Abe Friedlander is clever in his broken English, and Millar Bacon a breezy, pleasing juvenile. J. Edwin Matthews, Joe Hayden, Juliet Mahr, Fritzie Guy and May Ashley are hard working and clever.

Orpheum Will Invade Berlin

Martin Beck, general manager, and M. Meyerfeld, Jr., president of the Orpheum Theatre Circuit, have arrived here from Los Angeles and have announced that plans have been practically completed by which the Orpheum Circuit will open a vaudeville theatre in Berlin. Some time ago Mr. Meyerfeld stated that he and Mr. Beck were approached by three Berlin capitalists with an offer to build a modern theatre in Berlin, within one block of Unter den Linden, if the Orpheum Circuit would operate it. The offer was received by mail, and C. E. Bray was at once sent to Berlin from New York as the special representative of the Orpheum people to arrange the details of the deal. Last Saturday Mr. Beck received the following cablegram from Bray, repeated from New York: "Return on Deutschland. Arrive Feb. 1. Deal practically closed, awaiting your signature." Mr. Beck also announced that immediately on his return to New York he would establish a moving picture plant for the pictures to be used on the Orpheum Circuit. He stated that he would have crews in all parts of the world who would be instructed to make pictures of all notable events, such as the Italian earthquake. He will have men at the Seattle Exposition who will reproduce scenes and incidents.

San Francisco to Have Two Orpheums

The Orpheum Circuit Company has concluded to have two Orpheums in San Francisco. Martin Beck and Mr. Meyerfeld decided that when the new Orpheum on O'Farrell street, near Market, opens, it will become the standard Orpheum show—the best vaudeville money can procure, with the whole world for a market—will be given in the new Orpheum. At the present theatre on Ellis street, the Up-Town Orpheum, the show will be of a different character. It will be more of a music hall, girly-girly show, such as they have in Europe, with prices cut.

Jeffries' Farewell

James J. Jeffries will make a two weeks' tour in California under the management of Pincus and Harris, of the Wigwam Theatre, before going East to fill his engagement with William Morris in his line of theatres in the big Eastern cities. Jeffries will open in Bakersfield on February 9, and will make his farewell appearance at the Macdonough Theatre, in Oakland, on the 22nd inst.

Leslie King, an unusually clever character man is at liberty. His announcement may be seen in another part of this paper.

Homer B. Mason, who is the feature of the big musical comedy success, "A Stubborn Cinderella," that comes to the Van Ness Theatre next week.

Hartman's Assailant Sentenced

Harry Beresford

Such signal success as that attained by Harry Beresford on his present transcontinental tour is seldom accorded to any comedian. It has been a succession of triumphs in the principal cities of the South and Middle West. The crowded houses that have greeted Mr. Beresford have been paralleled only by the warmth and spontaneity of his audiences from the Atlantic to the Pacific. And it may be stated with equal truth that no star has ever received more laudatory comment than that which has recently been published about Mr. Beresford and his company by the local critics. Mr. Beresford has never been fitted with a part better suited to his droll humor than in his present role of Daniel Hake, in the Messrs. Paulton's universally popular comedy, Who's Your Friend? a play full of plot and counterplot, devoid of coarseness, bubbling with fun and wit; and a treat of large proportions is in store for lovers of comedy when Harry Beresford in his laughing success of two continents comes to San Francisco.

Richard Hotaling Once More Performing in Oakland

This is the initial week of the Richard Hotaling engagement at the Liberty, and considering the fact that Mr. Hotaling has recently graduated from the amateur ranks and was supported by a stock company, his performance is entitled to considerable favorable mention, and his Richelieu shows up well in comparison with that of E. H. Sothorn, who was here about a week ago. Mr. Hotaling certainly displayed great courage in presenting Richelieu for the opening bill, as that character is without a doubt one of the most difficult of the legitimate drama. His conception of the role was at all times clear, and his acting throughout very acceptable. Of the support, some was good, some fair, and the balance hardly up to expectation. By far the best work was done by George Friend as Adrian and E. L. Bennison in the role of Baradas. Henry Shumer was also good as Joseph, as was also Mr. Webster in the character of Gaston. Walter Catlett and George Rand were only fair. Isabelle Fletcher was seen as Julie de Mortemar. The play was elaborately staged, the settings, costumes and scenic effects all being on the scale of grandeur. The house was packed opening night; a host of Hotaling's friends braved the storm and crossed the bay in order to give a hearty reception to their popular comrade. Julius Caesar will be the next attraction. Thomas Jefferson in that old relic of by-gone days, Rip Van Winkle, played to small but enthusiastic audiences at the Macdonough, 1-3. The play was well staged and well acted, yet it seemed to have lacked the spirit that made it famous in olden times. A Stubborn Cinderella is booked, 4-7, and will unquestionably do fine business. At the Orpheum this week's bill contains a surfeit of sketches and a likewise dearth of music, songs and comedy, but taken all in all the program is fully in keeping with the Orpheum standard. The attendance continues large and the following artists appear: Johnny McVeigh and his College Girls; Wireless, with Leander De Cordova; Byron and Langdon; Charles Wayne and company; Paul La Croix; Murray Sisters and Harvey Family. At the Columbia the Allen Curtis Company are presenting a musical comedy entitled Jackey, Mikey and Ikey. There is a fair amount of comedy, a few good songs and a chorus that will never break any record for beauty or talent. The Jolly Widow is billed to follow. The Bell management has sprung a real sensation on us this week in the way of Creo, the mysterious woman, which is formed right in front of the audience from a composition of wood, cloth and plaster. Beside this interesting feature, the following fine program was rendered: Stephen Grattan and company; Gus Bruno; Joe Demming. At the Novelty business is evidently in a very satisfactory condition, and this week's program is brim full of all kinds of entertainment. The Johnson Students, Mlle Fay Carranza, Brandon and Wilson, Walthour Trio, John Rucker, Henry and Young. Landers Stevens and wife (Georgie Cooper) and children have departed for New York and the Eastern States. They expect to remain away for a month, and hope to see everything of interest along the line. Friday, 5th, is the date set for the wedding of H. S. Bonte, a prominent young businessman of San Francisco, and Estelle Warfield, the popular and charming member of Bishop's players.

LOUIS SCHEELINE.

HARRY POLLARD is playing record business with Walter Sanford's stock in Vancouver, under the name of Edwin Dale.

Lee Willard will be seen the balance of the season in Monte Cristo. His tour will embrace only the Western States. He started out last Tuesday, opening at Sunol. After a few days in California, the company will play Nevada. The roster of the company is as follows: J. E. Caven, company manager; A. C. Fox, advance manager; Lee Willard, Anita Murry, Violet Holmes, Grace Sherwood, Carrie Godfrey, Fiddes Page, Alfred Rowland, Edward Ewald, Julien Wagenet, R. G. Hunt, William Sass, Earnest Edwards, J. ## What Has Become of Melodrama?

By Frank Winch

And now comes the question of melodrama. No longer a question, by the way. We have the answer, bleary-eyed statements, hunched over with deficits, warehouses the country over stocked with faded, tawny scenery, a bunch of actors, agents and managers, joining the esteemed Society of Morose. This isn't a calamity holler, nor is it a I-told-you-so palaver; nevertheless, just eleven months ago I predicted this very thing. The tree of prognostication has borne luscious fruit. It's a shame, as damnable as it is costly, that the feathers in one wing of theatrics are so badly scorched. It is not difficult to trace the blame for present-day conditions of an enterprise that always bore the elements of a good gambler's chance of luck. The popular-priced audiences are satiated with peanut sensations, horse-hair villains and screeching moralities. The melodramatic producer knows this. He even knows they graduated from experience class last season. They want to put out different attractions. In a word, they want to be as progressive as the workman who reads his papers now instead of gulping stale beer at some headache joint. The man who puts out melodrama isn't a chump—not on your life! He's willing to spend money on any kind of an attraction that will draw trade. It's no secret to know that not one, but a hundred popular-priced shows cost anywhere from eight hundred to two thousand dollars a week in current expenses. And anyone knows that pretty good talent could be hooked up to a green-back harness of this kind. But, what's the use? Somewhere in the intricacies of the popular-priced machine, there's a flat wheel—one that bumps the rail when an attempt is made to switch. What is the reason of this? One is inclined to gather that the revenue of some sort or another is held intact no matter what happens, when or how. Is it because there is a stupid short-sightedness somewhere that will not be convinced when manager after manager is going to the wall? Something is radically wrong somewhere. Possibly a later story on this same subject may prove of striking interest. One thing that is patent to every thinking theatrical man in the country is that, unless an undefinable something gets to work soon, melodrama will be a lost art. As a proof of the tend of matters, glance over the routes today, those of six weeks since and then turn back two seasons. Probably the best known melodramatic producer in the world is deflecting his attention to other channels of the business, not a few of us wondered at the announcement of his forthcoming exploitation of well-known stars at two-dollar prices. Another widely known manager offers a prize of $5,000 to anyone who will suggest a theatrical novelty, and rumor has still another whose name is known the country over as contemplating absolute retirement from the field. These facts justify the statement that this is no calamity yell, but presents an issue of interest to thousands who depend for livelihood upon this end of the game. The real live manager wants to change the nature of his show. If popular-priced audiences want burlesque, he will supply it. If they want musical comedy, vaudeville, moving pictures, or dog fights, he's there—Johnny at the whistle—with money, time and ability to get results. The people don't want melodrama as we understand the word, but they get it, and will get it, until the unforeseen happens, the embargo on real entertainment is lifted. The popular-priced business is a peculiar one, and its very peculiarity is expensive. The road manager is made to give up from thirty-five to fifty per cent of his gross business.

In many cases, the first five hundred dollars reaches other than his pockets. The extras in many instances amount to a couple of hundred dollars, and then for good measure he contributes probably one to three hundred dollars a week to the impoverished railroad. And if after these little pleasantries the show don't pull a couple of thousand a week, back to the icicle factory. Why is it? Where is the dominating power that hands you the ten-penny mit? Where is the impetus that starts the disaster bell aroll? And let us whisper that some day some one is going to get stung so badly that he'll try to find out the real answer! The which having been so said, let us gather in quiet commune and ask the real why?

Hammerstein Still Strenuous

New York, Jan. 24.—Physical encounters between newspaper reporters and Oscar Hammerstein, manager of the Manhattan Opera House, begun last night in the lobby of the Knickerbocker Hotel, were continued today on the pavement in front of the Jefferson Market Police Court and in the courtroom itself, whither the two reporters had been summoned for a hearing on Mr. Hammerstein's complaint. The hearing was postponed for a week and the representatives of both factions were arraigned for the fighting in and about the courtroom. All were discharged on the complaint as the Magistrate said no damage had been done. Events subsequent to Hammerstein's sharp reference to the reporters in a letter to the manager of the paper following criticism of the Mary Garden episode attracted a considerable crowd to the arraignment of Frederick W. Hill and James J. Doyle, the reporters charged with assault. Following spirited remarks back and forth, general hand-to-hand encounters ensued. Policemen interfered and the men adjourned to the courtroom. There an even more strenuous scuffle took place, and Hammerstein was bowled over the back of a bench which broke under his weight. His sons picked him up apparently uninjured.

Richard Carle Coming

On Monday, March 29th, Richard Carle will make his first appearance in San Francisco since he achieved the dignity of a musical comedy star. He comes to the Van Ness Theatre on that evening, to stay two weeks with Mary's Lamb, his own musical comedy. In his company is Cecilia Rhoda, who has sung in musical stock companies in San Francisco and Portland. Other principals are Julia Ralph, Violet Seaton, Rita Stanwood, Mina Davis, Winifred Gilrairie, Joseph Phillips, Sylvain Langlois, Harry "Scamp" Montgomery, George Bagues and Abbott Adams. The author-comedian also will bring a large and active chorus. Although Mr. Carle has not been to the Pacific Coast since about fifteen years ago, he journeyed to the far West with James T. Powers and the late Peter F. Dailey, playing very small roles in their companies. He is not unknown on the Coast, as The Tenderfoot and The Mayor of Tokio and others of his musical plays have been presented here.

EVERETT SACKETT leaves today ahead of Arthur Cunningham.

JOE WOODMAN and Fer Don, the medical man, will put out a company of coons, featuring Sam Langford, the fighter. Johnny Williams goes in advance.

Most Uproarious Laughter of the Current Season

The most uproarious laughter of the current theatrical season echoed and re-echoed through the Prince Theatre last night when Harry Beresford and a clever company presented the melodramatic farce, "Who's Your Friend?" No comedian of the season has found it in his power to take the audience so completely in his grasp as Mr. Beresford, and his work received its well deserved reward when the comedian was forced to respond to six curtain calls.—Houston Daily Post, Jan. 30, 1909.

Florence Roberts Takes Opposite View to Mary Anderson

"Encouragement is the most tremendous help in the world," said Florence Roberts during an address which she delivered before the women of the Philomath Club in the California Club room during her recent engagement in this city. "I know of teachers of different arts who teach and teach, but they never encourage their pupils, and then if the pupils happen to fail, the teachers say the one who failed had no talent. Just a bit of encouragement would have developed the talent quicker than grinding hours at routine lessons. I feel sure there is much talent for every known art lying dormant in persons for the want of some one to encourage it—not to develop it, but to encourage it to develop itself. We have read much of late about Mary Anderson not encouraging girls to adopt the stage. I cannot see her reason for this. She knows the stage has great need for talent, so I can only say that with all her artistic gifts she is lacking in the art of encouragement. Nine years ago when I first produced Sappho here, a girl named Kitty Hayes, sixteen years old, danced a Spanish dance for me. A New York manager said he would give her a position if she went to New York. She had no money. I paid her fare there. Kitty Hayes is now Gertrude Hoffman, the great Salome dancer, earning $1,000 a week. Another girl came to me six years ago at the Alcazar and asked me to help her. I taught her and encouraged her. Last year, when I got to New York, there was much in the papers about a gifted Western actress who had created a strong leading part in Paid in Full. She was Lillian Albertson, getting $250 a week. A young girl recently came to me in New York and asked me if I remembered her, saying that I had given her a small part four years before. She was Flora Juliet Bowley, Robert Edeson's leading woman. The art to encourage, the power to encourage, is the sweetest, kindest, most beautiful gift one can possess. As Emerson says: 'The chief want in life is somebody who shall make us do the best we can.' She paid a tribute to the Jewish race and referred to the help that her late husband, Lewis Morrison, had given her in her stage career.

Hanford's Othello

Othello was given at Hamburger's Majestic Theatre last night by Charles B. Hanford and his company of players. The Hanford players give a production that is eminently satisfactory in many of its parts. Mr. Hanford and most of his people belong to the oratorical school of acting—they delight in rounded periods, in rolling R's and in sweeping gestures. They cling to tradition, and in but few cases give interpretations that are simple and "unclassical." Yet, without exception, they read their lines intelligently, thus giving a distinct pleasure, quite outside their acting, to the true lover of Shakespeare. Mr. Hanford's Othello is nobly dignified. The actor reads his lines with nice discrimination. He works up to the final catastrophe with splendid and appalling effect. Indeed, from the moment when the venom of jealousy has begun to eat into the noble soul of the Moor, the actor brings all his best powers into play, giving us much that is most admirable. Miss Drofnah's Desdemona is most sympathetic in interpretation. There is genuine poignancy in the abandonment of her grief when she realizes that her husband suspects her of infidelity.—Los Angeles Times.

ALLA NAZIMOVA will be seen on the Coast this season in a repertoire composed of A Doll's House, Hedda Gabler and The Comtesse Coquette.

GEORGE H. MURRAY is ahead of The Red Mill and is due in town next week.

Moving Pictures in London

How far is the movement destined to affect the regular theatres? That, of course, is a problem that only time can solve. It may be contended on the one side that it will merely serve to increase the taste for the theatre, that it will only prove a stepping-stone to a better appreciation of the drama itself. On the other hand, it may be argued that these cinematograph performances are all-sufficient, that they are much more likely to wean the public away from, than to send it to, the theatre proper. Whatever the final outcome of the situation may be it is indubitable that the newcomers—electric theatres or palaces as they are called—in the field of amusements are doing very well. Without taking into account those minor places of entertainment where only one penny is charged for admission, London at present boasts some half a dozen, of which, however, the greater number are situated in the suburbs. There is one, for example, at Shepherd's Bush, another in Camden Town, a third at Walworth, a fourth at Peckham and a fifth at Hammersmith. There are also the Egyptian Hall in Piccadilly, controlled by Pathe Freres, a second "theatre" just started in the Strand and another, among the latest opened and the largest, on Oxford Street, close to the Marble Arch. Consider these conditions under which these places are run. To begin with, they owe allegiance to nobody, provided, of course, that their owners have satisfied the requirements of the London County Council surveyor. The initial and chief drawback is the difficulty of finding a suitable site at a reasonable rent. This difficulty obviously increases the nearer one draws to the heart of London. The Electric Palace, on Oxford Street, to come to a concrete example, possesses a length of 150 feet, a height of 14 feet and a width of 30 feet, while the provisions in regard to exits and other means of insuring the safety of the public are of the most thoroughgoing description. Manifestly such a building is not easily to be met with on easy terms within Central London. But this obstacle surmounted, the rest is tolerably straight sailing. Once the installation expenses are defrayed and the rent duly provided for, the outgoings are comparatively small. Take the average cost of running an establishment like the Oxford Street Electric Palace, which is capable of holding 700 people. This would amount, including everything, to £50 a week, or, say, at a liberal computation, £60. Now for the receipts. These (and we are quoting actual figures) would be something like £150, thus showing a pleasant little profit of £100 per week after the preliminary expenses of reconstruction, installation, etc., have been wiped out. What does the public get for its money? In the place just referred to the charge for seats is 1s, 6d and 3d. The building is open from 2 in the afternoon till 10 p. m., and if any one desires a surfeit of animated pictures he can remain in his seat all that time. As one entire series takes just upon fifty minutes for exhibition, he would have, however, to witness the same performance some half-dozen times in succession. Thus the audience, like the riders in an omnibus, is constantly changing, a fact which the proprietors, of course, rely upon. The entertainment comprises humorous sketches, pictorial presentments of journeys by land and water, athletic competitions, and so on; in short, as everybody knows, it forms an illustrated record of current events. Above all, and this brings us to the kernel of the matter so far as it touches the interests of the theatre, it includes brief, compressed dramas, played by actors of the first rank, in which a story is set forth clearly, impressively and succinctly by means of action, not dialogue. It may be added that the latter, however, is not to be entirely neglected, for by the employment of a synchronized gramophone, pantomime is at places reinforced by speech. In point of fact the performance promises at no very remote date to possess most of the features of a theatrical entertainment, or at least a series of vivid dramatic sketches.—London Telegraph.

Nat Goodwin Will Have Most Luxuriant Touring Car in the World

It is a magnificent car Nat C. Goodwin will present to his bride, the former Edna Goodrich. The car has been ordered from the Welch Motor Company, and will cost $9,000. It has sleeping facilities for two passengers and the chauffeur. There are cooking and dining accommodations for five, and its passenger capacity is nine. Running hot and cold water and a copper bathtub under the rear seat are novel features. The water supply comes from what look like suit cases on top of the coach.

Will Antisdel Writing a Book

There is now being brought to final completion in Los Angeles a work upon the drama which is the most comprehensive in scope and keenest in analytical detail of any upon this much written subject that has yet been published. For years it has been the by-moment enterprise of its author, Will R. Antisdel, well known in New York newspaper and theatrical circles, and here as the advance agent of Henry Miller's last season's Coast tour. Mr. Antisdel is taking a "winter off," and is finishing his dramatic book, which has been nearly ready for the printer for many months, only awaiting its author's leisure for final touches. The title page bears this legend, "The Actor, the Stage and the Drama, from the Cart of Thespis to the Theatre of Garrick." He carries this actor, his art, his theatre, his management, his stage conditions, his scenic environment, his play styles, his outer and inner usefulness, down through every new development and variation of species or special adaptation to the very stage and players of today. This book he has three times rewritten entirely, and is again revising it. He tells the story of the play in the comparatively small compass of about 425,000 words. Its great scope is described in the subtitle "An Attempt to Study the Evolution of Conditions Governing Playwrights, Players and Playgoers Throughout Twenty-four Centuries." Before this last revision it had been boiled down to about 375,000 words, but 50,000 words were added to include a little more detailed account of the stage since Garrick.

Spotlights

The Ed Redmond Company finished its week in Watsonville Sunday night, with a performance of Sherlock Holmes, repeating their former successful presentation of In the Bishop's Carriage and Rip Van Winkle. The Redmonds are very popular in Watsonville. Stella Adams, the new leading woman, has scored a hit and her work is being enthusiastically commended. Ed Redmond, Sydney Paine, Harold Holland, Chauncey Sothern, Garna Virden are doing excellent work.

Owing to the coolness of Manager Harry B. Powers, an audience in Powers' Theatre, Chicago, on the night of Jan. 27 remained calm while a fire raged in an adjoining building. When Mr. Powers smelled smoke entering the auditorium and noticed an uneasy shifting of feet in the gallery he stepped to the middle aisle and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, there is a small fire in the building next door. It will soon be put out, and if you will remain quietly in your seats the performance will go on." This allayed anxiety and the performance continued. The fire loss was small.

Girth & Simpach will have charge of the tour of the Philippine Constabulary Band which will tour towards Washington, in time to be present at the inauguration of President Taft.

The second annual Colorado Interstate Fair and Exposition will be held at Overland Park, Denver, on September 12-18, inclusive.

The popular San Francisco Opera Company, with many of the old-time favorites and some new personalities that urge attention, arrived at the Grand yesterday, the medium for setting up the Healy standard being the big Casino success, The Strollers, by Harry B. Smith and Ludwig Englander, which received most favorable attention from the big Sunday night audience that assembled to extend the glad hand to Teddy Webb, Frank Bertrand and Russell Powell, of the fun-making section, and to Eugene Weiner, who employed his tenor voice and acting capacities to the part of the love-making magistrate. Then there were the newcomers to welcome, foremost being Evelyn Frances Kellogg, who appeared in the part of treBhaeon, who appeared in the part of Bertha, one of the tramps, which was first made known here by Aida Hemmi, and Lucile Palmer, the new mezzo-soprano, whose share is that of Anna, the sweetheart of Roland.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Jan. 25.

The Bostonian Minstrel Maids, under the direction of Henry Gibson, are arranging to go out on February 22, headed for Canada.

Henry B. Harris' enterprises for the season of 1908-1909 include Hudson Theatre, West Forty-fourth street, near Broadway, New York; Hackett Theatre, West Forty-second street near Broadway, New York; Robert Edeson, in The Call of the North; Rose Stahl, in The Chorus Lady; The Third Degree, A; The Third Degree, B; The Third Degree, C; The Traveling Salesman, A; The Traveling Salesman, B; The Lion and the Mouse, Company A; The Lion and the Mouse, Company B; The Lion and the Mouse, Company C; and Ruth St. Denis in East Indian Dances.

Chas. Erin Verner Writes From Dos Palos

The Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, Dos Palos (This means two trees)—Feb. 4, 1909.

Dear Farrell: I am having the jolliest time possible; for companions we have ducks everywhere but on the table; beans, geese and eggs are not a drug in the hotel menu nor the apothecaries' shops. Mud is very plentiful everywhere. Even in one's bedroom you can be supplied with rare samples of splash and dashed mud-spots but if you are a thorough bohemian with the wanderlust, if you have roamed the world over as I have done, if you are not incurably fastidious, if you can stand anything or sit down to not much, with happiness in your heart and an appetite begot of fresh air and exercise, the barn towns are the places for camping for a night or so. One gets ennui—stopping at the Fairmont, and rolling around on rubber shoes. Here you stagger around on rubber shoes, and your bootblack uses a garden hose to polish you off. There is a string unbroken of genuine comedy on every side. There is a jingle of happiness in all these country folk that is contagious—and there is an exercise-ground at the dinner table for your jaws, that townsfolk never experience—that gives zest to your life and impetus to your gastric juice. We are doing fine—we are appreciated—by our audiences and congregations—and we have many applicants with straw in their hair, who actually envy us and wish they could join the troupe—to do any kind of a stunt, just so long as they might get away on the (what they think) highroad of delight and unfettered freedom, not to say a dash or two of fame. Mr. Carl Berch has gone to Dakota about the settlement of some estate. I expect to meet him on the millionaire side of Market street one of these days. This metal called money is a wonderful friend-maker. How the ears cock up and the eyes glisten of your apathetic acquaintances, who transform themselves into your most intimate adoring friends when they know—or think they know—you have the price of their stupid salable so-called intellects in your pantaloons! But enough of this. Diatribes are nothingness—and nothingness—de gustibus non est, etc. If you are fond of camping out and like the smell of hay, and have a few days to spare, come on to us and leave dull care and theatric veneer and tinselled opulence to the padded shoulder gang of nonentities who exist without necessity; and who have seen and constantly admire their mere selves in a 20-cent mirror—whose literature consists of some stolen plays and whose belongings are a faded set of what's designated symmetricals, a make-up box and a small gold setting in their left eye-tooth—come out in the country and I'll buy you a load of hay to sleep on, and a pair of nankeen overalls, in exchange for your feathers or your oestermoor mattress and your fresh-pressed pants. The change will bring color to your cheek and perhaps bring you nearer your real fellowman—the fellow that is supposed to be the image of his maker—whiskers and all.

Truly yours,

CHAS. E. VERNER, Bohemian and Traveler—Facile Principes.
P. S.—I may mention—in our company are Grace McGinn of San Francisco, a charming ingenue actress, Zora Bates, a fine-looking one; also the well-known Miss Rosa, who fits into any old part with the spirit of the real actress to the manner born. Some of the men are Ross Miller, Tom Charles, Clarence Jones, J. Bradley, Lem McDonald, etc., etc. C. E. V.

Trying to Put Buffalo Bill Out of Business

Bridgeport, Conn., Jan. 31.—President Roosevelt has been offered $300,000 for an engagement of thirty weeks to head a Rough Rider show, in opposition to that of Buffalo Bill. The man making the offer is James Atlas, once a champion heavy-weight wrestler. Besides $300,000, there will be two private cars and a stenographer for the exclusive use of Roosevelt. The letter follows: "Will you accept an engagement of thirty weeks at a salary of $10,000 a week ($300,000 in all), commencing the first day of May, 1909, to head a Wild West exhibition entitled Theodore Roosevelt's Congress of Rough Riders? An early reply will be appreciated."

MANAGER WILLIAMS of Coalinga was in town last week.
HELEN LACKAYE will retire from the Valencia stock next week.
HENRIETTA CROSMAN has received her final discharge in bankruptcy.
L. VICTOR GILLARD and May Roberts Gillard left Sunday of last week for Seattle.
MARGARET WYCHERLY and Charles Dalton will head one of The Thief companies sent out by Daniel Frohman.
Max Steinle and Mattie Hyde, two of the most useful and popular actors in the West, have joined the Novelty Theatre stock in Fresno.

GEORGIA WOODTHORPE and Ollie Cooper have joined the Novelty Theatre stock in Fresno.

ADELE BLOCK will shortly marry E. Mooney, a Toledo, Ohio, business man. Miss Block was for a season a member of the Alcazar and Majestic stocks in this city.

HARRINGTON WHEELER has retired from the Sanford stock in Vancouver and is resting for a few weeks at the Hotel Washington, Aberdeen, Wash., with his wife, Metta Chamberlain.

JOHN W. CONSIDINE has made some changes in the ranks of his Portland managers, sending Chester N. Sutton from the Portland Orpheum to the Butte Orpheum, installing James H. Erickson as manager of the Portland Orpheum and placing John F. Cordray in charge of the Portland Grand.

Gavin Dorothy is in his fifth week as leading juvenile with the Savoy Theatre Stock, Savoy Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., Mrs. Dorothy (Virginia Harvey) opening one week later. The company is headed by Virginia Thornton and includes Harry Cleveland, Noel Travers, William Thorne, Le Morris, Carl Hinkley, Sam Carlton, George Byron, Rex Clyde, Perle Gillette and Blanche Bryant.

WORD HAS been received from San Antonio, Tex., announcing the death there of Kendall Fellows. Death was directly due to concussion of the brain, sustained several months ago when attacked by thugs in the suburbs of Oakland. While on his way home from a social two men held him up. He did not respond quickly enough and they beat him into a helpless condition. He suffered much from loss of blood and in order to regain his health his mother took him home to San Antonio, where she is living. Kendall was a popular actor of undoubted ability and his mother has the sympathy of many friends.

ALTHOUGH she is the widow of a millionaire owner of South Africa diamond mines and has wealth and every luxury at her command, Fannie Ward, former American stage beauty, has again obeyed the call of the footlights because she loves theatrical work above all the wealth of the world. "Another Mary Anderson" is the way the Chicago critics describe Miss Ward, who has just made her American debut as a "really" actress, thereby realizing an ambition that has been hers since the days of her girlhood, when her winsome little figure may be remembered in her poses as Cupid chasing a butterfly, after the Bougereau painting. She has won instant success in The New Lady Bantock, which is a satire on the snobishness of the Britishers. Many think Miss Ward is an English girl, but she is the daughter of John Buchanan of St. Louis. After a few years of experience on the English stage she became the wife of Joe Lewis.

IGNACE PADEREWSKI, the pianist, split the nail on the index finger of his right hand while playing Beethoven's sonata, Op. III, with all its storm and stress effects, about the middle of his recital at Carnegie Hall, New York, Tuesday of last week. Paderewski went through his program to the finish without giving any sign of the mishap, and even responded to nine encores, but as soon as the concert was over a skilled surgeon called to annoint and bandage the precious forefinger, and a telegram was sent to Philadelphia to cancel Paderewski's engagement there for tomorrow afternoon. The injury is more painful than serious, but Paderewski is taking no chances with any of his valuable digits, and will not resume playing for some days. Each of his eight fingers and two thumbs has been insured for $5,000, and tomorrow his manager will collect from the insurance companies a sum sufficient to reimburse him for the canceled recital. ## Alice Entzmann Secures Divorce After Bitter Experiences

"In all my experience on the bench and in the large number of divorce cases that have come before me, I never yet heard of such fiendish cruelty as was practiced by this brute upon this defenceless young girl." So said Judge Graham Thursday of last week in granting Alice Entzmann Hall, the daughter of Mrs. Julia Entzmann of this city, an interlocutory decree of divorce from William R. Hall, a Louisiana cotton broker. Mrs. Hall went on the stand and told a tale of ingenious cruelty, which caused a shudder even to the court officials, hardened as they are to the tales of unhappy wives. Striking a wife in the face and making her nose bleed, dragging her about the house and grounds by the hair, throwing her on the floor, kneeling on her and choking her, are sufficiently strenuous and unusual, but not exactly unheard of in the divorce courts, but when a man fastens a rope about his wife's ankles and throwing it over a kitchen beam, endeavors to draw her to the ceiling, when he puts on gloves so as not to injure his hands when striking her, he is going far beyond the experience of most divorce lawyers and judges. But these are not the worst charges that Mrs. Hall made against her husband. Once, she said, he took her out in a boat into a swamp where the water was thirty or forty feet deep. Then, forcing her to disrobe, he made her jump out of the boat, telling her that her only chance for life was to swim ashore. She managed to reach a tree, and climbed into its branches, bleeding and torn, where she remained until her husband came back for her. When her eyes became discolored as the result of frequent beatings, Hall used to take a needle or hunting knife, his wife said, and scratch and cut the discolored portions, letting out the blood so that the neighbors would not notice. These things happened during two years that the couple lived in a rude shack on the edge of a swamp, two miles outside of Alexandria, La. Hall allowed his wife no communication with friends or family, nor money with which to go away. Once, when he had gone to town, she was taken sick, and some neighbors, finding her, took her to their house. From there she managed to communicate with her mother, and finally reach San Francisco. Her husband came after her, pleaded with her, persuaded her that drink had been the cause of his actions, and promised to reform. So she went back with him. There was no reform, however, and she again managed to escape by bribing a negro to mail a letter to her mother. The horror lasted two years. They were married in Oakland in 1905, and the date of Mrs. Hall's final escape was in September, 1907. When she married Mrs. Hall was 20 years of age only, and last week she appeared frail and youthful, and very much subdued. She knew little of her husband's financial condition, but he had told her that he was well off, and on the strength of this Judge Graham made an order allowing her $150 a month alimony. Hall made no appearance, allowing the case to go by default. He is in Louisiana. Before her marriage Mrs. Hall was known throughout the West as Alice Entzmann and was regarded as a clever actress, excelling in strong parts allotted to those playing second business.

Women's Dramatist Club

Martha Morton, who recently completed the adaptation for the English-speaking stage of Dr. Leopold Kampf's On the Eve, for Henry B. Harris, is taking considerable interest in the movement among the women dramatists of New York to establish themselves on as firm a basis as have the men who compose the American Dramatists' Society. Miss Morton has arranged with Mr. Harris for the use of the Hudson Theatre some afternoon early in the future for a benefit performance in aid of the plan to fit up and furnish the club-room for the Women Dramatists' Club. At this benefit five one-act plays will be given, written by as many members of the club. Each member is to write a one-act play, and the five that are adjudged by the committee as being the best are to be presented.

New Repertoire Company

Terry McKean is arranging to put out a repertoire company, headed by Bertha Foltz and Walter Newman, opening Easter Monday.

Orpheum

The program for the week beginning this Sunday matinee at the Orpheum will have for its chief attraction a dramatic episode of the prize ring, entitled At the Sound of the Gong, which exacts a cast of twenty-five people and introduces a realistic boxing exhibition. The opening scene discloses the interior of Walter Jameson's training quarters and subsequently by means of a transparency the square ring is shown with a boxing bout in full action. The character of Jameson, alias Terry McNutt, is played by Tom (Soldier) Wilson, a boxer of fine reputation, who formerly acted as Bob Fitzsimmons' sparring partner. The other leading roles are interpreted by Ellsa Berrold, Arthur Sullivan and Bill Russell. Imro Fox, a celebrated European conjuror and a brilliant and witty entertainer, will introduce a marvelous illusion called "The Box of Cagliostro" and numerous feats of legerdemain. Tony Wilson and Mlle. Heloise, gymnasts and originators of the trampoline or bounding, will display their wonderful proficiency on the horizontal bars. Mlle. Heloise will demonstrate her versatility by some clever dancing and comedy work. The beautiful Amoros Sisters will be seen for the first time in this city. They are singers, dancers, comedians, acrobats and trapeze performers. Frank and Adele Astaire, two very clever juvenile singers and dancers, will be the remaining new act. Next week will be the last of the Farrell-Taylor

Valencia

The Prince Chap, Edward Peple's beautiful play, with Mace Greenleaf in the title role, little Bebe Daniels as the younger Claudia, Blanche Stoddard as the artist's ward grown up, and the other members of the Valencia Theatre stock company in congenial roles, will be played for the last times this Sunday afternoon and evening, and on Monday night The County Chairman, George Ade's highly amusing and at the same time grippingly interesting comedy-drama, will be produced for the first time in San Francisco by a stock company. The success of The College Widow, by the same author, and which enjoyed such a prosperous run during the holidays, is still fresh in the minds of the playgoing public. Mace Greenleaf will play young Wheeler, and Robert Homans will have the title role. Charles Dow Clark will play Sassafras Livingstone, and Gerald Harcourt will be in his element as Joseph Whittaker, the windmill agent. George B. Baldwin, Jr., will reappear as Uncle Eck Milbury, an old settler, and Thomas MacLarnie should make a forensic hit as Jefferson Briscoe, a store-porch orator. Blanche Stoddard will be Lucy Rigby, and Beatrice Nichols will have the fine part of the village milliner.

Alcazar

With the same cast of principals that contributed to "The Rose of the Rancho's" great success last season at the Alcazar, when it ran three weeks, the beautiful play of early California life will be the offering in the Sutter-street playhouse during the coming week. Bessie Barriscale will again play Juanita, Bertram Lytell the government agent, Will R. Walling the land-grabber, Howard Hickman the Spanish dandy, Burt Wesner the padre, Ernest Glendinning the officer of militia, Herbert Farjeon the muleteer, Louise Brownell the coquettish senorita, Adele Belgarde the haughty Spanish mother, Annie Lockhardt the gentle grandmother, John B. Maher the old servant, Walter Belasco the vaquero and Christie MacLean the duenna.

Everything considered, there is no cause for wonder that The Rose of the Rancho is enrolled among the Alcazar's most memorable successes. People qualified to compare the New York and San Francisco productions unhesitatingly declared that the latter was no whit inferior. The time of the play is in the early fifties, when American energy was supplanting Spanish lassitude in California, and the place is San Juan Bautista, near Monterey. The first act takes place in the Mission garden, and so realistic is the picture that you can almost smell the roses that cluster so abundantly everywhere. Here we learn that Juanita, the Rose of the Rancho, lives and is loved by Kearney, a government agent, whose mission is to see that the laws authorizing the acquisition of land are not outraged. Here, too, we are introduced to Juanita's haughty Spanish mother and gentle, high-bred old grandmother, and see the good padre Antonio, the bad Kincaid, land jumper, the indolent Don Luis and various other types of the folk that lived in that turbulent time. Juanita declines to wed Don Luis, avows her love for Kearney and otherwise antagonizes her kindred, and through the three acts the audience is kept intensely interested by the development of the romance with a superb setting.

American

The last performances of The Light Eternal will take place this Saturday afternoon and evening, and at the Sunday matinee, "that odd comedian," Harry Beresford, whose past performances in The Wrong Mr. Wright and The Woman Hater have stamped him as a laugh-provoker of the highest order, will present, for the first time in this city, Who's Your Friend? with the same cast and the same elaborate production which was seen during the long New York run. Prominent members of the cast supporting Mr. Beresford are the Misses Jane Ferrell, Edith D. Wyllie, Grace Beebe, Margaret Lee and Helen Barry, and the Messrs. W. S. Lyons, James A. Mahony, Harry F. Horne, H. H. Sleight and Jesse Mitchell.

Personals

MILLAR BACON is in receipt of a stock offer from Denver.

ETHEL BARRYMORE has started on her way West for a tour of the Pacific Coast.

BERTHA DAREL is in mourning for her father, who died recently after a long illness.

CHARLES KENYON has returned from the East and is spending a vacation with his folks here.

THE DEL LAWRENCE company opens at the Grand in Sacramento tomorrow for four weeks and maybe more.

BLANCHE DOUGLAS is playing leads with the Willard Mack stock at the Bungalow Theatre, Salt Lake City.

JESSIE MAE HALL, as well as Blanche Hall, will be a member of the Burbank company in Los Angeles when Oliver Morosco produces Peter Pan.

SARAH TRUAX, who was married a year ago, last week became a mother, the date being the first anniversary of her wedding to Charles Albert.

MISS MARIE DROFNAH has been heartily welcomed by her admirers who missed her during her absence from the stage last season, owing to illness.

CLARA THROPP is one of the many San Francisco favorites who will be with The Gingerbread Man when that musical comedy comes to the American next month.

ARTHUR FORREST, who is with Florence Robert's company, is in negotiation with Oliver Morosco, and will probably go to Los Angeles for a period this summer.

HOPE MOSHER has entered the motherhood class. She is now a mother at the ranch in San Jose, and father, mother and the baby are all doing exceedingly well.

ARTHUR C. AISTON, the well-known manager and producer, is on his way to San Francisco to supervise the production of his play, Pretty Peggy, at the Valencia Theatre shortly.

GUS PIXLEY, the favorite comedian, brother of Annie Pixley, and a San Franciscan by birth, will be with The Babes in Toyland, which follows Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch at the American.

JOHN W. ALBAUGH, the well known theatrical manager, died suddenly of heart disease following an attack of acute indigestion at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Frank Henderson, in Jersey City, Feb. 11. He was 73 years old.

JACK RAFFAEL, who was a decided favorite at the Tivoli at the height of its success, is here with the company presenting A Stubborn Cinderella at the Van Ness. Raffael is playing the comedy role of the Scotchman, Colonel Hunt.

WILLIS MARKS of the Burbank stock of Los Angeles, has been seriously ill with pneumonia and has been removed to Glendale to complete his convalescence and will remain at Henry Stockbridge's residence, where he is at present, for some weeks.

CHARLES WARNER, the English actor who won fame in Europe and America through his production of Zola's tragic drama, Drink, committed suicide last Thursday in New York in his apartments by hanging himself to the door of his bedroom with a trunk strap.

Cecelia Rhoda who is well known here comes with Richard Carle's company in the production of Mary's Lamb. Others in the cast are Julia Ralph, Violet Seaton, Rita Stanwood, Mina Davis, Winifred Gilrairie, Joseph Phillips, Sylvain Langlois, Harry "Scamp" Montgomery, George Bogues and Abbott Adams.

JOSEPH CARROLL, well known on the Coast as an actor of merit, has just returned from Seattle where he has been fighting a law suit for $25,000 over the loss of an arm, sustained in a street car accident. The case has been continued pending a settlement out of court. Mr. Carroll intends remaining in San Francisco for an indefinite period.

H. S. NORTHROP, the young San Franciscan who has made very rapid strides during the past few seasons as leading man in some of the most notable dramatic productions, will appear here in the leading role of Clyde Fitch's latest comedy success, Girls. This attraction comes to the Van Ness Theatre early next month for a limited engagement.

ROLLIN BOND is in town ahead of Peter Ruiz's clever star, Harry Beresford. Mr. Bond is one of the clever men in the show business, being a many sided showman. Not the least of his abilities are musical. For years he was the leader of a large band that was celebrated all over the Middle West as an organization of exceptional worth.

H. T. LAWRENCE, manager of The Lieutenant and the Cowboy company now playing the Coast territory, reports excellent business and that he has a strictly first-class company. No one is being featured and every member of the cast is an artist. Geo. R. Matison, who has been playing the cowboy, will be replaced by Fred Siebkie, a character actor of reputation in the East.

While rehearsing his part in the rear of the stage of the Novelty Theatre, Brooklyn, last Wednesday, Joseph Jewell fell 30 feet through a trap, landed on his head and died instantly. He was known in Oakland and was 25 years of age. He recently played in Stockton with the George Barbier stock company and prior to that time played in Portland, Ore., with the Baker stock company. He went East recently.

SEVERAL publishers have made overtures to Charles B. Hanford for an autobiographical work, which shall include not only a history of his career as a star, but reminiscences of his association with Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, Modjeska, Thomas W. Keene and other eminent players, besides literary men and statesmen, with whom his long residence in Washington, D. C., has brought him into close acquaintance.

EDDIE ROESCH, a singer of illustrated songs at a vaudeville house in Seattle, was beaten by two thugs last Wednesday night, but his shouts frightened the highwaymen away before they could obtain anything. Recovering consciousness, Roesch crawled a block to the home of a friend. It developed that two bones in his right hand had been broken by the first blow of the thug's weapon, while a great lump is over the temple. He suffers greatly from shock.

MORTIMER LAZARD of Los Angeles has received a telegram from Mme. Emma Eames, requesting him to go East and take the business management of her forthcoming concert tour. Mr. Lazard will leave next week and will report for duty at the Hotel Touraine, Boston, on February 19. Mr. Lazard was selected as Calve's business manager two seasons ago. His new place he has accepted at the urgent request of both Mme. Eames and Gogorza, who will be the baritone vocalist with Mme. Eames.

FRANK C. ROBINSON, a member of W. F. Mann's As Told in the Hills company, was instantly killed about 11 o'clock at night Jan. 21, by coming in contact with a guy wire leading from an electric light pole to another pole, some forty feet distant, at Mitchell, S. D. Mr. Robinson played Little Fox, an Indian character, in the drama, and the company, which was managed by Alex Storey, was obliged to lose Jan. 22. The offices of the firm in Chicago got busy and had Ulrich Kenrade, an Indian, who had played the part previously, on hand for the performance Jan. 23. Mr. Robinson was 21 years of age and was a native of Salt Lake City.

JOSEPH LUCKETT, who is in town ahead of Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, is one of the most capable and most popular theatrical men in the United States. For twelve years he managed with signal ability the Columbia Theatre in Washington, D. C. It was Mr. Luckett who first started the big summer stock idea after stock went into a partial decline about twelve years ago. His stock companies in Washington were notable affairs and they did a wonderful business summer after summer. There is probably no one better acquainted with the merits of the stock game than Mr. Luckett.

SATURDAY afternoon Fred C. Truesdell and Ethel Dovey of the Stubborn Cinderella company, were married in the chambers of Superior Judge Graham after every precaution had been taken to keep the pleasant little romance a secret until the end of the present season. Unfortunately for them, the law required that the license should be recorded, and when that document reached the Recorder the secret was no longer a secret but public property. Mrs. Truesdell is the daughter of the president of the First National Bank of Plattsmouth, Neb. She began her career on the stage many years ago, when she was a child. After success in juvenile roles she attempted the more serious work of the profession with gratifying results. Truesdell is the son of a Michigan banker, and has been on the stage for several years, singing tenor parts. He met Miss Dovey when they left New York together with the present company. While they were traveling Westward the romance, which seems to have had its beginning at their first meeting, rapidly ripened into a serious attachment. While they were playing across the bay Truesdell persuaded the young ingenue to become his wife. The bride is only 21 years old. She made her first appearance here with The Land of Nod company a year ago, and afterward with The Strollers. At present she is playing the role of Lois with the Stubborn Cinderella company. Truesdell is playing the role of the President.

The Allen Stock Company, now playing in Canada, is composed of Verna Felton, Irving W. Kennedy, Charles Ayres, E. L. Walling, Wm. Heater, Roy Hoag, E. C. Bender, Albin Larxer, Clara Allen, Marie Thompson, Lillian Meredith, Ella Houghton, Hallie Blair.

John Cort Wants Damages

JOHN CORT figures that Max Daniels owes him $10,000 for not having the Lyceum Theatre of Salt Lake finished, as contracted, and for defects in it when it was finished. Mr. Cort states in his complaint that he has lost in prestige and that he has been compelled to cancel contracts with companies which would have appeared in the theatre had it been finished. He states further that there has been great loss from not being able to put on the shows he had intended, and that on January 9 he was obliged to close up the house altogether. The rent of $400 a month was paid for January, and this also he wants returned.

The Girl Question will be sent West from Duluth on February 22d.

The members of the Valencia Theatre Stock Company are awaiting with great impatience the production of The County Chairman, a week from Monday. They so thoroughly enjoyed themselves in The College Widow, George Ade's other comedy, that was played during the holidays, that they are anticipating another revel in the splendid character parts with which this play abounds.

It is not unlikely that Lulu Glazer will play an engagement here this season.

To Lease Majestic Theatre Chico California

CORRESPONDENCE DELAYED

Owing to the continuation of the unparalleled storm that has beset the Coast, our correspondence columns are irregularly filled. As soon as the storm abates our out of town letters will appear regularly.

New York, Feb. 7.—Charles Klein, whose play, The Lion and the Mouse, struck the popular pulse, has done the trick again in The Third Degree, which was presented at the Hudson last Monday, and which is pretty certain to outlive the present season in New York. Like several of Mr. Klein's other plays it is possible to see a purpose behind this one besides the mere desire to provide an exciting evening's entertainment, though that is undoubtedly one of the immediate results. For two acts The Third Degree is red grippingly, convincingly real. The remarkably proficient acting of Helen Warner made her the star of the piece, and she in scene after scene demonstrates her complete hold on the power which compels complete illusion and commands profound sympathy. No finer exhibition of emotional acting has been seen in years than she gives in this play, and the variety and sincerity of her method can hardly be overpraised. And with limited opportunities, in a role of slight dimensions, but demanding the exhibition of two very distinct kinds of effort, Wallace Eddinger, who when 9 years old scored such a hit in San Francisco as Little Lord Fauntleroy, also makes a complete and satisfying success. It is a play which allows for good colorful characterizations, and several of the players are unusually successful. Mr. Eddinger's drunken scene is played excellently, and the brain-fagging experience of the suspect under examination is splendidly conveyed. Miss Ware sounds a true note at the very outset, and maintains it to the end. Her scene in the lawyer's office, in which she is on the verge of a hysterical breakdown, but manages to laugh instead of cry, is a particularly fine expression of difficult emotions. Mr. Ede gives an effective performance of the lawyer, and Miss Filkins handles a trying role with good success. The part of the Police Captain is played to the life by Ralph Delmore, and Francis Byrne and George Barnum filled in other figures acceptably. Mr. Flood is impressively seen. Theatregoers in Poughkeepsie saw a dramatic novelty in The Climax, a new play by Edward Locke, which was produced in the Collingwood Opera House last Monday. The piece attracted much attention because of its simplicity, ruggedness and peculiar construction. Joe Weber, the producer, calls it a melody-drama, and true to its title it is a song surrounded by a strong dramatic story. The subject is thoroughly modern and American, the scenes being laid in New York City. The story, briefly told, is about a wonderful singer who loses her voice through the designs of her sweetheart, who does not want to see her follow the profession of the theatre. The scene where she regains her voice is a rather remarkable one and furnishes the play's title. Leona Watson played the leading role. * * * When George Ade wrote the book and lyrics of his last—oh, not his last, let us hope—his latest college comedy, The Fair Co-ed, and Gustav Luders provided the musical settings for the lyrics, the result was a production about as far away from The College Widow as Mr. Ade could get, but the Widow was not more heartily greeted years ago than was The Fair Co-ed last week at its first presentation to a New York audience in the Knickerbocker Theatre. There must have been a number of old grads in the big audience, for the way they kept calling for more of the old-time college songs and the newer college songs proved that the chords of their memories had been touched, and they were for the moment living over some of their freshmen and sophomore, and even senior days. Of course, there were numerous scenes and incidents that no old grad ever heard of in college, but they served to light up the more realistic features just so much the better. No college man, for instance, ever saw on the campus such lively dancing or such inimitable imitations as those with which Elsie Janis, the lone fair co-ed of Bingham College, entertained her fellow students, but all have listened to just such rollicking songs as those with which Sydney Jarvis, the old grad, Arthur Stanford, who never did any wonderful stunts, Harry Clarke, a real freshman and Edgar Halstead, a somewhat familiar professor of psychology, helped by an unusually strong chorus, kept the audience laughing a good share of the evening. Concerning the plot—just imagine Miss Janis attending the graduating ball as a young naval cadet and taking away from the boys all the girls, and also imagine Mr. Clarke carefully disguised as a chaperon and teaching the girls how to behave, and then—well, there's little use trying to imagine the complications that follow. You must go and see them for yourself, and you won't be sorry. The dancing, too, especially in the ballroom scene, is worth seeing for itself. It was no small factor in provoking the demand for something more than curtain calls for Miss Janis, to which she responded in a very graceful little speech of thanks. Mr. Luders' music was as bright and sparkling as any one could ask, and altogether The Fair Co-ed proved all that its authorship entitled the audience to expect—and that means a whole lot. * * * Andrew Mack and his very excellent company was greeted by large and enthusiastic audiences at the Metropolitan Theatre last Monday, when he presented for the first time in this city his latest success, Sergeant Devil McCarre, from the pen of Cecil De Mille. It is a story of the mounted police of northwestern Canada. Mr. Mack played the role of Victor O'Brien of the mounted police, known as Sergeant Devil McCarre, and the role fits him like a glove. The company consists of well-known actors, including Cecil De Mille, Mary Nash, Mildred Gregory and Daniel Giffith. * * *

Julia Marlowe will play her annual New York season under the management of the Shuberts at Daly's Theatre, beginning Monday evening, Feb. 15, immediately following William Faversham's engagement at that theatre. Miss Marlowe will appear in The Goddess of Reason, the new poetic drama of the French Revolution by Mary Johnston. * * * It has been rumored from Trenton, N. J., where the police stopped it after one performance, that The Girl from Rector's was about the naughtiest thing that ever was. That was enough to pack Werner's Theatre, where the piece had its first production in New York last week. The police were on hand in plain clothes, it is true, but they were there under the eye of Inspector McCluskey. They came early and remained late, ready to stop the performance if it did not measure up to upper Broadway standards of morality with a big M. Well, no one was arrested, unless some one in the audience pinched somebody else in the fun of the last act. Certainly no one did that in the first act. After that matters mended by growing worse—that is, amusingly worse. Then the French farce—well, as the program called it—began to show its real colors. The complications were complex and the fun was furious and the climax was reached in the last act. A simple-minded professor hopes to disclose a lot of social irregularities by having the wrong husbands come out of the wrong rooms in a hotel. But to his amazement everybody refuses to be disturbed at first, and then the men and their wives come out of the right rooms together. There's a suggestion of naughtiness there, and something was necessary in order to straighten out the plot. Of course, The Girl from Rector's has broad lines—however unfashionable these may be just at present, but she was originally French, you know. Pierre Veber wrote the play, and it was first called Loute. The present version is an adaptation by Paul Potter. The author's program note explains that he hopes the play will serve as a warning to American husbands and strengthen the hands of matrons and maidens who are battling for the purity of the American home. But the author does not appear before the curtain to explain the joke. The company is very good. The Violet Dale, as Loute, the girl from Rector's, looks gay and willowy; Nena Blake, as the virtuous one from Battle Creek, Mich., was very pretty, and Elita Proctor Otis was matronly as her mother. Mr. Van Rensselaer Wheeler was convincing as a man who was tired of the third speed pace of New York and longed for a happy home in Michigan, and Mr. Dallas Welford, as a college professor, was amusing. Mr. William Burress led a double life most successfully, and Max Freeman, as a waiter, took orders with rolling "r's" quite as of old. The three Misses Constantine danced themselves topsy turvy, and the audience seemed to like it well—that is, after the first act. * * * Clyde Fitch's newest comedy, The Happy Marriage, was produced in Schenectady last Monday before a fashionable audience. Doris Keane as the young American wife who after five years of matrimony discovers that her typical American husband is more in love with his business than with her, a part well suited to her, played well and she was called before the curtain several times. Edwin Arden as the husband shared in the evening's applause. The play is in three acts and the characters are few. After many complications, both serious and amusing the couple find that with mutual love, mutual forbearance and mutual trust every marriage must inevitably be the happy marriage. Mr. Eric Maurin plays the part of the trouble maker who helped disrupt the home. * * *

Salome, that much discussed music drama by Richard Strauss, was sung in the Manhattan Opera House last week before a large and fashionable audience. It was the first production in that opera house of the work, but not the first in New York, for it was heard two years ago for a single performance in the Metropolitan Opera House; then it was withdrawn, following a protest of the directors of the Metropolitan Opera and Realty Company, owners of the Metropolitan. All this going before but not forgotten, served to stimulate public interest not a little, and this was focussed on last night's performance. The rising of the curtain had been announced for nine o'clock, and at that hour the auditorium was well filled. Then the stragglers came, so that by the time Mr. Campanini took his place in the orchestra pit the house was crowded and there were no interruptions by late comers. It was nearly half-past nine when the performance actually began, and from that time until eleven the audience sat interested all the time and tense at moments. The drama lasted just an hour and a half, and practically the entire audience remained until the final chord and applauded, calling the principals out five times and on a sixth call they brought out Mr. Oscar Hammerstein with them. One feature of novelty about the production was that the work was sung in French—the Metropolitan performance having been in German. Another was that Mary Garden, the interpreter of the title role, also danced the Dance of the Seven Veils, a task usually allotted to a dancer who assumes the role for those few moments. But it is just the dance of Miss Garden which is likely to be the most talked of feature of the Manhattan production, for she dances it beautifully. It is rather posturing and graceful slow movement filled with beauty of movement and meaning, but above all, it is beautiful. There is nothing sensational about it as Miss Garden does it, but it is bounded on all sides by artistic grace. And Miss Garden acted it most gracefully, too. She laid less stress upon the side of the wanton and made the daughter of Herodias a wilful, untamed girl—for girlish she looked without a doubt. She struck a hundred pretty poses and attitudes that captivated the eye and she carried conviction by her work. In the complicated score, a welter of skill and discords, the voice is fortunate to survive it all. It is as the actress and the dancer that Miss Garden is most interesting in Salome. Mr. Dalmores was the Herod. Racked by moods and nerves, he gave a most realistic impersonation of the wretched king. His whole manner was nervous, and the way he gloated over the dancing Salome before him was vivid enough. As Jokannan, Mr. Dufranne sang and acted very well. His stoicism and his fervor were capitally portrayed. Miss Doria was an acceptable Herodias, and Mr. Valles a good Narabath. Mr. Campanini conducted excellently, bringing out all the effective movements of the fearfully difficult score and paying as much heed as possible to the human limitations of the singers. * * * A triple bill was boldly announced at the Manhattan Opera House last week. Cavalleria and Crispino e la Comare were given, so the Carnival of Venice must have been the third of the trilogy. Madame Tetrazzini again displayed her wondrous vocal agility. She toyed with trills and runs and shakes with the utmost ease to every one's delight—including her own. No singer before the public today derives such manifest enjoyment from her own work as does this amiable woman. Gianoli-Galletti and Sammarco gave competent renderings of their parts. Cavalleria preceded Crispino, with Mlle. Labia as Santuzza. She held the attention of the audience by her intense interpretation and sang splendidly. Mme. Mariska-Aldrich made an attractive looking but stiff Lolo. Constantino, as Turridu, did not sing as well as usual. His acting and attitude savored distinctly of a past operatic school. Crabbe made a manly Alfio. The male section of the chorus was again off on key, as has frequently happened in this opera. Signor Parelli conducted both operas. He gave a broad and controlled reading of the score, but erred on the side of delicacy. * * * ROY ROY.

Ogden, Feb. 7.—Grand Opera House (R. P. Herrick, mgr.)—Feb. 4, The Red Mill, to a crowded house; show good. Feb. 7, Si Plunkard; fair house and mediocre company. Next, Florence Roberts, 10; Florence Gear, 14. Utahna Theatre (Moore & Ethier, props.)—Moore stock company in first-class plays continues to draw the crowds. Ira Earde, Frederick Moore, Wm. Donovan, Frank Whittier and Joan Storm have won approval of the public. It is rumored in the theatrical circles that Martin Beck of the Orpheum Circuit is figuring on the establishment of one of his houses in Ogden in the near future. From a reliable source it is learned Mr. Beck will pay Ogden a visit during the coming week. Lyceum Theatre (Charles Lippincott, mgr.) presenting high-class vaudeville at popular prices to crowded houses. The Isis, Electric, Orpheum, Globe, Dreamland and Odeon present moving pictures to good houses.

San Diego, Feb. 8.—Garrick (J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—Feb. 4-9, The Camerophone; fair business; 10, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch; 14, Babes in Toyland; 15-16, The Red Mill; 20, The Lieutenant and the Cowboy. Pickwick (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—Week Feb. 8, Myrtle Vane company in State's Evidence is giving a very good production to good-sized audiences. Miss Vane handles her part in an inimitable manner. The balance of the company is well cast. Inez Bayard does a clever specialty between the acts and scores a hit. Queen (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.)—Week Feb. 8 (Sullivan & Considine vaudeville)—Armstrong and Davis, comedy sketch; Earl Ranthworth and company in sketch, The Supreme Test; De Garmo and Keough, aerial act; The Swickards; Marguerite Favar, soubrette; latest moving pictures. Very good show; capacity every performance. Grand Theatre (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.)—Elma Elwood; Maude De Alma; moving pictures and illustrated songs; good business. The Empire, Bijou, Union and Gaiety Theatres offer moving pictures and illustrated songs to good business. Several northern theatrical managers have been in the city the past week looking over the theatrical field with view of putting in the Orpheum Circuit here.

C. E. LUNDQUIST.

Long Beach, Feb. 5.—When Knighthood Was in Flower is the bill at the Bentley this week. Marjory Rambeau is the most delicious bit of femininity one could imagine in the part of Mary Tudor. She portrays the wilful, spoiled, perverse princess in a finished manner and is thoroughly adorable, especially in the last act, when she appears in a fetching empire frock of pale lavender satin. Charles King, as the lover, is clever and most pleasing.

Watsonville, Feb. 10.—Mme. Frieda Langendorff, the grand opera singer, will be heard here in concert on Feb. 13. Jeffries and his vaudeville show comes on the 16th.

Marysville, Feb. 7.—Hi Henry's Minstrels entertained the Marysville theatregoers last night. The stage settings were elaborate and the singing and clog dancing clever. Charles B. Hanford will appear at the Marysville Theatre Tuesday night, Feb. 9, in The Merchant of Venice. Feb. 4, Arthur Cunningham appeared at the Marysville Theatre in the Irish play, Shaun Rhue. His singing was good and appreciated by the audience, as several encores followed.

H. MARCUSE.

Grass Valley, Feb. 6.—The Farmer's Daughter played to a good-sized house last night and the audience was pleased with the performance. On the whole, however, this company is fairly well balanced, and some of the players are unquestionably all that has been claimed for them. The Farmer's Daughter is a heart story of rural life, somewhat along the lines of The Old Homestead, and is interesting all the way through.

Portland, Ore., Feb. 1.—Heilig Theatre (Cal Heilig, mgr.)—William Pangle, resident mgr.—Following the engagement of Brewster's Millions, Mme. Galski was heard in a song recital at this theatre on the 29th of January. The house was well filled and the lady was royally welcomed. She was in fine voice and was liberal with her encores. The accompaniment of Mr. La Forge was an event only second to the singing of Mme. Galski. Commencing tonight the Lombardi Grand Opera Company open a four nights' engagement, and are followed by Southern in repertoire. There is a big advance sale for both. Bungalow Theatre (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—The Bakeromians essayed The House of a Thousand Candles yesterday, and at both performances the house was not big enough to seat those desiring to witness the play. It was the consensus of opinion that it is without doubt one of the most entertaining plays offered this season by this company. It is one that keeps up the interest throughout, and when played by a sterling company like the Baker stock company, the interest did not lag for one second. For the opening performance the play went with a smoothness that has not been equalled for many a week. Every one was up to their lines and every climax was clean cut. But to get down to the work of the company, the one part that stands out above the rest is that of the butler, played by Donald Bowles. I understand that E. M. Holland created the part in the original production, and all I have to say is that Bowles gave the very best performance any one could have done in the part, with the exception of that sterling actor, Mr. Holland.

It is without doubt the very best thing this hard-working and capable actor has ever given to us, and he has made us sit up and take notice on previous occasions. Howard Russell and Maribel Seymour add the humor that is necessary to the play, and did it well. Miss Jewel and Mr. Ayers have not much to do, but are equal to demands made upon them. Everything points to a big week's business. Next week, Howard Russell's new play, The Jap. Baker Theatre (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—Frank Healey's San Francisco Opera Company is back with us again. It opened last night and turned people away. The opening bill is The Strollers, one of the best things that this company does. Of course, Teddy Webb is with them, and gee, was he not given a warm welcome upon his appearance? Of course, Teddy was there with the goods, and his several interpolated comic songs went big. This year Mr. Healey brings several new members, including Powell Kellogg and Evelyn Kellogg, and they fill in very well. The chorus is good and contains many familiar faces. Next week, The Burgomaster, Orpheum Theatre (J. H. Ericson, mgr.)—The past week's bill was entertaining, and consisted of acts sufficiently diversified to suit the cravings of any one. This week's bill includes the playlet, At the Sound of the Gong; Wilson and Heloise; Imro Fox; Claudius and Scarlet; Louise Schmidt; Armstrong and Verne, and Amoros Sisters. Martin Beck was in the city the past week, and last night William Morris was looking over the vaudeville field of this city. Looks like there is going to be something doing. Lyric Theatre (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—That old stand-by, The Shadows of a Great City, is the bill for this week at this theatre, and it did a good business upon its opening yesterday. Orral Humphrey did well with the leading part, and Charles Connors took good care of the comedy role. Rupert Drum and Ralph Belmont were also well cast. Mrs. Lillian Griffiths gave a satisfactory reading of her lines. Star Theatre (J. H. Ericson, mgr.)—The Leondors are headliners; Redwood and Gorden; Alice Lewis; Pryor and Saville, and Smlletta Sisters complete the bill. Grand Theatre (J. H. Ericson, mgr.)—At this house for this week Crayle Moore and company are headliners. Others on the bill are Lukens' Pony Circus; McFord and company, Van Demers, Marjory Barrett and Fred Bauer. At Pantages, Barnold's dog and monkey actors are the feature act.

Tacoma, Wash., Jan. 30.—Tacoma is to have a season of grand opera for the first time in several seasons, the Lombardi Italian Opera Company opening the 14th inst. The bills were selected by popular vote, and are as follows: Thursday, Lucia; Friday, Il Trovatore; Saturday matinee, I Pagliacci and Cavalleria Rusticana; Saturday night, La Boheme. Brewster's Millions comes, 7-8, and Ben Hur follows for four performances, starting 11. Jan. 23, The Alaskan for two nights again scored a success, being much improved since last season. Several interpolated numbers added to the tunefulness. Forest Huff, who replaces Harry Girard, is a pleasing singer and was well received. Edward Martindell as Tootie Pete and Edward Kallies as the Teddy Bear remain of the old list of principals. Lora Lieb, who by the way formerly resided here, and Fritz von Busing, were much admired. The chorus worked hard and was adequate in every respect. Jan. 26-27, The Flower of the Ranch proved to be a Western melodrama with musical additions. Fredericks Knight and Frances Cosser are not strangers to Tacoma, and were well received. Edward Hume proved to be a genuinely funny comedian. Jan. 30, Galski recital to fashionable audience. Henry McRae, manager of the Star Theatre, is negotiating for playhouses in Seattle, Portland and Spokane, intending to establish a circuit of stock companies. The case of Joseph Carroll against the Pacific Traction Company has been settled out of court. It will be remembered that Mr. Carroll, while at the Savoy Theatre last July, was injured by a street car, necessitating the amputation of his arm. Miss Phillips of The Flower of the Ranch company was the guest of Tacoma friends during the company's stay in this city. Mr. Barnold, whose dog and monkey actors are at the Pantages, is an old resident of Tacoma, and is renewing old friendships here this week. Friends of the members of the Savoy stock company admire the manner in which they have assumed control at that theatre, and even more liberal patronage than has been shown the theatre in the past will be theirs in future. During the past week some disagreement among the members arose, with the result that both managers resigned and left the company to get along as best it could. A hurried consultation was held among the players, and the result was they formed a stock company and elected officers and will hereafter manage their own theatre. This spirit of good fellowship and grit cannot but be admired and will be appreciated by patrons of the Savoy Theatre. Noel Travers, leading man of the company, stated last evening that the members of the company would continue to produce popular-priced melodramas just so long as they receive liberal patronage from their friends. For Her Sake, an absorbing melodrama with a Russian setting, was well played by the company at the Savoy. Miss Thornton and Miss Bryant displayed some effective gowns and interpreted their roles in an excellent manner. Noel Travers

How Mrs. Wiggs Got On the Stage

J. M. Barrie, England's great novelist and playwright, was the man who first saw in Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch and Lovey Mary a dramatic mine. One day while the guest of George C. Tyler, managing director of the Liebler & Co., at the celebrated Savage Club in London, Barrie suggested the dramatization of the novels and, in fact, urged it, as he was certain they embodied an enduring play of the widest possible appeal. Mr. Tyler had not read the books, but procured them at once and at the first glance he saw the truth of the Barrie belief in their dramatic richness. He entered into negotiations with the author and publisher by cable, and on his return to America found the manuscript of a play awaiting him. He cast and staged the production himself, and the result has been an artistic and financial triumph for three seasons, with the company booked for years ahead. The play is now being presented with great success in England, and the company that has just recently presented it in Australia will be seen at the American Theatre, the week of February 21st.

Princess Stock Rehearsing

Director Temple has started work with the new stock company in The Rounders, the first show to be staged, and as Mr. Temple is regarded as head and shoulders above all other directors when it comes to musical shows and spectacular productions, a great performance is anticipated. When one considers the stars in the company, this is not expecting too much. Such an aggregation was never before gathered together in the West, and with the exception of the old Weber & Field companies, this company is better than any similar organization our stage has known.

John Blackwood Adds New House to His String

John H. Blackwood and Walter P. Stone have leased the Grand Opera House of Los Angeles for a term of years from the Orpheum Theatre and Realty Company, which has conducted it for the past five years. The transfer of the lease was made last Monday and Blackwood and Stone assumed control immediately. Mr. Blackwood will be the manager and will retain the same position at the Belasco Theatre. Hartman is to present comic opera and musical comedy at the Grand for an indefinite period. Among the early offerings will be The Ameer, Chinese Honeymoon, El Capitan, King Dodo, The Fortune Teller, The Singing Girl, The Toreador, A Spring Chicken, The Circus Girl, The Strollers, The Prince of Pilsen and The Shogun. A number of new singers will be engaged and everything possible done to strengthen the company. Thomas Baker, who has been the house manager of the Grand for a number of years, will be transferred to a position of responsibility at the Orpheum. All of the other attaches will continue in their present positions.

Ada Lewis to be a Star

Frank O'Malley, one of the best newspaper men in the business, is collaborating with Edward W. Townsend upon a new play. The secret is out. Liebler & Co. have acquired it, and it has been named The Head of the House. Ada Lewis has been selected as its star, and the play will be brought out in Chicago. Miss Lewis has been holding up the Sam Bernard show. She came into prominence during the Harrigan and Hart days, and when Reilly and the Four Hundred was offered at the Garrick, she made a howling success. In eccentric comedy parts she has a quaintness and an oddity which has made her extremely conspicuous. As Mr. Townsend is the author of Chimmie Fadden, there is no doubt that he is going to give Miss Lewis the chance of her life. Ada Lewis is a San Francisco girl.

Fighting Cubic Air Theatre Bill

Sacramento, Feb. 11.—Fred Belasco, manager of the Alcazar Theatre, and Sam Loverich, manager of the Princess Theatre of San Francisco, visited the Legislature this afternoon and were shown Senator Kennedy's bill relating to cubic-air space in places of amusement. They were wrought up by its provisions, and declared they would take the matter up with the San Francisco Theatrical Managers' Association on their return. According to both, if the bill is passed, it will compel theatres to reduce their seating capacity that they may comply with the cubic-air space provisions. The bill is said to be aimed at nickelodeons. It demands 500 cubic air feet of space in the clear for each person occupying a seat.

Startling Move Made by Independent Picture Men

The most important and startling announcement ever made in the history of moving pictures is the statement that John J. Murdock, vice-president and general manager of the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association, had secured control of a moving picture machine and camera invented by D. W. McKinney; had organized a two-million-dollar corporation, to be known as the International Projecting and Producing Co., and would take the independent field. The officers of the company are John J. Murdock, president; D. W. McKinney, vice-president; H. J. Streycckmans, secretary; Capt. L. A. Boening, treasurer, and George F. Harding and John R. Davis, directors. Mr. McKinney is the inventor of a number of mechanical and electrical devices, and about three years ago installed the electrical system for the British government in South Africa. Capt. Boening is well known, and has occupied a number of responsible positions, resigning as treasurer of Wm. Swanson & Co. to become affiliated with the new independent company. Capt. Boening served during the Spanish-American campaign, and before his connection with Swanson was with the White City Construction Co. in an executive capacity. He is interested in a string of moving picture theatres, including the Roseland, one of the finest in Chicago.

David Belasco Here

DAVID BELASCO arrived from New York to visit his relatives on Thursday night, and is expected to remain with them at least a fortnight. Twelve years have elapsed since Mr. Belasco was here last.

With tonight's performance, the Columbia Theatre in Oakland closes. Allen Curtis moves to the Gayety in San Francisco next week. Oakland does not seem to be able to support musical comedy.

Van Ness

The best Chicago production has at last reached us. It is called A Stubborn Cinderella, and while toured by the firm of Askin & Singer, really marks the initial appearance of Mort H. Singer, for he has most of the show and is giving his personal attention to the tour. A Stubborn Cinderella has considerable more of real worth than most musical comedies and is bubbling over with catchy music, pretty ensembles and effects. A very competent company take care of every opportunity, and theatregoers have been enthusiastic in their praise of the performance. Heading the company is Homer B. Mason, a real, legitimate comedian, who does excellent work. He plays the part of the young college student leader who falls in love with every pretty girl, including the Stubborn Cinderella. His methods are good, and the only weak part of his work is his singing. Some good friend ought to take him to one side and gently whisper to him to cut it out. Otherwise, Mr. Mason, you're the real comedian. Anyway, you are the real one, but not a singing comedian. Next on the list of mirth provokers is Link Plumer, who plays the part of Fat, the good-natured, self-satisfied College boy. Link was for "steen" years a leading man in heroic melodrama, and just to show he could do any kind of acting he accepted the part of "Fat," got into the character by adding some thirty or forty pounds of adipose tissue, and then proceeded to make good. There is no mistake about that. Jack Raffael, with a remnant of a once fine singing voice, is seen as an irascible old Scotchman in kilts. Ethel Dovey, a dainty, graceful little woman, is charming as Lois, and Grace Edmond is clever as Lady Leslie, possessing a good singing voice, but being at times a little awkward and strained in her appearance. She has a positive, magnetic quality, and with experience wearing off these imperfections, she will be a great soubrette. Frederick Truesdell imparts to the character of the college president all the needed dignity, and in general the parts are well taken. We should not fail to notice the dancing of Harry Pauli. It is unusually good. In point of costumes and scenery and general effects, the show is of a high standard and should be seen at least once. It is here all next week.

Valencia

Edward Peple's touching play, The Prince Chap, is new to stock, and its performance at the Valencia Theatre this week is finished enough to challenge comparison with that of the Eastern company that gave it in this city some months ago. Mace Greenleaf, the new leading man, emphatically makes good as William Peyton, the American sculptor who adopts homeless little Claudia and finds that the possession of a child loses him the love of his betrothed, Alice Travers. In the first act Greenleaf is natural and spontaneous, and he bears modestly and without priggishness the halo of almost superhuman goodness with which the author has invested him. He might have impressed one as a more surething sculptor, had he thrown off his coat, rolled up his sleeves and donned an apron previous to modeling, instead of working at his statue in fine broadcloth, but the majority of theatregoers are unfamiliar with sculptors' studios, so that was a minor detail. In the later scenes Mr. Greenleaf conveys admirably the seriousness and dignity of his added years, while his acting loses nothing of its sympathy. As little Claudia, Bebe Daniels fairly shares honors with the leading man, and as big Claudia, Blanche Stoddard is pleasing and girlish. Thomas McLarnie gives an absolutely flawless performance as the Earl of Huntington. His English is of the real English variety, and not the strange tongue which usually passes for insular English on this side of the Atlantic. Mr. McLarnie's clothes and his acting are alike a perfect fit, and he accomplishes the exceedingly difficult task of being funny and a gentleman at one and the same time. Beatrice Nichols wins many laughs for her spirited performance of Phoebe, the studio "slavey," and further reinforces her position as a very clever soubrette. Helen Lackaye is very good as Alice. Grace Travers pleads feelingly as Claudia's dying mother, while perhaps overdoing the part. Charles Dow Clarke greatly enhances the performance by his humorous rendering of an English servant, and as Peyton's fellow-artists, Robert Homans, Gerald Harcourt and Reginald Travers are all good. It is a pleasure to note the great improvement in the interiors. This week's are noticeably good. Herman Heller's orchestral selections are most enjoyable and show the musicianly qualities of this clever leader.

American

The Light Eternal, which first gained metropolitan reputation in San Francisco some five years ago, with a run of almost eight weeks, was brought to the American last Sunday and has been pleasing the American clientele this week. Notable in the performance is the fine, intelligent characterization of Alf T. Layne, as the Emperor Diocletian. Mr. Layne has impressed our theatregoers as being an actor possessed of unusually attractive physical endowments, and a pleasing, convincing personality, combined with a most pleasing, discriminating sense. He should be urged to spend a season or two with one of our San Francisco stocks. He would be an acquisition. Jane Kelton gave a very impressive and attractive portrayal of the part of Artemia. Her delightful personality made a strong appeal in the part to the sympathies of the audience. Clyde Granger won a distinct success as the Captain of the Emperor's guard, and showed himself to be a clever, well-grounded actor. Other good characterizations were presented by Carl Stockdale, Charles Edler, Florence Chapman. Scenically the play was most pleasing.

Alcazar

Merely Mary Ann is a delightful little comedy one that could be conceived only by a poetic nature—and correspondingly it must needs be interpreted in the two leading parts by not only actors, but actors with a natural poetic feeling. The Alcazar is very lucky in the possession of two such actors as Bertram Lytell and Evelyn Vaughan, for to us it seems conclusive that both Miss Vaughan and Mr. Lytell rise decidedly superior to the originals who appeared as Mary Ann and Lancelot. The delightful reading and charmingly toned voice that characterizes the work of Miss Vaughan are employed with telling effect in this week's role, and Mr. Lytell, who shows another side of his versatility in portraying an excitable young German musician, is decidedly effective and pleasing. John B. Maher clothes his characterization of the vicar with those little touches that come from an intimate knowledge of the acting business. Consequently his vicar is a gem and a bright incident in the play. George Webb does a small bit that also stands out. Ernest Glendinning as Lord Tottingham is good, and Bert Wesner presents a good picture of Herr Brahamson. Adele Belgarde most effectively portrays a common, but ambitious, hard-working mother who has a pretty daughter, Rosie. The aforesaid Rosie is played capably by Bessie Barriscale. The rest of the cast is in good hands. Scenically everything is most effective, and as usual, Edward Lada's orchestra is a great part of the show.

Princess

The Princess Theatre is apparently the favored spot these times, for the business has been and is still of the phenomenal order. The change that on Monday brought back to life Lonesome Town was wisely made, for this is the best musical comedy of recent years, and, furthermore, it is entirely of California origin. The company interpreting it is very cleverly placed, and to view the performance is to indulge in one long, continuous spasm of laughter. Kolb and Dill have two of their best parts, and they are exceedingly good in their portrayals. Sydney De Grey, the very reliable and talented member of the company, is cast as Fresno Phil, and there is no exception to be taken to his characterization. George Wright gives a good comedy idea of a rural constable. Adele Rafter is beautiful and fascinating as the scheming widow. Lucy Monroe as Hazy Fogg, Hazel Gottunz as Ima Peach and Hazel Aubury as Anne Nother, three native daughters, are clever. The scenery was that used in the New York production and is extremely picturesque. Two weeks more of this show and then comes the regular stock season.

Owing to the Sacramento wash-out, E. H. Sothern had to return to San Francisco and will reach Portland tonight by way of Salt Lake. He was held over in Portland for performances on Monday and Tuesday of this week, instead of the last three nights of this week, as originally booked, and opened in Seattle Wednesday night, putting in an additional Thursday matinee.

New York Managers Favor Suppression of Indecent Plays

New York, Feb. 10.—The charge of Charles Burnham, president of the Theatre Managers' Association, that five plays now running in this city are immoral and indecent made a great stir today, coming as it did from a manager and backed as it was by prominent play-producers and authors. It is not impossible that the Managers' Association may demand a play censor. Managers and authors of the plays criticized Mr. Burnham and declared his attack unwarranted. Archbishop Farley said he was pleased that Mr. Burnham had come out so boldly. Daniel Frohman, A. L. Erlanger and others who have enormous interests at stake favor purification of the drama in this country, and particularly in New York. The five plays under discussion and characterized as immoral are: Miss Innocence, in which Anna Held vulgarly appears with a vulgar company at the New York Theatre. The Queen of the Moulin Rouge, a production by Thomas Riley, which is merely an aggregation of partially clothed women, including Hattie Forsythe, the former San Francisco show-girl. They dance and sing suggestive Parisian songs. The Easiest Way, a new play by Eugene Walter, now running at the Stuyvesant Theatre under the direction of David Belasco, with Francis Starr in the leading role. The Blue Mouse, a "sprightly" comedy by Clyde Fitch. The Girl from Rector's, a new play by Paul Potter, that was recently suppressed by the police at Trenton, N. J. It is running at Joe Weber's music hall and is possibly the most indecent of the lot. Unlike some of the others it has no cleverness to redeem it from its low features. Although Burnham's interview did not mention any plays specifically, it is well known that he meant the five above enumerated, and it is the almost universal opinion here that Salome with Mary Garden should be included, for it is possibly the most indecent and shocking of all. Anna Held's Miss Innocence and The Queen of the Moulin Rouge are mere aggregations of female loveliness, partially clothed according to the latest Parisian modes; The Girl from Rector's is low without being clever. It is a matter of some surprise that The Easiest Way and The Blue Mouse should have been included, for while they contain some naughty lines they are not more suggestive than other bright and clever comedies that have been produced here.

James Keane has returned from Marshfield and desires it to be understood that all salaries due for the recent stock season up there were settled in full, and reiterated this statement by exhibiting receipts in full from the various members of his company. Mr. Keane is figuring on going out soon for a tour of the one nighters in Labio Romani.

Pearl Allen is playing stock in Edmonton, Canada, to nice business. Last week he used Zaza, A Stranger in a Strange Land and Heir to the Hurrah.

Vaudeville

J. P. BOGARDUS, Vaudeville Editor

Orpheum

The headline act for this week is Helen Grantly, Harry Hilliard and James M. Colville in a very intense, dramatic playlet by Israel Zangwill, entitled The Never-Never Land. Each member of this little company is a finished actor, and they present the sketch most effectively. Dick Crolus, who achieved a memorable hit with Wm. Courtleigh in Peaches, returns with his own company in a sketch of the race-track, in which he plays a tout. This he does capitally and is well supported. The Farrell-Taylor Trio appears to advantage in a diverting black-face comedy, called That Minstrel Man. Leon Rogee does some creditable imitations of the cello, trombone and other musical instruments. The holdovers are Byron and Langdon, Johnny McVeigh, Charles Wayne & Co. and Seldom's marble poses. The bill is a most entertaining one and has been most happily selected.

National

Sid Grauman had a lively lot of entertainers this week that included Halliday and Curley, in The Battle of Too Soon, a travesty on the modern war drama, and one of the best acted turns seen here for months; Connolly, Weinrich and Connolly, in a melange of mirth and melody; Caron and Herbert, acrobatic comedians; Earl Girdeller and clever performing dogs; Margaret Severance and company, in Nowadays; the Rosemary ballet of ten comely girls in dances and cake-walk competitions; Charles W. Williams, monologist. Next week presents an entire new bill, consisting of the Baker Troupe, four men and two women, the world's greatest cyclists; Henry Carver, equilibrist, and Alice Carver, sharpshooter, in a double act; Watson and Miss Little in Matrimonial Bargains; Cutter and Miss Boulden, dancers, vocalists and mimics; the two Brandons, musical artists; Les Theodors, aerial acrobats, Mrs. Theodore, a female Hercules, doing the phenomenal strong business.

Washington Square

This north side theatre is running a stock company with farce comedies and has the following new vaudeville turns for next week: Knapp and Brady, Thomas and Payne and Katie Kelly.

Wigwam

Business has been good through all the bad weather at this Mission district theatre, with excellent companies to insure its success. This week's bill has Creo, in her mystifying act, The Creation of Woman; Allen's Traveling Men, in Fun in a Pullman Car; Stephen Gratton & Co., in a one-act farce; Waltham Trio, bicycle experts; Sabine and Vera, vaudeville favorites; Gus Bruno, dialectician; Morse and Brown, song, dance and talking act—good acts all through. New week's bill will include Lamar and Gabriel, comic acrobats; Phil Staats, the funny monologist and mimic; Emily Benner, operatic vocalist; Carson Bros., Apollos of vaudeville; Petching Bros., scenic musical novelty; Florenz Troupe of acrobats; Burton and Brooks, presenting The Limit.

Pantages-Empire

Manager Winstock presented a strong bill this week that filled his house notwithstanding the rain. It was headed by Marjorie Lake and her musical comedy company of twenty-five people in opera extravagancy; Lee Beggs and company in Old Folks at Home; Ross and Adams, German comedians; Francisco Muracci, violin virtuoso; Clara Dagnau and her dancing boys; Stubblefield Trio, European aerial artists. On Friday, James Jeffries filled the house at two matinees and two night performances at increased prices, knocking out all previous door records. Next week's attractions will be Barnold's dog and monkey actors, including Dan, the intoxicated canine; Knox Brothers and Helene, minglers of mirth and melody; John M. Heffern & Co., dramatic playlet, The Grafters; Irving Jones, celebrated comedian; Juggling Thorns, superior comedy jugglers.

Thalia Concert Hall

It is always lively at the Thalia, and the outside storms have no effect upon its flow of vital life inside. The new teams to appear next week are Johnson Students, club jugglers; Southern Quartette, plantation pastimes; Trixeda and Robinson, singing and dancing; Prof. Fait & Co., mind-reading.

Gayety

A splendid bill represents the efforts of Manager George Clayton to please his patrons this week. The vaudeville bill is composed of Berry, Nelson and Berry, in a clever tumbling act, Miss Nelson being exceedingly clever; Frankie Frankell, an attractive young woman and a finished singer, is enthusiastically received in prima donna selections; L. R. Stockwell, the favorite, with his little company, presents the pathetic comedy, The Blind Organist, and is a feature of the bill. James Post and company present their laughing hit, A Day at Santa Cruz. It brings out a succession of hearty laughs. Next week, Allen Curtis and his musical comedy company will be the feature for an indefinite period.

Ellen Terry Refuses Vaudeville Offer

Ellen Terry has just refused an offer of $2,000 a week for twenty-one weeks from William Morris to appear in vaudeville in America. She says she is not yet ready to go on the vaudeville stage. At present she is playing a very small part in Pinkie and the Fairies, at His Majesty's Theatre in London.

William Morris is still in the north, not having completed his circuit deal.

Vaudeville Notes

A vaudeville war is expected in St. Paul and Minneapolis since the announcement of J. E. Rogers, owner of the Unique, at Minneapolis, that he has plans ready for a large vaudeville house in St. Paul. The house will be ready by next September. Mr. Rogers has plans for a circuit which will include houses in Minneapolis, Duluth, Winnipeg, Fargo and Grand Forks. The rival popular-priced vaudeville houses in Minneapolis are both booked by Sullivan & Considine.

Anna Marble, the wife of Channing Pollock, has written a sketch called In Old Edam, described as a delft dialogue with dainty ditties, which served to bring forward Little Chip and Mary Marble into the vaudeville field in Norfolk, Va., last week.

Harry Conlan, an old-time and widely known performer in musical comedies and vaudeville on this Coast, died of meningitis at the Cook County Hospital, Chicago, on January 23d. The Eagles and White Rats took charge of his funeral. Conlan was playing East with Ed Carter, another well-known Coast performer.

The Curtis Theatre, Denver, is now playing "White Rat" acts under the management of Pelton & Smutzer, who have a great line of theatres in Colorado and adjacent States formerly devoted to melodrama, but now being turned into vaudeville. This is the first of the proposed Pelton & Smutzer circuit to be booked through the White Rats agency at Chicago.

Charley Oro and company came down from a long engagement in the Northwest, by sea from Seattle, the railroad being in a mushy condition from the rains.

Jeffries' day at the Pantages-Empire yesterday was a hit from the shoulder.

Washington Square Theatre, week Feb. 14: Jules Mendel & Co., in A Manager's Troubles; Knapp and Brady, A Jay Circus; Thomas and Payne, singing and dancing act; Blanche Buford, singing; Kittie Kelly, illustrated songs, and the Two Brandenos, musical artists.

The United Booking Agency Grades

Some four weeks ago we published the news that the United people and their affiliating circuits were arranging to graduate their acts in accordance with their class and salaries. Below follows the classification of cities and towns to the different grades, with some explanatory notes given out from the United office. The grading of the cities and towns is correct, and there will not be many changes made in them. According to the list of houses published weekly by the United Booking Offices, with the programme of each, there are over seventy vaudeville theatres open at the present time with bills secured through the United Offices. In the original statement in The Dramatic Review, three grades were mentioned, but there must be a fourth one now with the addition to the time the United is booking in the small towns. Most of this very smallest time comes under the heading of picture shows. Then there is The Brotherhood Circuit, with small theatres located in the upper portion of New York State, Canada and Pennsylvania. This cannot be definitely fixed. Probably it will belong in the fourth class, as it contains some picture houses among the thirty-five or forty on the circuit, all in little towns. Neither can we exactly place the Poli Circuit. Poli always allies himself with the "small managers," but as a matter of fact, he plays some of the largest acts at the market price set by the New York houses, although, of course, the Poli Circuit can not play a big act in all of its houses, nor can it give continually a show to compare with New York. Here follows the four classifications of cities and towns: First Grade—Boston, Providence, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Hammerstein's, Colonial, Orpheum, Alhambra, 125th Street, Fifth Avenue, Newark, Baltimore, Washington, Cleveland, Detroit, Rochester, Syracuse, Buffalo, Toronto, Albany. Second Grade—Greenpoint, Keeney's (Brooklyn), Columbus, Portland, Me., Troy, Utica, Norfolk, Harrisburg, Atlanta, Paterson, Hoboken, Dayton, Montreal, Ottawa, Hamilton, Trenton, New Haven, Hartford, Springfield, Worcester, Scranton, Wilkesbarre, Wheeling, Baltimore (Auditorium), Altoona, Bridgeport. Third Grade—Reading, Easton, Allentown, Johnstown, Camden, Malden, Brockton, Brooklyn (Columbia), Lowell, New Bedford, Lynn, Binghamton, Lawrence, Waterbury, Wilmington, Union Hill, Yonkers and White Plains (split). Fourth Grade—Cleveland (Grand), Carbondale, Hazelton, Norristown, Pittsburg (Gaiety), Mahanoy City, Rome, Pottsville, Woonsocket, Erie. It will be noticed that no cities appear in the United Booking list west of Cleveland and Detroit. And a combination effort is being made by the Orpheum Circuit Co., Sullivan & Considine and the Pantages Western States Vaudeville Association, and whatever arrangements may be made with William Morris, the New York booking agent of the White Rats of America, now visiting this Coast, with that circuit to keep the United people out of the territory west of the Mississippi.

New Los Angeles Orpheum

Next season Los Angeles will have its new Orpheum. This announcement was made there last week by Martin Beck, general manager, and Morris Meyerfeld, Jr., president of the Orpheum Circuit. With Mr. Beck and Mr. Meyerfeld were P. J. Casey, booking agent, and Mark A. Luescher, general press representative of the Orpheum Circuit. The new Orpheum Theatre will be started in March. "We have definitely decided upon three new houses," said Mr. Meyerfeld, "and the Los Angeles theatre comes first on the list. As soon as the house here is completed we shall build one in Kansas City, and after that one in New Orleans. We have already secured an option on the Los Angeles lot. It is on a corner and near the business center of the city. I am not ready as yet to give out details, but I will say that the building will be as handsome and complete as any vaudeville theatre in the country. It will not be an office building, but will be planned and built solely for theatrical purposes. We shall employ local talent and labor entirely. The architects will be local man and all the money expended will be placed locally."

Blanche Walsh Is Seriously Ill

Kansas City, Feb. 8.—Blanche Walsh was brought here today on a special train from Fort Smith, Ark., where she was taken ill Saturday while filling an engagement there, and was placed in the University hospital. She is suffering from a complication of stomach and liver troubles. Her physician this afternoon said: "Miss Walsh is dangerously ill."

as the Prince was natural and unaffected. J. Lee Morris and Gavin Dorothy, new members of the company, acquitted themselves in a capable manner, and Carl Hinkley and Harry Cleveland contributed materially to the success of the production. Next week, The Life of an Actress. The McRae stock company at the Star made a big hit this week with their production of An American Citizen. Miss Oswald, in some of the finest gowns ever seen here in a stock production, played her part splendidly. Alan Holmer was a distinct success in the role made famous by N. C. Goodwin. The supporting company was adequate in every way. James Martin was at his best in the character of a German promoter, and Ed Lawrence displayed all the superfluities of an English valet in a supposed to possess. Robert Lawrence, Denton Vane and Erba Robeson contributed much of the comedy and Miss Van Tassel gave excellent proof of her versatility in the character of Lady Rumm. John McCabe and Bertha Cordray, who are great favorites here, played small parts with the same carefulness that characterizes all their work. The staging was beautiful and appropriate. The bill for next week will be Mistress Nell. Mr. McRae will produce in the near future Because She Loved Him So, Glittering Gloria, The Road to Yesterday and other well-known successes. The talk of the town this week is Barnold's dog and monkey show at the Pantages. So great has been the demand for seats that extra performances have had to be given. Aside from this, the Juggling Thorns had a splendid act, and Irving Jones in con monologues and songs was a scream. John Heffron and company in a short drama, entitled The Graces, had a high-grade offering of a class not often seen in the West. Knox Brothers and Helene offered a novel musical act that was enjoyable. Feb. 1.—The Piccolo Melodists, Walter H. Bedell and company in a dramatic sketch, Each Musical Hour; Manning and Ford, song and dance team; Earl and Bartlett, in an Irish sketch. The Grand offered several feature acts the past week, chief of which was the Van Demans in their thrilling aerial act. Luken's pony circus was a big drawing card, interesting alike to old and young. Lewis McCort and company in a brief comedy, Her Last Rehearsal, employed four people with an unusually good act. Art Adair had a decidedly unique manner of presenting a musical turn, and Marjory Barrett was good in songs and imitations. Feb. 1.—Luken's performing lions; Deaves and company, in a burlesque on Uncle Tom's Cabin; Newhoff and Dode, song and dance act; Kirsten-Marionette Troupe of equilibrists; Joe Edmonds, comedian. A. H. Seattle, Feb. 2.—Moore Theatre—Brewster's Millions is the attraction at the Moore this week, opening with a good house last night. The company is decidedly well balanced and there are a dozen well-played characters. Grand Opera House—The Flower of the Ranch opened to a big house at the Grand last night, and proved very entertaining. Edward Hume, a comedian, who came unheralded, is extremely clever and had a number of eccentric dances and stunts that were entirely new. Lois Theatre—The Pantages stock company is this week producing Glittering Gloria, and as usual mounted with careful attention to detail. Miss May as Gloria plays the part with spirit and good effect. Mr. Lonsdale as Boskett is excellent. The balance of the company are all very good. Orpheum—This week's bill at the Orpheum appears to be an especially good one. Frank Nelson and company will head the bill in their sketch, Thirty Dollars. May Boley, the American comedienne, will also prove a big drawing card, and the several other good numbers are: Tschneroff's circus of ponies, dogs and pigeons; Goldsmith and Hoppe, a couple of musical comedians; the Royal Italian Band; Borani and Nevano in a sensational novelty called Weary Waggles the Dandy Dode Trump, Mask and Music, cartoonists. At Pantages the dramatic sketch, A Man of the People, or Capital vs. Labor, in which Melbourne MacLennan and Virginia Drew Tresscott will make their appearance at Pantages Theatre with the new bill opening tomorrow, was written by Miss Tresscott. At the Star, eight new vaudeville acts will be presented, including Onetta, noted as the most active and enduring working bench on the stage; the Borani Troupe of globe artists, recently from Europe; The Sexton's Dream, a singing and musical novelty; Frank Marks and company in a musical and race track sketch, The Tipster; Errac, in the character of an old street musician, Com'—Dance is the amusing canine playlet, P. H. Pupper in Dogville; Eddie Roesch, with a ballad. E. MORGENSTERN.

Spotlights

J. R. Gray who states Virginia Thornton, Harry Cleveland and other members of the Savoy Theatre Stock Company of Tacoma, have assigned their salary claims to him, filed suit against Mandel Lurie and Noel Travers, the two managers, asking judgment for $956.75, which it is alleged they owe the members of the company for services from January 1st to January 23d. In an affidavit, Gray states that the managers are about to sell all the stock scenery and properties and that Lurie has absconded. Harry B. Cleveland, the leading man, filed another suit against the Andrus-Cushing Lighting and Fixture Company and Sheriff Tom Morris, to recover $500 damages for an alleged unlawful attachment which was made last Saturday upon the box office receipts of the theatre. The complaint states that the electric company obtained a $50 judgment against Manager Lurie on January 20 and last Saturday afternoon the sheriff attached the receipts of the box office and obtained $83. Cleveland claims Lurie had no interest in the box office at that time and absolutely no claim to the receipts as the actors were continuing the performances on their own account in an effort to make good their own losses. Cleveland asks $500 damages and $83 which the sheriff took from the box office.

Owing to the great number of attractions booked for the season, the Van Ness management has found it necessary to limit the stay of some of the most important attractions to one week each, so that theatre goers will have an opportunity of seeing as many of the latest Eastern successes during the present season as will be able to crowd into the limited booking time. Girls will be seen for one week and Lillian Russell will also play for seven days only. Charles Frohman is sending his big production of The Right of Way with Guy Standing and Theodore Roberts for a week's engagement.

It remained for Blossom and Herbert, the authors of The Red Mill, which will shortly be seen at the Van Ness Theatre, not only to furnish an interesting story framed in a picturesque setting; with melodies which will find their way into every household, but to provide a melodramatic sensation which closes the first act, where the roving American tourists plan and execute the escape from the mill of the persecuted heroine, by way of the revolving blades of the mill, as they turn out of view of the audience.

The Master Power, by Alfred Allen of Los Angeles, will be given its premier performance at the Mason, in that city, February 15th, continuing for three days. The Master Power was awarded the first prize of one thousand dollars offered by a New York publication. It is a real story of the south. The scene is laid in the stirring times subsequent to the Spanish-American war, and has to do with Judge Claire and his daughter Grace, and Dole, an educated creole, half sister to Grace, though not recognized by the judge. The girl, Dole, has been sent north to a training school by Arthur Gordon, and the interest taken in her welfare has been misinterpreted by her. When she finally realizes that Arthur loves Grace, her love for him is overpowered by a feeling for revenge. She finds a ready ally in Saul Carleton, a negro and a state representative, whose love for Grace spurs him on. The denouement comes when Saul's hatred takes a most atrocious form, and his crime is expiated. Associated with Mr. Allen in the production is Ernest Shuter. He is enthusiastic over the artistic worth and dramatic construction of The Master Power, and has acquired all theatrical rights. An excellent company has been organized and rehearsed by the author, the staging is on a liberal scale and a splendid production is promised.

Five companies have been touring all this season, under the management of Wagenhals & Kemper, presenting the Eugene Walter play, Paid in Full. Although some of them have gone to the uttermost parts of the country, and undergone all the vicissitudes of travel, not one of them has yet lost a performance. In the big storms of a week ago in the West, one organization got snow-bound in Iowa, but by heroic efforts, two engines, a snow-plow and a special train, they got to the next town and "rung up" on time.

H. J. Lugg is the manager now of the Watsonville Opera House.

The old theatre at Gonzales has been closed, and a new one, under the management of M. C. Clark, will open in two weeks.

Correspondence

Eureka, Feb. 6. - Ingomar Theatre. - R. P. Skilling, author of The Mystic Race, a Japanese-American comic opera in three acts, produced for three nights for the benefit of the local lodge of Elks. The attendance for the three nights was the largest in the history of the Ingomar. The entire cast was by local people and was a most enjoyable entertainment. Next attraction booked at this house will be the Elks' Minstrels. Margarita Theatre opened some five weeks ago under the management of Thorpe and Shaw, playing the Perry Gorton stock company. They have produced among other plays, The Charity Ball, When Knighthood Was in Flower, Are You a Mason, Paid in Full, and this week The Holy City. Very good bills for a cheap price admission. Business has not been very good. Company satisfactory. Mr. Thorpe retired last week and Mr. Gorton took over his share. The theatre will now be run by Shaw and Gorton. Empire Theatre (Van Ness mgr) - Together with the regular moving pictures the Sugimoto Troupe of seven Japanese; Nagle and Adams; and Juliette Chandler. This place has been drawing large crowds. The days closed last night. The new feature will be the McDonald Sisters, song and dance team. Other moving picture houses doing a satisfactory business. W.

Chicago, Feb. 11. Flood conditions north of here prevented the Hi Henry Minstrel company from appearing here Feb. 4, as scheduled. Feb. 5, Arthur Cunningham, appearing in Kerry Gow, delighted his audience as he does in every production in which he plays, but the house was not all it should have been. The Lieutenant and the Cowboy, to a fair house. 3—Corinne from her former appearances here, drew a good house to witness her in Lola from Berlin, and the prolonged applause that greeted her from time to time during the evening was proof that her popularity here has not waned. She is deserving of a much better vehicle than the one she has chosen for this season, however. A packed house, critical to a degree, greeted Chas. B. Hanford in The Merchant of Venice last night, Feb. 10, and nothing but expressions of highest praise were heard at the end of the long evening's entertainment. As Shylock, Mr. Hanford is probably without a peer in this country, and every spectator seemed to feel and understand the especial dramatic treatment was being permitted him. Feb. 12—Uncle Tom's Cabin company. At the Gem, Wayne, the wizard, is drawing packed houses by his clever trickery this week. C. H. CHACE.

Sacramento, Feb. 11.—Thomas Jefferson in Rip Van Winkle played to fair business at the Clunie, 5-6. The Lieutenant and the Lady to fair house. 7. Corinne in Lola from Berlin, big house. 8. Hi Henry Minstrels, good show. 10. Eugene Walters, The Wolf, will be at the Clunie, 12. John D. The Second Story Man, and The Indignant Sub-sergeant, 13. Being Upton Sinclair's socialist plays, James J. Jeffries company, 14. Sam Langford company in A Trip to Africa, 16. Elks' big Charity Show, 19. Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, 20. A Stubbhorn Cinderella, 22. Del S. Lawrence company opens at the Grand in The Light Eternal. 21. Portages, week commencing February 1.—Thalero's dog and pony circus, special circus scenery; Hodges and Launchmere, selections and comedy; Kresko and Fox, pratling pals; James and Kitty Brady, The Society Girl and the Toot; McClure and Grant, Horizontal Bars; Kingsbury and Munson, the Girl and the Millionaire; Ada Williams, the biograph. Acme Theatre, week of February 7.—Baker Troupe, world's greatest cyclists; Henry and Alice Carver; Watson and Little; Cutter and Boulden; Les Theodors; Musical Brandons; Esco Ives.

London, Feb. 6.—Charles Frohman just at present occupies a more prominent position in London than he does in the United States in a theatrical sense. At the Duke of York's he is presenting Peter Pan, with Pauline Chase in the title role. At the Hicks, around the Corner, What Every Woman Knows holds a temporary tenancy, with Gerald du Maurier and Hilda Trevelyan, the original Wendy of Peter Pan, in the leading parts. Both of these Barrie plays are blessed with crowded houses, and in the case of the latter production, which returns to the Duke of York at the expiration of the run of Peter Pan, its end is nowhere in sight. At the Comedy Theatre the retentive American manager is offering Marie Tempest in Somerset Maugham's latest, Penelope, which has been received as heartily as his three recent efforts. In addition, it is with the co-operation of Frohman that Arthur Boucher will present Samson in London. Evelyn Millard is appearing at the Garrick in Anthony Hope's The Adventures of Lady Ursula, "by arrangement with Charles Frohman." Ellaine Terriss opens at the Hicks on February 17 in The Dashing Little Duke, under the management of Frohman, and some time later, at a theatre not yet determined upon, her husband, Seymour Hicks, under the same control, will appear in a musical version of The Dictator. London's nearest approach to a Weber & Fields production is the performance of a former music hall troupe known as The Follies. They have been holding forth for some time past at the Apollo Theatre, and, strange to say, although their humor is weak and their performance boring in the extreme, they have been playing to full houses. Albert Chevalier has a quite revolutionary sort of scheme for the drama which he hopes to try on you before presenting it in England. "I have long thought," he says, "of a scheme for a little theatre for little plays. My idea is to have a theatre large enough to hold an audience that would be sufficient to pay the not very great expenses which would run the whole gamut—farce, comedy, drama, fantasy or pantomime, operetta or burlesque, five plays in one night. The public could come in just as they do at a variety theatre, at any time, and see something which would be complete."

Grand Opera as Exemplified by the Lambardies is Much to Portland's Taste

PORTLAND, Ore., Feb. 8.—HEILIG THEATRE (Cal. Heilig, mgr.; William Pangle, resident mgr.)—The engagement of the Lambardi Grand Opera Company at this theatre last week was one of the greatest successes in theatrical history of this city both from a financial and artistic standpoint. Every night the theatre was packed, and the engagement could just as well have been for a week longer and no doubt the same status of affairs would have existed. E. H. Sothern was to have opened his engagement last Thursday night in Lord Dundreary at this house, but owing to the washouts throughout California he could not make connections, and did not arrive in this city until Saturday morning last. On that day he opened with a matinee and presented Dundreary to S. R. O. and that evening he presented Hamlet to another capacity house. He remains tonight and tomorrow night, presenting Richelieu and Dundreary. There is a heavy advance sale. Of course his Dundreary was a great piece of work from any standpoint. Coming—Corriné in Lola from Berlin, 11th, 12th and 13th. Hanford in repertoire follows. The Wolf is an early booking.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—The Jap, a drama from the pen of Howard Russell, the popular member of the Baker Stock Company, was presented for the first time on any stage yesterday at this theatre. This is the second attempt of Russell as a playwright, his other play being The Swindler, and be it said to his credit that he has developed wonderfully as a writer, and no doubt if he keeps trying, it will only be a question of time when he will have a national reputation along these lines. In the present piece the central figure is a young Japanese diplomat, played by Sydney Ayers, who is in this country on a peace mission. He falls in love with the daughter of a wealthy man, her mother being dead, she supposing that her mother had been of Spanish descent, later learning that she was a Japanese. Her father working with the villain undertakes to persuade the young diplomat to enter into an undertaking for the smuggling of coolies into this country. In return for his services they are to give him a map of the fortifications of Puget Sound. He refuses, and of course earns the enmity of the father, which places many barriers in his way towards winning the love of the daughter—but, of course, he succeeds in the end. The play is full of good things, and with additions here and there ought to make good in other cities away from the home of the writer. Of course, the management have outdone themselves in the staging of the play. The company also did itself proud by the fine work they gave throughout. Next week—In the Bishop's Carriage.

BAKER THEATRE (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—Standing room was at a premium at this theatre at both performances yesterday, when The Burgomaster opened its engagement, which will cover the entire week at this theatre. Ruth White is still playing Willie, and it is needless for me to state that she is giving the same finished and artistic rendition of the part that has made her so popular wherever she has played it. Harry Hermen is found in the name role, and gives fairly good satisfaction, although he does forget his dialect once in a while. Of course all the song hits went big, and the audience called for the rendition of them time after time. The chorus is large and can sing. Next week—Arthur Cunningham, in Kerry Green.

ORPHEUM (J. E. Erricson, mgr.)—Of course, it is needless for me to state that the usual big business is still in evidence at this house, it seems as if it is always that way. The bill for the past week was headed by the playlet entitled At the Sound of the Gong, a realistic play of the prize ring. The act of Claudius and Scarlet was also a very entertaining one. Commencing tonight—Frank Nelson Co. are headliners; Schernoff's Circus; May Boley; Royal Italian Quartette; Goldsmith and Hoppe; Borani and Nevaro; and Mack and Marcus.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—At this house the past week was devoted to The Shadows of a Great City, and the company gave a high class rendition of the play and all were seen to advantage in it. Yesterday they presented The Missing Husband, which proved to be a pleasing comedy. Orval Humphrey gave a good performance, as did Ralph Belmont, Rupert Drum and Charles Connors. The leading lady, Miss Isabell Duncan, and Mrs. Lillian Griffiths also gave creditable performances.

GRAND THEATRE (J. E. Erricson, mgr.)—Lukens Lions are the headline act, and the balance of the bill comprises Harry Deaves & Co., Kirsten Marietta Troupe, Newhoff & Phelps, Art Adair and Harry MacDuffee.

Pantages has the Four Piccolo Midgets for the headline act for this week.

Continuous vaudeville is still being offered at the Star with the Fowlers, equilibrists, as the feature act. A. W. W.

London Play Aids War Spirit

LONDON, Feb. 10.—A great future has been created throughout England by the play An Englishman's Home, first produced a fortnight ago. This crude, illogical drama has stirred Great Britain to an extent comparative only to the sudden arrival of the ultimatum from Berlin. Long leaders in the press, from the Spectator and Times down, are devoted to the subject. Hundreds are enrolling for national defense. Secretary Haldane's scheme for a new territorial force was proving a sad failure before this agitation began, as the needed number of men would not enlist. The reflex action of this excitement at Germany was the sole objective of Great Britain's sudden alarm, already felt. It is considered peculiarly unfortunate that this mania should have seized England on the eve of the king's visit to Berlin. The situation is complicated by the premature disclosure of the admiralty's plan to

New Theatre for Oxnard

George P. Austin has taken a five-year lease on the La Petite Theatre, the owner of which, M. W. Hurst, has already begun the work of remodeling and converting it into a comfortable, modern playhouse, which will permit the use of the largest scenery carried by any road company. A balcony will be built in and the seating will be of the best. The dressing rooms for the use of the actors will be large and airy and supplied with every convenience. The new theatre will probably be known as the Oxnard Opera House, although the name has not as yet been definitely decided upon. It will be ready about April 1.

"THAT ODD COMEDIAN"

"If it is odd to be clever, then Beresford is odd, for he is one of the cleverest comedians who has graced the Victory stage in many a long moon. Many an honest laugh he brought forth last night by methods that were clean cut and to the point. He is one of those Sol Smith Russell sort of actors—the kind that can make you hold your sides with laughter one minute and wipe a tear from the eye the next. Beresford is the candy all right, all right."—The Morning Times (San Jose), Feb. 10.

Most Uproarious Laughter of the Current Season

The most uproarious laughter of the current theatrical season echoed and re-echoed through the Prince Theatre last night when Harry Beresford and a clever company presented the melodramatic farce, "Who's Your Friend?" No comedian of the season has found it in his power to take the audience so completely in his grasp as Mr. Beresford, and his work received its well deserved reward when the comedian was forced to respond to six curtain calls.—Houston Daily Post, Jan. 20, 1909.

New Fun that Causes Shouts of Laughter

The play abounds in new fun that caused shouts of laughter from the highly entertained audience. Harry Beresford gives excellent interpretations of the part of the old man, peculiar of speech and peculiar of thought. His comic wit bobs up with an unintentional spontaneity quite refreshing.—San Antonio Daily Express, Jan. 22.

Ye Liberty Playhouse in Oakland is Offering Some Great Entertainments

Oakland, Cal., Feb. 10.—The long, continuous rainfall is certainly having a sad effect upon our theatres, and the attendance at all the houses is far from being normal. At the Macdonough, The Wolf, a stirring melodrama headed by that clever artist, Andrew Robson, is playing to very light houses. The company is satisfactory in every respect, and the six characters of the play are well interpreted. Harry Beresford will follow, and then comes Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch. At Ye Liberty, Richard Hotaling is in his second week, and his offering, Julius Caesar, is receiving much more favorable comment than his opening bill, Richelieu. In order to display his great versatility, Mr. Hotaling will next week essay two different roles, the fore part of the week playing Brutus, alternating with Mr. Bennison, and later alternating with Geo. Friend as Cassius. Mr. Hotaling as Caesar gave a fine interpretation of the role, his monologue in the orchard being a particularly fine piece of acting. Geo. Friend as Cassius was very good, and the work of Geo. Webster in the title role was more than acceptable. Mr. Shumer made a stately Roman senator, and but little fault could be found with the Marcus Antonius of Robt. Harrison. Isabelle Fletcher made a queenly Portia and showed to much better advantage than in the role of last week. Too much praise cannot be extended to Chas. Blair, property man, Grace Wishaar, artist, and Milton Stallard, stage director, as everything in their departments was faultless. Next week, The First Violin, and then A Midsummer Night's Dream. The Jolly Widow, a musical comedy, brimful of tuneful music and catchy songs, is being presented by the Allen Curtis Musical Company at the Columbia and is doing a fairly good business. Jean Hathaway, the leading woman of the company, assumes the title role and makes a distinct hit in the part. Her singing is greatly appreciated and results in frequent encores. The chorus is well trained and contains some good singers and clever dances. This week's bill at the Orpheum is a very even one; no particularly startling feature, but every number interesting. The Murray Sisters have returned and are repeating their former success. Considering the inclement weather, the attendance continues very good, and Manager Ebey says that business is satisfactory in every way. Leander De Cordova & Company; Harvey Family; Paula La Croix; Adele and Freddie Astaire; Julie Herne and company; Murray Sisters; Jewell's Manikins; Josselin Trio. At the Novelty we have an excellent bill. The following programme is rendered: Four Darktowns, Burton and Holmes, Martinez and Martinez, Jas. D. Polk, and the Vitograph. Buster Brown and his dog, Tige, are the big feature of the Bell's programme and are playing to fair-sized audiences at every performance. The following other artists also appeared: Petching Bros., on the Bellscope; Phil Staats; motion pictures; Emily Benner; Carson Brothers. Mackenzie Gordon, the well-known tenor, gives a concert at Ye Liberty, 12th, and Mme. Langendorff, a famous contralto, 18th. Manager Bishop announces that he has secured the rights of The College Widow, Salomy Jane and Merely Mary Ann, and all three will be early productions at Ye Liberty.

LOUIS SCHEELINE.

Theatres Put Ban On New York Press

At a meeting of the Association of Theatre Managers of Greater New York held last week at the Hotel Astor, forty-five theatre managers pledged themselves individually to withdraw all theatrical advertising from the columns of the New York Press beginning next Monday morning. The action was the result of the personal encounter last Saturday night between two Press reporters and Oscar Hammerstein in front of the Knickerbocker Hotel, in which the impresario asserts that he was knocked down and beaten. The fracas was the result of a letter written by Hammerstein to the editor of the Press reflecting on the two newspaper men. The theatre managers held a meeting last Tuesday to consider the case and Mr. Hammerstein then presented his side, producing evidence to show that the attack was premeditated. A committee was appointed to consider the case and the report this committee made yesterday was quickly followed by the pledge to sever all business relations with the Press. The members, as an organization, could not take action. Charles Burnham, manager of Wallack's and president of the association, notified the management of the Press last night that if they cared to make any explanation a special meeting would be called for Saturday and their side of the case would be heard. The management of the Press informed Mr. Burnham that they had no desire to make any explanation. The forty-five members of the Association of Theatre Managers control practically all the playhouses in Greater New York, to the number of seventy. The only manager not included is David Belasco, who controls the Stuyvesant and the Belasco theatres.

Laura Hudson

A new and striking picture of Laura Hudson, who is being featured in The Feud over the Orpheum Circuit, is shown above. Miss Hudson, who is a handsome young woman, is one of the most experienced and popular leading women we have in the United States and her little excursion into vaudeville has brought her new honors. The Denver News voiced the opinion of the general run of reviews when it said: "The Feud's bid for popularity is the decided ability of Miss Laura Hudson."

No Tights for Leslie Preston

In addition to a romantic, mud-bespattered elopement, Mr. and Mrs. James C. Ray, who recently set things humming around the Belasco Theatre in Los Angeles and elsewhere by their mad matrimonial flight to Santa Ana, have handed in further qualifications to the "So Different" club by contemplating a lawsuit against one John Blackwood, also connected with the Belasco. Mrs. Ray, who is known on the stage by her maiden name, Leslie Preston, refused tights in The Stranger in New York, which the company is playing this week. She had assigned to her the part of May Ketchum, a society spy. She would not wear aforesaid costume for anybody's sake. Mr. Blackwood raised his eyebrows slightly at this symptom of insubordination and the next thing the actress knew, she had been served with her notice. This rather annoyed her, as well as her husband, and she decided that according to her contract the notice was illegal. "The part absolutely does not require tights," say Mr. and Mrs. Ray in concert and separately. "There was no reason," says Mrs. Ray,

"why I should be forced to wear them. I did not accept that position in the company to be a musical comedy queen; besides, that costume is simply absurd in that play and especially in the part which was given to me. Under these circumstances, Mr. Blackwood has no grounds whatsoever for cancelling my contract. Steps will be taken to convince him of the soundness of our argument." Mr. Ray left last Monday for a Coast tour in The Merchant of Venice, which Joseph De-Grasse is putting under way, but to all intents and purposes the threatened suit will go merrily on.

Walter D. Mahn Marries Miss Virginia Hennings

Walter D. Mahn wishes to acquaint his friends with the fact that he was married to Miss Virginia Hennings last November. Mr. Mahn is the popular treasurer of the Stanford & Western stock company, whose home is at the Empire Theatre, Philadelphia. Mrs. Mahn's experience in the theatrical profession has been unlimited, having played with the Girard stock and Forepaugh's stock companies of Philadelphia and has been a member of the Stanford & Western stock company for three years. Miss Hennings, which name she will still play under, is considered one of the best juvenile actresses in the East today. Her marriage will not interfere with her stage career. The Philadelphia correspondent for the REVIEW wishes to extend his heartiest congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Walter D. Mahn and hopes their obstacles be small ones.

Spotlights

The plot of Clyde Fitch's comedy, Girls, has to do with three girls who believe that men are merely and principally disadvantageous. They decide that they can go through life without them and they plan to fight their own battles. One is a secretary for a law firm, the second is a stenographer, and the third longs for that fame that flourishes only in the limelight of the stage. The humor of the comedy is to be found in the complications which these maidens encounter while attempting to go through life without the assistance of mere men. But finally, of course, they capitulate, and the final curtain finds each in the arms of a masculine admirer.

The Dutch Kiddies in The Red Mill were a positive sensation during the run of the Herbert-Blossom musical success at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York. They will be seen here at the Van Ness along with the other features of the production.

An announcement that will be of interest to theatre goers and managers throughout the West is to the effect that S. Terry McKean will present The Players in a repertoire of new plays through California this coming season. The Players will be headed by Walter H. Newman, an actor of sterling worth. The company composing The Players has been carefully selected by Manager McKean, and he promises a dramatic organization second to none in the West. A season of sixteen Henry E. Dixey, who is still known as "Adonis" Dixey, and who has achieved a new success in Henry W. Savage's production of Mary Jan's Pa, says he has "love letters to burn," but won't burn them. Instead, he will publish a book of these epistles. From the time of his appearance in Adonis, a quarter of a century ago, Dixey has preserved the most interesting of numerous missives of an admiring and affectionate nature sent him by women in scores of cities and towns where he played. These now fill several trunks. His volume is to bear the title, Unsolicited Mss., which was suggested by his friend, Oliver Her-ford. The idea of publishing the choicest of these feminine expressions of uninvited regard was formed, Dixey said, when Lillian Russell stated her purpose to print a book of love letters she had saved. He explains that he wishes to show the weakness for writing letters of this character is not confined to men.

The Shuberts also announce that the engagement of The Vampire at the Hackett Theatre has ended, and was followed by a return New York engagement of Clyde Fitch's noted comedy, Girls, opening February 8 for one week only. On February 15, Girls followed in turn at the Hackett Theatre by Grace George, under the management of William A. Brady, in her new play.

According to a letter from Ollie Mack, he, with Charley Murray, expects to go to Los Angeles about May 1st for a summer engagement at the Grand Opera House, under the Blackwood management.

Z. M. Harris

Mr. Harris, the first agent of the new Princess Amusement company, the property of Mort H. Singer, is on the Coast, booming A Stubborn Cinderella, the musical piece that has made all kinds of a commotion this season. Everywhere it has played it has been hailed as a wonderfully pleasing and amusing piece. Mr. Harris is a graduate from the newspaper ranks, having been assistant city editor of the Wilkesbarre Leader for five years, and afterwards was employed on the World and American of New York. His first season in the show business was ahead of The Time, the Place and the Girl. He did such good work with this show that when Mort Singer put out A Stubborn Cinderella he selected Mr. Harris for the position of agent for his new show. It was a good move.

Joe Noel's New Dramatic Conception

In the lines and lyrics for the Oakland Nile Club's forthcoming jinks, written by Joseph Noel, the talented dramatist, short-story writer and journalist, have aroused no end of favorable discussion. The production is to be given in the spring in the open air eucalyptus theatre in Piedmont Park. Noel has titled his musical fantasy The Lure of the Desert. The play contains some splendid dramatic climaxes and is regarded by those who have read it as the best piece of work yet prepared for a club revel on this side of the bay. Noel has spent several years in the desert country and has made the most of the opportunities for effective poetical work offered by the solitude, grandeur and desolation of the land "God forgot." The theme of Noel's play is the cry of the desert for the green things and the pleasant verdure of the fruitful country. The Spirit of the Desert comes down to California, where the queen of growing things sits in state and implores her to come with him to the rescue of the desert. Redwood opposes the plan. The Spirit of the Desert attempts strategy, then force. Herein is developed the climax of the play. The music of Noel's songs has been written by E. J. Stricklen, an Oakland musician, and is pronounced exceptionally fine. The role of Redwood Forest King is to be taken by Carle Anderson; the comedy part goes to Willard Barton; Henry A. Melvin may be cast for the role of the desert. The setting will be of the period just succeeding the stone age. This extract from the Song of the Desert gives some idea of the fine art in Noel's play:

THE DESERT

Low hanging clouds o'er head;
Wind whipping through the sage;
Sand whirling in blind rage;
No sun, no moon, no star;
No shelter, brake nor tree,
Deep solitude, as if the earth lay dead.

Burst is the gloom profound:
Like ingot new from hell,
The sun which may compel
Both love and burning hate,
Hurls down enduring curse
Upon a vacant world that gives no sound.

No thrush darts to the sky;
No songster breaks his heart
In music set apart
As nature's primal note
Of love that must create—
Days that were dead; days that are will die.

Close on this blistered plain
Kings ruled, made laws and war.
Slaves bound to victor's car
Wept to be free and died,
Or lived and wept the more
To give expression to long nights of pain.

Gay ladies blossomed here,
Consumers of the race,
Mere dolls of pretty face
Who toyed with life as now
The sand dunes toy with them.
They frowned on virtue; stabbed it with a sneer.

* * * * *

And mighty Gods held sway
In temples raised in fear.
Their voices none could hear
Of priests who worshipped still
Each God, each king, each crown of different day.

Gone lady, slave and king.
Gone priest and fearsome God.
No reverence has the clod
For clod nor mingled dust
For dust. Equality
Proud scepter of the mob, rules without sting.

Spotlights

Jim Haswell writes from Seattle that business there is picking up. Russell, Drew & French put in a stock at the Seattle Theatre, commencing February 21, opening in Chased Across the Continent, with some of the members of the Savoy Theatre company, who closed recently in Tacoma. William Dowlin, leading man of the Lois Theatre, closed last Saturday and is going to St. Paul. Eddie Roesch, singer at the Star Theatre, was held up by two footpads the other night, who broke two bones in his hand but secured nothing of value. Morton Cohn of Portland, Ore., was refused a license to open the Third Avenue Theatre, owing to the frail condition of the building.

Owing to the contract existing between the Shuberts and the authors of Havana, the English musical comedy success from the Gaiety Theatre, London, specifying that the piece must have its New York premiere the first week in February, and the inability of the Messrs. Shubert to obtain any postponement, the Shuberts' James T. Powers made his first appearance in Havana in New York February 11. Eddie Foy in Mr. Hamlet of Broadway, therefore, ended his engagement at the Casino and immediately went on tour moving to Philadelphia and taking the place of Havana at the Lyric Theatre in the Quaker City.

Maxine Elliott, who is now playing The Chaperon at her own new theatre in West Thirty-ninth street, last week received a cable from Lewis Waller, the English actor-manager, giving notice of his intention to hold her to a contract made more than two years ago, by the terms of which she is forced to visit England this spring to appear in a new production with Mr. Waller. The understanding between Mr. Waller and Miss Elliott was and is that Miss Elliott is to play the leading feminine role in this new play, which is by Constance Fletcher, and that, in return, the American rights to the piece are to be her property. The play is at present known as 1801, and its author, Miss Fletcher, is one of the most prominent literary figures in London, known to the stage as the author of the dramatic version of Kipling's The Light That Failed. Miss Elliott said that she should feel obliged to keep her agreement with Mr. Waller, especially as the production is already in preparation, and that she must, therefore, begin to plan for her trip abroad in March.

The Dan Frohmans Have Separated

The sensation in theatrical circles is the separation of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Frohman (Margaret Illington), which has been brought into the public eye by the presence here of Miss Illington and her admission that a divorce was in contemplation. Miss Illington is at present living at the Clara Barton Hospital, taking the rest cure. In an interview Miss Illington said: "There isn't anything in life that's worth while for a woman except a home of her own and a husband that loves her, and perhaps a few kiddies to keep her busy, and that's what I'm going to have one of these days, and that's the way I'm going to spend all the rest of my life." She looked very young and very tired as she lay back in her pillows, with her black hair tumbling about her shoulders, for Mrs. Frohman has not recovered from her late terrible nervous breakdown. "If a girl loves the stage, if she's all ambition and eagerness for it; then she gets her compensation as she goes along," she said, "but I'm not that kind of a girl, and I've known it ever since I first began, nine years ago. I've hated it. I've rebelled and rebelled, and I've collapsed, and I've fainted, and it was all nothing—nothing beside the pride that my husband felt in my career. He wouldn't realize that my nerves and my health were giving way; that I wanted warm, human ties—that I was sick of the theatre. And so now things have reached a pass where I must live my own life, must break bonds that are slowly crushing the heart out of me, and be free. I want the people who have been kind to me all through my stage life to realize that I'm not doing anything abnormal or sensational. I just want what other women want. I hate divorce as much as any woman in the world ever did, and I'm getting a divorce now because the life I had to lead was against every instinct of my nature. I never went down to my dressing-room without wishing that I had finished my last engagement, and I used to beg Mr. Frohman, over and over and over, to let me stop. But he wouldn't. I used to tell him that I was wretched, that there was no pleasure in my work, and I only threw myself into it because that's my nature. Whatever I'm doing—I want you at least to try to look as if you believed me. Do I know what I want? I've known it all along. I'm—why, I'm born for domesticity. I assure you that my stage career is over, over, over. I'll never miss it, want it, nor long for it—not for an instant. I had no great interest in the stage, while my husband was absorbed in it. The essence of married life ought, in my opinion, to be companionship, and what companionship could there be between an actress and her husband who was a manager? The actress would sleep till noon, in the afternoon her husband would have the theatre business to attend to, and in the evening his wife would have to act. And so through the weary years no sort of comradeship would be possible. No doubt, for women who have talent and who find a pleasure in acting for itself, the life of the theatre is the proper thing, but the reverse is the case with me. For a woman with ideas such as mine, home life is the thing. My part in The Thief which led to my breakdown was of a most exacting and exhaustive character, and according to Mr. Frohman was the longest part with one exception that he had ever seen. It was a difficult part and I was on the stage during almost the whole performance. In some parts an actor or actress may get rests even when in the public view. Perhaps, occasionally it is possible to recuperate from great exertion when walking up the stage, but with Marise in The Thief it was different. For almost the whole of the first act, without saying a word or uttering an exclamation, the actress has to put her whole soul into intense suggestive acting, the strain being fearful. That part told on me more than all the rest, though I was acting until the end of the piece. My collapse came in October and both Dr. Alexander Lambert, President Roosevelt's private physician, and Dr. John Welzmiiller of New York, said that it would be from a year and a half to two years before I would be fit to return to the stage. They both impressed upon me the importance of rest and quiet, and I intend to follow their advice and will not do anything in the divorce proceedings until I am quite recovered." Daniel Frohman, manager of the Lyceum Theatre in New York, when seen in that city relative to the separation of himself and wife, was asked if he had heard that Mrs. Frohman might marry Edward J. Bowes, a real estate man of San Francisco. He said he had not heard positively that Mrs. Frohman contemplated marriage with Mr. Bowes. "If Mrs. Frohman obtains a divorce and wishes to marry again, I certainly hope that she does become the wife of Mr. Bowes. He is a splendid chap—a man of great capacity and a man I think who would make her a good husband. I have known Mr. Bowes a long time. So has Mrs. Frohman. He has visited New York frequently and has been a guest at my home. I have always admired him greatly, and I see no reason why their marriage should not be a happy one." Speaking of the separation, Mr. Frohman said: "Everything was of a perfectly amicable nature. I knew when she went to California exactly what the plan was. It was purely an amicable agreement, and, while I regret it all, I believe it is for the best. You see, when Miss Illington and I were married I realized that there was a tremendous future before her on the stage. She was blessed with wonderful ability, and I was as ambitious for her success as I could possibly be. She, too, was ambitious, and together we strove to win all the honors for her that we could. It was this that was undoubtedly responsible for the present turn of events. In my desire to see her get ahead and reach the highest goal that can be attained on the stage, I may have overlooked the other side and did not realize that she might long for the domestic life. Then her health broke down under the terrific strain. The work became distasteful to her, but I never knew it. It became infinitely more difficult for her to continue on the stage when she no longer cared for it, and finally she was compelled to give it up altogether. But that is all past. I can only say now that my fondest hope is that Miss Illington will be happy in whatever she undertakes. If she obtains a divorce, I hope she marries Mr. Bowes." Margaret Illington is the daughter of I. H. Light of Bloomington, Ill. Her name in private life was Maud Light. She was educated at Wesleyan University and the Chicago Medical College. She made her stage debut with James K. Hackett in The Pride of Jericho at the Criterion Theatre in New York City in 1900. She was successful with E. H. Sothern in If I Were King. She created the leading role of Yuki in A Japanese Nightingale. Other productions in which she attracted attention were Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots and His House in Order, in which she played Nina with John Drew. Her crowning success came with her interpretation of Marie Louise in The Thief. This highly emotional part was the last straw, and eventually led to the breakdown of her nervous system. Following a collapse in Boston last year, Mrs. Frohman retired from her part in The Thief. Shortly after this Frohman announced that his wife had abandoned the stage permanently. Soon rumors of disagreements in the Frohman household began to go about, but they were always denied by Frohman. After she went West last fall Frohman joined her, and they appeared to be upon the best of terms at that time.

Coquelin Cadet Dead

PARIS, February 8.—Ernest Alexandre Honore Coquelin, the French actor known under the name of Coquelin Cadet, died in a hospital in Paris today. He was a brother of Benoit-Constant Coquelin, the elder, who died January 27th. Coquelin Cadet died suddenly at a sanatorium at Suresnes, where he had been an inmate for several months, suffering from cerebral troubles. He was informed of the death of his brother three days ago. The doctors adopted infinite precautions to lessen the shock of this news, but the patient collapsed at the announcement, which undoubtedly hastened his end. Ernest Alexandre Honore Coquelin was born at Boulogne, May 16, 1848. In 1867 he carried off first prize for comedy at the Paris Conservatory. He re-entered the Comedie Francaise in 1876 and played with his brother. During the siege of Paris he gained the military medal for bravery at the battle of Buzenval. Among his best creations were Ulrich in Le Sphynx, of Octave Feuillet and Basile in Le Barbier de Seville. He was the author of many monologues. M. Coquelin had been ill for more than a year. He was removed to a private sanatorium near Paris last February, and it was then said that his mind was affected.

The Madera Concert Band is now the lessee of the theatre in Madera. L. H. Service succeeds C. H. Leggett as manager.

Moving Picture Horror in Mexico

MEXICO CITY, February 15.—Between 250 and 300 people were burned to death and many were injured in a fire which destroyed the Flores Theatre, in the City of Acapulco, last night. The Flores Theatre was a wooden structure, and last night more than 1,000 people crowded into it to witness a special performance given in honor of Governor Damian Flores of the State of Guerrero, who was visiting the port at the time. One of the numbers on the programme consisted of a series of moving pictures. While the operator was exhibiting these a film caught fire and a blaze was quickly communicated to some bunting which had been used for decorative purposes. In an incredibly short time the flames spread to all parts of the structure. There were but three narrow exits, and the panic-stricken audience rushed to them, many persons falling, to be crushed to death, their bodies choking the way to escape for others. The screams of those imprisoned were terrifying. Owing to the rapidity with which the fire spread and the intense heat, it was impossible to attempt rescue work, and those imprisoned were literally roasted alive, as the fire burned with little smoke and few were suffocated. To-day pitiful scenes of grief were witnessed on the streets of the city. Men, women and children wandered about, hunting for relatives or friends. Acapulco, on the west coast of the State of Guerrero, is one of the three important ports of the Pacific coast of Mexico. Nearly all of the steamer lines make it a port of call, and the harbor is accounted the best in Mexico. No Americans lost their lives in the fire, according to a dispatch received at the State Department in Washington February 16 from American Consul Maxwell K. Moorehead. Over 200 people were burned to death, according to Consul Moorehead.

"Charley Rhodes (Charley Bense), the pioneer minstrel well known throughout this section of the State and in Nevada, died at Santa Clara last Tuesday (June 5th), after a lingering illness, leaving to mourn him a wife and child. His remains were brought to this city yesterday for interment and the funeral took place from the depot, but, as no notice had been given, no one was aware that he was to be brought here, and the old-time public favorite was followed to the grave by his little family only."

Oliver Morosco Is Not Building Any New Houses; John Blackwood Is Not Acquiring Any More, But Herr Fischer Is—Los Angeles Is a Great Show Town

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 18.—MASON—The Master Power, Alfred Allen's prize contest play, which holds the boards at the Wyatt playhouse this week, is, from the standpoints of technique and workmanship, a delightfully well executed composition. Also it is well acted by the presenting company, but there the praise must end and adverse comment begin. The theme of the play is such as to make it an "impossible" affair, and it is builded upon unfair and untrue hypotheses. Taking the eternal problem of race inequality as a basis for foundation, Mr. Allen has drawn a picture which presupposes the existence of ideas in the North regarding the negro which do not exist, hence his thesis is wrong throughout. The story tells of a beautiful young girl in whose veins is a slight taint of colored blood, who has been given every advantage and a college education in the North by a young southerner in whose family she belongs. Returning to her Southern home a beautiful and accomplished young woman, she labors under the idea that her benefactor's kindness and generosity has been caused by his love for her; also she thinks he will tell her of the love and ask her to be his wife. On the contrary, when, after trying to obtain an expression of love from him unsuccessfully, she herself makes the declaration and asks him to marry her, the young man unfeelingly calls her "a damned nigger," and announces his intention of marrying a white girl. This girl, the play discloses, is the half sister of the unhappy mulatto girl, and, fired by jealousy, the spurned one incites the ruin of her patron's sweetheart at the hands of a Northern educated "nigger." Then follows the meting out of justice to the colored fiend, the suicide of the ruined girl, and a generally doleful ending for the story. Mr. Allen has handled his subject, such as it is, well, but he has been unfortunate in his choice of material. The audiences which have, from rather mixed motives, visited the Mason, have all praised the play and players, although uniformly deploring the subject matter.

MAJESTIC—The charms of Rip Van Winkle seem never to fade, for despite the fact that it is a third generation, Jefferson who is playing the title role in the old piece at the Majestic this week, the play meets with as much favor and draws as strongly as of yore, due allowance being made for the greater fame of Joseph Jefferson, whose son, Thomas Jefferson, is giving a very satisfactory performance of his father's old part. The play is given an entirely adequate mounting, and, for the most part, the supporting company is quite capable of the demands made upon it.

BURBANK—Faust is playing to good houses for the second week at the Burbank. Mary Hall will close her engagement at the end of the week and depart for Salt Lake. Many friends of the clever actress are attending the Burbank this week to bid her farewell. Blanche Hall will be seen in her old place again next week.

Byron Beasley in the role of Me-phisto continues to capture the honors, although the entire company appears to advantage.

AUDITORIUM—The offering for the week at the Auditorium is Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves. With Bruce Gordon Kingsley at the big Auditorium organ, good music is assured and there is no disappointment along this line. The chorus is steadily improving under the efficient direction of Florence Leslie. Roscoe Arbuckle, Walter Reed and Billy Onslow provide the fun of the present offering as in the former productions, and they have lost none of their power to make others laugh. Olga Stech does some clever dancing and some singing. The rest of the cast is in good hands and the show as a whole is very satisfactory.

BELASCO—A Stranger in New York is on for the second week at the Belasco and is doing capacity business at every performance. All the members of the company have new song specialties and each one is a hit in itself. A Texas Steer is billed for next week, but it is more than likely that The Stranger will hold over.

GRAND—The Ferris Hartman company is seen to advantage in another of Victor Herbert's musical creations this week. The Ameer is by far the best of the Hartman offerings. Christine Nielsen is a valuable addition to the cast; she has a clear, girlish voice and a pleasing personality. Emile Kruschke does some good character acting in his sketch of the fussy old chamberlain Heezaburd. Walter De Leon contributes an entertaining bit in his song, I Want to Find a New One, and the Clancy song by the Ameer and chorus is more than pleasing. The costumes and staging of the play are the best so far of the Hartman engagement.

LOS ANGELES—The Los Angeles Theatre has a good bill this week. Joe Deming and his company of five offer what proves to be a vastly amusing skit in The Traveling Man, Mr. Deming's impersonation of R. U. Wise, a commercial traveler, keeping the house in laughter most of the time. Holmes and Hollister won the favor of the audience in a one-act farcical affair, in which Mr. Holmes interpolates an excellent imitation of the late James A. Hearne, in a scene from Shore Acres. Sabine and Vera, in a clever dancing act; Payne and Lee, singers and dancers; Rosa Roma, violinist; John Birch, who plays a melodrama, himself assuming all of the characters, and motion pictures complete a good bill.

ORPHEUM—There is a rattling enjoyable vaudeville bill at the Orpheum this week. Miss Julia Herne, a daughter of James A. Herne, and a very talented girl, both from a literary and professional standpoint, has a sketch, A Mountain Cinderella, written by herself and George G. Parker. It is well constructed, the lines are clever, and Miss Herne plays it with a dash that carries it along to the satisfaction of the audience. It is prettily set and the two men in the company, Messrs. Marin and Tinkham, each are capable. The Chadwick trio, in their sketch, which was on last week, seem even greater favorites this week. Miss Helen Gog makes her appearance as a vocalist on the vaudeville stage, doing "straight" work in evening dress. She sings three songs. She has a strong mezzo-soprano voice which she uses effectively. Charles Wayne's act, depicting the adventure of a society drunk, is comical and very unique. The Joselyn trio of acrobats and picturesque trapeze work, the Murray sisters in good American songs and DeHaven and Sydney, were other excellent features of the bill.

EMPIRE—Mlle. Almeda is featured at the Empire this week. She is a clairvoyant and as such does all sorts of clever stunts. The Roselles present a comedy sketch in which they were to have appeared last week. Bessie Evans, comedienne and soubrette, features some new and popular songs, does a little dainty dancing and has a line of original monology. The stock company presents Al Frank's comedy, The Leading Lady. The usual illustrated songs and motion pictures complete the bill.

FISCHER'S—It's a far cry from the handling of musical burlesque and musical comedy to a real presentation of real comic opera, yet, in the current offering at Fischer's, that transition has been accomplished, and The Mikado, in tableoid form, is proving a meritorious performance. The version of the old Gilbert and Sullivan favorite, retains the story in compact form suitable for its presentation in one act, and is garnished with the best of the favorite songs. Ben T. Dillon's Ko-Ko is an artistic achievement which does him credit, and his rendition of topical local hits during his singing of They Never Will Be Missed, made a big hit with last night's houses. Tracy McDermott's A Wandering Minstrel I, gave him a better opportunity for displaying his singing ability than almost anything he has had during his present engagement. Frank Vack, as the Mikado; Max Bloom, as Pooh-Bah; Dof' Raymond, as Yum-Yum, and Nellie Montgomery and Alice Sher, as her sisters, were all excellent. Pearl Jardinere deserves special praise for her make-up and acting of Katisha. The offering is distinctly a worthy adaptation, worthily presented.

UNIQUE—The current bill at the Unique is another of Producer Rehn's entitled The Prince and the Baron. What it lacks in plot is made up in catchy songs and good chorus numbers. Among the numbers that deserve especial mention are Beer, Beer, Beer, sung by George Rehn, who is cast as the Baron of Weisburger; If You Don't Change Your Living That's the Way You're Going to Die, by Will H. Cross, cast for a Sherlock Holmes; In Parce, on the Boulevard, by Mable Darragh, who takes the part of a chic French actress, Mini, and You Needn't Wink, by Lillian Sutherland, as Tessie Trubble, who gets what her name signified. Will Armstrong, with his Irish brogue, is down on the bill as Mike O'Brien. Rosa Rehn, as Hattie Hussie, the female book agent, does a funny stunt in trying to sell books to the orchestra. The illustrated songs are rendered this week by Allie Barbier.

WALKER'S—The Walker theatre has a bill this week full of action and variety. The Swickards, a comedy operatic duo, do good work; The Three Mizumas are clever Japanese acrobats, the two youngsters performing stunts that are certainly marvelous; The Royal Italian Saxophone Quartet pleased all with their melodious music and their varied program, from the heavy operatic airs to the light popular numbers; Elise Schuyler, already well known to Los Angeles theatregoers, gave a program full of novelties and surprises; Billy Mack, the college boy dancer, and Miss Ferne Darby, complete the bill. C. M. EMERY.

Allen Curtis

Allen Curtis is in full swing of great popularity at the Gayety, with a little company of clever people, who do such good team work that it is a pleasure to witness their performances. Mr. Curtis, in the make-up that nature gave him, as shown on our first page, is an exceptionally good looking and wideawake young man. His ability as a Hebrew dialect comedian is generally acknowledged over the West. He ranks with the best. When Fischer's, before the fire, was in full swing of popularity, Mr. Curtis succeeded Barney Bernard in the Hebrew parts. Since then he has been touring in the West to his own profit and popular approval.

Vaudeville Notes

Washington Square, week Feb. 15 Jarvis and Martin, Australian juggling comiques; Prof. Frank's marionettes; The Bernsteins, singers and dancers; Flood and Hayes, feats of jumping; Frank Foster, comedian and singer; Kate Kelly, illustrated songs.

The Baker troupe, which has been giving a high class bicycle act at the National, recently closed with Ringling Bros.' circus. They have vaudeville dates which will keep them occupied for some time to come.

A bouncing baby boy was born Jan. 25 to the Sandwinas, who have an acrobatic act on the Orpheum circuit. The announcement was received with astonishment by the first nighters who had seen Madame Sandwina at the Orpheum in Sioux City Sunday evening pick up her husband and handle him as though he were as tiny an individual as the little stranger who has come to them. Mrs. Sandwina is said to be one of the most physically perfect women in the world. She is more than six feet in height. They have been in America a little over a year, coming from Berlin.

ADELE BLOCK, who, until a few days ago, was playing the leading role in Henry Savage's company presenting The Devil, was married February 16 to J. Mooney, president of the board of public safety of Toledo. The ceremony was performed in New York in the church of St. John the Evangelist, at noon. Dr. O'Connell of Toledo officiated. Mr. and Mrs. Mooney will spend their honeymoon in the South, after which they will return to Toledo, where they will make their permanent residence.

Correspondence

New York, Feb. 14.—If you think you've any servant troubles of your own, go down to Wallack's Theatre and see what happened to Lady Bantock. Why, bless you, she had twenty-three—fatal number, that—servants, and every one of them a relative. Can you imagine what happened? But this is anticipating a bit. It was the first performance here of The New Lady Bantock, a comedy, by Jerome K. Jerome, and Fannie Ward was the star, acting the title role. It was that of a music hall singer who married an Englishman, who turned out to be Lord Bantock. He took her to his home to surprise her, and he succeeded, for she discovered that her uncle was her husband's butler, and that the other twenty-two servants were all near, very near, relatives. And what happened? Comedy, with a touch of the serious and a neat moment of the sentimental. And when the final curtain descended, the domineering twenty-three decided to remember that they were servants, while Lady Bantock was—well, Lady Bantock. And there's a fine moral hidden in it all. Miss Ward acted with a fine exuberance of spirit, and she made much of her sentimental scene. In addition she wore some fetching gowns and one that was created purposely to heighten the comedy of the play. Charles Cartwright, as the uncle and butler in one, was excellent in his arrogance and his eternally strict sense of duty. And when it came time for him to be seriously comical or comically serious he rose easily and artistically to the occasion. As a theatrical business manager, Robert McWade, Jr., was brusquely to the point, smoking cigars in Bantock Hall quite unmoved by the sacrilegious indignity he was committing. And John W. Dean was an affable and loving Lord Bantock, unaffected in his manner of acting. The other roles were satisfactorily filled. * * * The White Sister, a dramatization of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's book of the same name, was produced in the Stone Street Opera House, Binghamton, for the first time last week, with Viola Allen as the star. The theatre was crowded and there were many curtain calls after each act. Although the company was tired from a long final dress rehearsal, which began before midnight last night and lasted until four o'clock in the afternoon, the drama was given almost without a hitch. The climaxes are strong, and Miss Allen has opportunity for displaying her emotional powers. Frank Gilmore is well adapted to the leading male character, who loves Sister Giovanni, played by Miss Allen. * * * Patrons of the Metropolitan Theatre in the Bronx seemed to like the new romantic comedy, When Old New York Was Dutch, which was given there last week. Al H. Wilson, who has a singing voice of pathos and power, had the principal part, and he sang a budget of new songs, including Helen, The Old Chimney Corner, and a melody entitled Soldiers of the Camp. The play tells of a love story in which the central characters are a young scion of Austrian nobility and the ward of the English Governor of New Amsterdam. * * * Ganton & Company, adapted by J. Hartley Manners from Arthur J. Eddy's story of the same name, was produced in the Academy of Music, Baltimore, last week, with George Fawcett as the star. The play follows the book closely and was well received by a large audience. Both author and dramatist were present. John Ganton is the king of the Chicago packing house district, a character that offers Mr. Fawcett unusual opportunities. There is a lovely story affecting Ganton's son and the daughter of his bitterest business opponent. The conflict between the old capitalistic regime of bribery and rebates, as personified in John Ganton, and the new order of things, represented in the young man who ultimately assumes charge of the Ganton enterprises, makes the play. The recent teamsters' strike in the Chicago packing district was introduced incidentally. This is Mr. Fawcett's first appearance on the stage, since he played in The Snaw Man here and in London. Others in the cast are A. H. Van Buren and Jane Peyton. * * * Henry E. Dixey and his company returned to the Garden Theatre last Monday in Edith Ellis comedy, Mary Jane's Pa. The present engagement at the Garden was interrupted for a week to allow Henry W. Savage to keep a previous Brooklyn contract. The play will now continue at the Garden until it is sent on tour. * * * A large audience at the Hackett Theatre last week welcomed back to the city Clyde Fitch's three-act comedy, Girls. The play already has had a metropolitan run, and it will remain at the Hackett only a week. The principal members of the cast are Florence Reed, Ruth Maycliffe, Amy Ricard, Zella Sears, Phyllis Young, Charles Cherry and Herbert Standing.

Emma Eames made her final appearance of the season at the Metropolitan Opera House last Friday night, singing the title role in Puccini's Tosca. This was perhaps Mme. Eames' last appearance on the operatic stage in this country. She may retire permanently. The career of the prima donna has not been one of unqualified pleasure to Mme. Eames. She has always suffered from great nervousness and been over anxious about her voice. Every appearance has drawn largely on her vocal force. She has sacrificed social pleasure to keeping herself in condition to meet her professional engagements. Her voice was never better than at present, however, and she still retains her personal beauty. As she may decide after a rest to continue her operatic career, this appearance was not a formal farewell, but a large audience assembled to pay tribute to her, and the stage was loaded with flowers that were sent to her. At the close of the second act, when recalled a dozen times, she made a brief speech, saying in part: "This is good-bye. My love I leave with you and I go."

ROB ROY.

Philadelphia, February 7.—Most of the leading theatres have holdover attractions for the present week, only the Garrick, where Olga Nethersole appears in The Handwriting on the Wall; the Broad, with Fritz Scheff in The Prima Donna, and the Adelphi, engaged by the Shillan Players for a series of special matinee performances of their realistic tragic plays, have anything new to offer. It was a novelty to see Olga Nethersole at the Garrick in the role of an American wife and mother, and this novelty extended to the play, which was an American theme by an American playwright, and to the company, which, save for Miss Nethersole, was all-American. The Writing on the Wall is from a new author, William J. Hurlbut, and provides Miss Nethersole with an entirely different from any of the erotic roles she has heretofore essayed. Miss Nethersole played earnestly and received many curtain calls. William Wallace gave a capable portrayal of the role of Irving Lawrence, and Robert T. Haines was dignified and voluble as Lincoln Schuyler. In a new comic opera called The Prima Donna, Fritz Scheff was greeted at the Broad by large audiences, which her popularity invariably assures her, scoring another success in a piece that has been written to fit nicely her personality and to exploit her talent as a singer. The score of The Prima Donna has some of the characteristic Herbert tunefulness, but does not rank with his best compositions. Mark Twain's dramatic story of Missouri village life, Pudd'nhead Wilson, is the week's offering by the Orpheum Stock Company at the Chestnut Street Theatre. The Merry Widow at the Forrest continues upon a highly prosperous career. Clara Palmer appeared this week at the Lyric in the cast of Havana, succeeding Grace Fields. James T. Powers is the star comedian. The Crucifix Carver, a folk play by Ganghofer and Neuert, was produced at the German Theatre for the first time, this week. The stock company at the Standard gave a creditable performance of the world classic Camille. This Woman and This Man began its concluding week at the Adelphi. Carlotta Nilsson has the principal part. Al H. Wilson continued his engagement at the Park in When Old New York Was Dutch. Edward Abels and the well-balanced supporting company that Frederic Thompson has provided for Brewster's Millions continued a successful engagement this week. The Stanford and Western Stock Company have reorganized and will give two one-act plays a week. They will continue their moving pictures, giving 3,000 feet of films and changing every other night, and together with illustrated songs, a good bill will be found at the Empire Theatre. The company will include the old favorites, as Miss Emily Smiley, Earle Western, Virginia Hennings, Paul Taylor and others, and will be under the personal stage direction of Maurice Stanford. The Majestic Moving Picture Parlors offers some very interesting pictures to its patrons this week. Manager Berger has secured the services of Ed Merbrier, Jr., Philadelphia's most favorite baritone singer, and his endeavors have brought excellent results, due to the fact of the crowded houses he has had this week. Mr. Merbrier's voice is of the highly polished type and denotes he has given careful attention to the cultivation of his voice. While his voice is powerful, yet it is sweet and harmonious, and the easiness in which he handles a song and his elocution reflects credit to his excellent ability. Mr. Merbrier, Jr., will be remembered for his clever work as leading man in Arizona and Woman Against Women. He has had a large experience in road shows, vaudeville and stock companies, and together with his singing he is a credit to the theatrical world. Keep it up, Eddie; you will some day reach the top of the ladder. This week he is singing If I Had a Thousand Lives to Live. Helen M. Kelley is the pianist.

Philadelphia to Have a New Stock Company.

Beginning Monday, February 8th, Harry McRae Webster will introduce to Philadelphia theatre patrons the Harry McRae Webster Associate Players, presenting the highest class plays. Philadelphians need no introduction to Mr. Webster, for he is well known here as a stage director of the highest capabilities, and the company which bears his name seems assured of popularity and success. The leading man is Ralph Stewart, who has made a name for himself as a star in romantic roles, and Leah Winslow, an established local favorite, recently with the Orpheum players, will have the leading feminine roles. In the company are Lottie Briscoe, Hugh Cameron, John Flemmings and John Stepling, who were last season connected with the Orpheum Stock Company and with Paul Tharpe, Cordelia MacDonald, Edward Wade, Joseph Bergen and Edith Walls as prominent newcomers. The opening play will be An Enemy to the King, in which E. H. Sothern won a notable success. The piece, which has twenty-seven speaking characters and requires a lot of supernumeraries, will be lavishly mounted. The Webster's Players will make the Park Theatre its home, which has long been run by Nixon & Nirdlinger, producers of the musical comedy which made a hit on the Coast last year, and is on its way to repeat its last year's success, The Gingerbread Man.

New Orleans, Feb. 7.—Tulane Theatre: The Man of the Hour, a play that has created more talk and interest than possibly any of the present times, filled a second engagement to big business. Every one is more or less familiar with this treatise on ring politics and communities in which this condition is dominant give it heartiest support. The presenting company, while a trifle weaker in the leading role, that of the Mayor, was in every other respect entirely satisfactory, especially the work of Louis Hendricks as Harrigan. Felix Haney as Phelan, and Edward Dewey as Alderman Roberts, whose efforts were painstaking and marked with clean-cut individuality. Next week, Fifty Miles from Boston; 14th, Max

Rogers in Panama; 21, Richard Carle, Crescent Theatre: Laughter, good music, a well-balanced company, excellent chorus work and big business were the dominant notes of Murray and Mack's second edition of The Sunny Side of Broadway. Of course, the Irish comedy of the principals was the stellar note. Next week, Buster Brown; Feb. 14, The Boys. W. L. McCONNELL.

Laramie, Wyo., Feb. 15.—Nothing doing at Opera House the past week. The only thing in sight is Florence Roberts for some future date. A. D. K.
Denver, Feb. 15.—For the first time in many years in Denver, patrons of melodrama find themselves without a theatre. Last week melodrama was banished from the city with little prospect of its gaining a foothold here again unless conditions change throughout the country. The managers of the Baker and the Curtis Theatres complain that the writers of "dime novel" drama are so feeble in their abilities that nothing offered warrants the continuation of this form of amusement. On Sunday, Jan. 24, the John Cort combination discontinued melodrama at the Baker, and it has been leased to B. De Vault, who has placed a New York Yiddish stock company there. Mr. De Vault has been trying for a year to get the Baker, as he believes there is a good field for a Yiddish company here. May Buckley, who plays the role of Rosalie in The Right of Way, will soon leave that company. She is under contract for a spring and summer season of stock at Elitch's Garden, Denver, where she is a great favorite. Miss Buckley has played there nearly every season for a number of years.

Salt Lake City, Feb. 16.—Salt Lake Theatre—Girls is the attraction, and drawing good houses. It is a play with a definite but light plot, involving much comedy. A number of girls, wishing no aid from the male sex, band themselves together by a pledge to allow no man to cross their threshold. Of course, one by one they are caught in the net of matrimony and fall by the wayside. At the close of the play all are safely launched on the sea of matrimonial happiness. E. H. Sothern will conclude the week with a series of plays. The bill is Lord Dundreary, Richelieu and Hamlet. Orpheum—Gus Edwards' School Boys and Girls head the Orpheum bill the present week. This year they appear better than ever before. The concluding numbers on the bill are all good. S. R. O.

San Diego.—Garrick (Morosco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—Feb. 10, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch played to S. R. O. and gave universal satisfaction. 14, Babes in Toyland played to very big business. Feb. 15-16, The Red Mill played to two large and fashionable audiences, which showed their appreciation by many encores. This musical comedy can be classed among the best that has visited this current season. It was beautifully staged, the costumes were exquisite, the music is of the catchy, whistling kind, and the chorus is a large one and is composed of pretty and shapely girls who can sing and dance. The work of the two comedians, Walter Willis and Niel McNeil, was all that could be desired and kept the house in a continual roar of laughter whenever they had the stage. A big hit was also scored by the six little Dutch Kiddies, Anna McNab, as the barmaid, was very graceful and charming. In a word, the cast is adequate in every respect. 20-21, The Master Power; 23, Florence Gear in Marrying Mary. Pickwick (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—Week Feb. 15, Culligan's Original Nashville Students. This is a colored minstrel show and gave a fair performance. Good business. Next week, the Armstrong Musical Comedy Company in A Scotch Highball. Queen (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.)—Week Feb. 15, the Sullivan-Considine Road Show—Wm. Tomkins, the topical talker; Kikuda, Japanese juggler; La Moines, novelty musical artists; Joe J. and Myra Dowling, in A Snap Shot; Raymond Merritt, the tramp juggler; latest moving pictures; good show; capacity business. Empire (W. W. Bosley, mgr.)—Week Feb. 15—North Brothers, comedians; Rose Otero, song and dance artist; Emil Rouso, operatic tenor; Edith Edmundson, picture balladist; latest moving pictures; fair show; good business. Gaiety (R. O. Gordon, mgr.)—Week Feb. 15—Ida Wharton, in The Bathing Girl; Norman Brothers, hand balancers; Mildred Manning, the minstrel maid; Senorita Murillo, the great toe dancer; latest moving pictures; poor show and business. Bijou—Week Feb. 15—The Cameraphone and Ida Westfall; good business. Grand and Union offer moving pictures and illustrated songs to good business. CARL E. LUNDQUIST.

Watsonville, Feb. 18.—The Lieutenant and the Cowboy appeared here 17. Hi Henry's Minstrels come 20.

Watsonville, Feb. 17.—Madame Langendorf, mezzo-soprano, in a song recital, under the auspices of Monday Night Musical Club, Saturday, 13th, to good house. The madame possesses a fine voice of great strength. James J. Jeffries and his vaudeville company, to big house, 16. Next to Jeff, the feature was Avil and Gunn, the Hottentot acrobats. The Lieutenant and the Cowboy, tonight, to poor house. Company outside of leads was very mediocre. Hi Henry's Minstrels come 21, and the Farmer's Daughter, 22. La Petite Theatre continues to present moving pictures and vaudeville to capacity. F. J. Burdick.

San Bernardino, Feb. 16.—At the Opera House (Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger): 8, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch was presented by a capable company, and thoroughly enjoyed by a good house. This week will be particularly prolific in first-class productions: 17, The Red Mill; 18, The Mask of Power; 19, Girls; 20, Florence Gear in Marrying Mary. J. E. RICH.

San Jose, Feb. 17.—The Red Mill will be the attraction at the Victory on the 21st. Hi Henry's minstrels opened at the Victory on the 17th and will play four nights, giving a matinee on Saturday. At the Theatre Jose, Manager Bercovich has the following interesting bill: The Kohler Grand Opera Trio; Three De Koch Brothers; Claudia Colonna and company presenting The Evil Genius; Hodges and Launchmere; and Kresko and Fox.

Bedlands.—The Wyatt (H. C. Wyatt, mgr.; E. K. Underwood, business mgr.): 15, the popular Elleford Company opened a week's engagement, in Pals. The business of this estimable company promises to be large. 22, 23, the local Elks will produce Mrs. Temple's Telegram. Among novel features advertising this show was a real wireless telegraph system installed on a principal corner in the business section, over which real messages were received. It attracted much attention. Coming: 26, The Master Power; Mar. 2, The Gingerbread Man; 4, In Gay New York; 10, The Girl and the Stampede; 11, Shore Acres; 13, The Right of Way. W. J. Elleford and wife are expected here during the engagement of the Elleford Company. It is three years since Mr. Elleford was here, and his many friends were glad to see him. H. A. HARGRAVES.

Petaluma, Feb. 17.—Hill Opera House (J. R. Roche, lessee)—On Monday evening, Feb. 8, Sam Langford and company performed at the Hill. The piece, A Trip Through Africa, was presented by a colored company, which was not out of the ordinary. Wednesday and Thursday nights of last week the Central Comedy Company were booked. A Moral Coward was played to poor business Wednesday night and owing to the heavy storm no performance was given Thursday, Feb. 13. A Farmer's Daughter was the attraction; fair business. Friday night, Jas. J. Jeffries. J. R. BOOTHE.

Chico, Feb. 16.—At the Majestic Theatre two good attractions have been billed for this week, being the University of California Glee Club for the 20th and the musical comedy, Stubborn Cinderella, the 23d. The stage at the Gem is being raised about one foot in order to make it more readily seen from all parts of the house, while the room which encloses the picture machine is being made absolutely fireproof by asbestos. O'Brien and Darrah, in a comedy sketch called The Race Horse Tout, are doing their share towards holding the big crowds that attend this popular theatre nightly. Two gentlemen, by the names of Morgan and Stoney, respectively, are remodeling a room in the Nottleman building on Third street, and expect on Saturday night, Feb. 20, to open a moving picture theatre, which will be called the Star. They intend installing only the latest type of apparatus and will conduct the place in a proper manner. C. H. CHACE.

Eugene, Ore.—Eugene is languishing in the theatrical doldrums at present. The Taming of the Shrew, presented by the Charles B. Hanford company, was the only noteworthy zephyr wafted across the footlights for some time. The Shrew literally packed the Eugene Theatre, 15, and scored a triumph. On account of the storm we lost Corinne and various other bookings. Uncle Tom's Cabin breaks the spell on the evening of March 20. OTTO GILSTRAP.

Henry Miller Slams the New York Critics

Henry Miller, who is appearing in The Great Divide in St. Louis, says a dispatch from that city, will produce The Faith Healer for the first time at the Century Theatre, St. Louis. The new play is written by William Vaughn Moody, the first he has written since The Great Divide. After a tedious rehearsal of the work Mr. Miller said: "The cancer critics of New York are the blight of that city as a producing center. By that I mean Alan Daleism, the ephemeral, flippant, scoffing group that ridicules the serious because there is no fun to be made out of a thing that is already funny. I wish to be clearly understood in this matter. I do not condemn intellectuality. I do not denounce the serious-minded critic, men like Towes, Klauber and De Foe. But I do damn the blight of the scoffers, the influence of the decadent movement inaugurated originally by Alan Dale. These men are defiling the altars of art. They have worn the greasy cap of self-conceit till their minds are mildewed."

Hayden Talbot Writes a New Play and Estab- lishes a New Record

The Cashier, a comedy drama in three acts, laid in a northern Arizona town, and with an ex-cowpuncher elevated to a bank position as the leading character, is to be produced for the first time on any stage Monday, March 1, at the Belasco Theatre, Los Angeles, with Lewis S. Stone in the title role. John Blackwood is negotiating with Henry B. Harris to star Robert Edson in the piece in the fall, and Dustin Farnum is also considering grabbing it if the try-out looks good. This play was written by Hayden Talbot, who established a speed record in writing it, if nothing more.

Sembrich's Last Mimi

La Boheme was sung at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, one night last week. The particular significance of the occasion was that Mme. Sembrich made her final appearance as Mimi. The audience manifested no small appreciation of this important incident in the operatic season. The Monday night subscribers were out in full force and all the house not their property was occupied. After the first act Mme. Sembrich was called before the curtain, together with Mr. Bonci, not less than half a dozen times and applauded most warmly, despite the fact that the most effective and popular music of the act belongs not to Mimi but to Rodolfo. After the third act and at the close of the opera there were again scenes of enthusiasm. Such a demonstration of public affection for an artist who is closing her career has its sorrowful side, especially when the artist is an exponent of the art of pure singing, now swiftly fading away from the operatic stage. Mme. Sembrich belongs to a school which has almost no pupils in Europe, and only a few here. It was therefore poignantly touching last night to hear the exquisite finish of her style and the profoundly musical insight of her phrasing and nuance. She was in good voice and was able to give the audience what is now her best. She had excellent and indeed affectionate assistance from Mr. Bonci, who never sang Rodolfo with more beauty than he did last night, when he seemed to be striving to do all honor to the parting guest. Mr. Amato was a capable Marcello and Mr. Didur appeared to advantage as Schaunard.

Isabel Irving Returns to Charles Frohman

Miss Isabel Irving has returned to Charles Frohman's management, after an absence of some years, and will appear under Mr. Frohman's direction in both comedies and serious roles in England and in America. Miss Irving's first part will be the leading role in the American production of The Flag Lieutenant, which Mr. Frohman will stage in September. The Flag Lieutenant, written by Major W. P. Drury and Leo Trevor, is now being acted in London by Cyril Maude. In the spring Mr. Frohman will present Miss Irving at The Duke of York's Theatre, London, to create the role of an American widow in a play now being written by W. Somerset Maugham.

Dick Tully Has Another Play Almost Ready

Richard Walton Tully is writing a new Southwestern play, Cupid, the Cowpunch, based on a story written by his wife, Elinor Gates. The play at its completion will be tried out by the Burbank Stock Company of Los Angeles, and will then go to New York. Its author admits its metropolitan destination, but will not say who is to produce it. Mr. Tully's first play of importance, Juanita of San Juan, was originally presented in San Francisco, and then, under the head of David Belasco, was transformed into The Rose of the Rancho.

JAMES G. MORTON is recovering from a serious operation in a Tacoma hospital.

ROBERT MORRIS and wife (Elsie Esmond) are at present visiting in New York and will soon arrive in Los Angeles. During the past season Mr. Morris was director and part owner in the Neill stock company, playing Baltimore and Winnipeg.

GUS PIXLEY, the brother of Annie Pixley, and well known in this city, which he claims as his birthplace, will play his original part in The Babes in Toyland when that extravaganza comes to the American Theatre.

Eagles Will Have Theatre in Tucson

The Aerie of Eagles of Tucson are contemplating the erection of a handsome home and theatre on North Stone avenue next to the site occupied by the postoffice. The building will probably occupy a plot of ground 100 by 175 feet and will be so constructed as to seat 1,500 people. This will be one of the most beautiful playhouses in the whole Southwest, and the upper floors will be used for lodge purposes and club rooms for the members, while offices will probably be built on the second floor. The building is to cost approximately $75,000, and the greater part of this amount is said to be already subscribed or promised. While the exact details are not yet made public, the Eagles are known to have an option on the plot of ground in question and for some time the plan of erecting a playhouse as well as a club has been urged by prominent members of the order in this city, and it is believed that there will be little if any opposition to this plan.

GEORGE BROADHURST is in Los Angeles and will probably remain in and around that city until spring. He intends to do some writing there. His new play, The Dollar-Mark, will be produced by the Belasco Company within a month.

Van Ness Theatre

The second and last week of A Stubborn Cinderella will be concluded with tonight's performance. This show is pleasing and admirable in costuming and settings. A clever cast of principals is presenting the piece and the chorus is admirably trained. Following, next week, will come The Red Mill, another musical piece of fun and frolic.

Valencia Theatre

Having succeeded so admirably with George Ade's The College Widow, the stock company is now offering another Ade play, The County Chairman. A very good performance, too, is being presented, and the quaint characterizations that came from the pen of the Hoosier playwright and humorist are well taken care of. But where The College Widow was so full of youthful enthusiasm and a delightful love interest, The County Chairman is rather shy on these two theatrical essentials. Robert Homans is entrusted with the part of Jim Hacker, the country politician. He gives the part a careful, actor-like presentation, emphasizing the chief characteristics of this shrewd and dominating character. Mace Greenleaf gets all that is possible out of the role of Tilford Wheeler. The part offers no chance for a leading man. Charles Dow Clarke is very funny as Sassafrass, the negro sponger—but he is not the nigger, he is simply Charley Clarke, taking every advantage of the playwright's lines. Splendid characterizations of small parts are furnished by Thomas McLarnie, William Wolbert, George Baldwin and Reginald Travers. Gerald Harcourt, as the irrepressible windmill salesman, is good, and Beatrice Nichols, who plays the village milliner, with an extensive acquaintance with "traveling gentlemen," does a most commendable piece of acting. Blanche Stoddard lent beauty and grace to Lucy Rigby and Lillian Andrews furnished the necessary spirit as the boardinghouse keeper. Peggy Monroe gave one of the most pleasing portrayals of the performance as Chick, the orphan. Her laugh and winsomeness were particularly rememberable. Herman Heller's orchestra music continues to be a feature of the theatre. Next week—Secret Service.

American Theatre

After an absence of six years, Harry Beresford, one of the most gifted of our comedians, has returned to the scene of a great former triumph. Keen anticipations were aroused over the coming of this artist, whose work and whose personality are tremendously enjoyable. Mr. Beresford is both a harbinger of smiles and a provoker of that feeling of sympathy that causes the flexible lump to rise in the throat. He is a comedian of the rare and best kind—the one who compels the laugh that is near to tears. As in the past, Mr. Beresford's triumph is purely a personal one, for he rises above the drawbacks of a play that just misses fire and a company but indifferently selected. Three-quarters of the first act is without a spark of interest and then, as quick as a wink, and about as unexpectedly, the interest begins and the comedian's efforts keep it up to a high point through the balance of the play. Jane Ferrell, who plays Fay, a drummer of the most advanced type, is a handsome, attractive young woman, and a good actress. Margaret Lee, the character woman, too, is well up in her line of work. H. H. Sleight gives a strong portrayal of a conventional, old skin-flint. The theme of the play is certainly a novel one and the company furnishes an enjoyable evening, but the ability of the star is so obvious that one in reviewing any vehicle in which he appears is apt to be rather exacting. There is no comedian on our stage today with quite the charm of personality possessed by Mr. Beresford, and his ability makes us rather eager to see him in a play commensurate with that ability.

Princess Theatre

The popularity of the Princess offering shows no abatement, and crowded houses continue to rule. Notwithstanding the many times Lonesome Town has been played here, it seems to possess all the interest and charm of a new bill. The gorgeous settings of the piece are certainly a feature and the work of Kolb and Dill, Sydney de Gray, Carlton Chase, Percy Bronson, George Wright and Adele Rafter is marked by a high degree of ability and genuine comedy talent. The piece is a succession of novel ideas, well developed, and the comedy is spontaneous. Next week will see the last of Lonesome Town and then Kolb and Dill will close their engagement with a week of Playing the Ponies.

Alcazar Theatre

A wise forethought prompted the revival of The Rose of the Rancho, for this beautiful play of early California life is duplicating in every way the tremendous success that attended its first presentation in this city last season. The same cast that made the performance notable is still in evidence and there is nothing to qualify the delightful performance given by Bessie Barriscale in the character of Juanita, the daughter of a Spanish mother and a Gringo father. She embodies the lightness, the unsophistication of the Spanish maiden with the strain of stubbornness and strong feeling inherited from her white father. Altogether she was daintily attractive and a real, living vivid picture of the part she portrayed. Bertram Lytell, as Kearny, the United States land agent, was a manly lover. Bert Wesner, as the Padre; Will Walling, as Kincaid, the land jumper; Herbert Farjeon, as the crazy muleteer; Ernest Glendenning, as the militia lieutenant; Howard Hickman, as Don Luis, who was principally interested in "tomorrow," repeated in full measure their former successes in these parts. The scenic equipment was more gorgeous, if possible, than before, and Edward Lada had his orchestra well in hand and the incidental music tended greatly to give tone to the performance. An event of the Monday night performance was the presence of the author, David Belasco in a box, and this acknowledged greatest stage director on the American stage and the best judge of actors we have, was enthusiastic and generous in his approval.

EMIL KRUSCHKE, who was a Berkeley College playwright and fun maker, is showing decided talent with the Ferris Hartman Company in Los Angeles.

David Belasco Here for a Two Weeks' Visit to Relatives

The chief item of theatrical importance the past week has been the return home of David Belasco after a twelve years' absence and the theatrical conquest of New York. The chief interest in his visit here is the desire to visit his father, who is 71 years old and consequently frail from the weight of years. Old friends and new admirers have made it very evident their desire to show honor to their brilliant townsman, but Mr. Belasco has resisted all efforts to drag him into the whirl of social intercourse. He is indulging in a good rest—the first in twelve years. Mr. Belasco in the many interviews that he has been subjected to, has treated on many subjects and he brings forth with great vividness a clever new thought or a worthy old one with every sentence. Speaking of his efforts of production in New York, he cited the case of The Rose of the Rancho:

"When I produced The Rose of the Rancho, there wasn't a scenic artist in New York who had ever looked at a California poppy. Think of a California landscape without a poppy in it—and I could not find a picture of one anywhere in the world, so I shut my eyes—and remembered. There was a little green velvet hill down at San Mateo, where I went to school for awhile, and in the spring, when the rains had gone, all at once that hill—yes—I saw them—the poppies. And I made the painter see them, too—and the eucalyptus, like ragged beggars dancing a fantastic dance on the sides of the hills; and the laurel trees, with the little glistening leaves, and the liveoaks and the California roses, yellow, with crimson hearts—I could see them all when I shut my eyes, even in a New York theatre, with Broadway roaring all around me. They are always asking me everywhere what it is that makes Californians such successes in the theatrical world. It's simple enough. It's the air, the sky, the water, the fruit, the flowers, the temperament—it's California. Who could be born here and not get some of the inheritance? They are setting us to music, you know. Puccini is now writing the music for The Girl of the Golden West; he's going to bring it out at the Grand Opera House in Milan. A beautiful thing, a poem in music; the motive of the last act, the good-bye to California; you should hear it. You can smell the mimosa on the Sausalito hills and see the green velvet valley of San Mateo when you hear it. New York is the place to succeed. California is the place to live. The whole of California is just one big 'production.' " Mr. Belasco's newest ambition is for a series of Belasco Shakespearean productions, with David Warfield playing the Merchant of Venice and Blanche Bates in As You Like It. Simplicity and the ancient atmosphere is to be his guiding principle, and not much money spent on the staging, but rather on the cast. Regarding the recent condemnatory utterances of the new Eugene Walter play, The Easiest Way, Mr. Belasco stoutly maintains that the piece is not immoral—but a mighty factor in the lesson of morality. The stage as a medium of pointing a moral is so far superior to many pulpits that it is only natural to expect opposition from a class of impotent and unsuccessful preachers.

Personals

EDMOND ROSTAND, the playwright, has selected M. Lebargey of the Comedie Francaise, Paris, to replace Benoit Constant Coquelin, who died last month, in the leading role of Rostand's new play, Chanticleer, at a salary of $30,000 a year.

OWING to an attack of threatened nervous prostration, Blanche Stoddard was forced to give up her study of Edith Varney in Secret Service, underlined for next week, and Justina Wayne was called upon to take the part, in which she will open Monday.

ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM, the star of the Shaun Rhue company, which is now in Oregon, had an unpleasant experience at Chico. It appears that Cunningham registered at one hotel and the rest of the company at another. Through some misunderstanding Cunningham failed to awaken in time to catch the northbound train, and was left in Chico while the other members of the company were speeding over the rails for Ashland, Ore. Owing to the prevailing railroad conditions it was impossible for Cunningham to leave Chico and be able to arrive at Ashland for the evening performance. The company missed both the Ashland and Eugene dates.

THE will of the late Charles L. Ackerman was filed for probate with the County Clerk last week, together with a petition for its probate by his son, Irving C. Ackerman, one of the executors. The entire estate is declared to be community property and the bulk of it is left to Mrs. Carrie Ackerman, the widow. A life insurance policy is bequeathed to Sarah Greenbaum, a sister; the library, jewelry and wearing apparel to the son, Irving, for whom the testator says he has already made ample provision, and a Concordia bond to Henry Ackerman, a brother. The will is holographic and is dated October 19, 1907. Ackerman died January 25th at the age of 58. The value of the estate is unknown, but it consists largely of Western Union and other securities, and is stated in the petition to exceed $10,000. It will approach one million dollars in value.

IN recognition of his efforts to bring into serious favor the classic drama within the means of the ordinary citizen, the Bohemian Club is going to give a banquet to Richard M. Hotaling, who is at present engaged in giving performances in Ye Liberty Theatre, Oakland. The attitude of the club is expressed by Dr. J. Wilson Shiels, president of that organization, who in an interview declared that Hotaling had done more than any member fully to carry out the aims and ideals of the Bohemian Club. Dr. Shiels said that Hotaling's efforts were worthy of all commendation, and that he was carrying out in practice the spirit of the constitution of the club. The exact date of the banquet has not been settled, but will be arranged for a night immediately succeeding the close of Hotaling's performances in Oakland.

The Orpheum

In a good, strong bill this week, the dramatic episode, At the Sound of the Gong, comes perilously near to winning first honors. This little playlet is full of vim and ginger. The interest starts with the first line and never lags. The story is entirely new and novel to the stage and holds the audience breathless until Kid Kennedy is knocked out by the hero, Walter Jameson—then the expected happy ending occurs. Tom Wilson, as the hero; Arthur Sullivan, as the trainer; and Elsie Berrold, as the hero's sweetheart, are to be highly commended for exceptionally clever work. The Zangwill play, held over from last week—The Never, Never Land—is wierd and dramatic and is so excellently acted that it has gained great favor. The Amoros Sisters, in a Parisian act, do very good work in a combination of juggling, trapeze and Arabian tumbling feats. Imro Fox in his acts of magic is very clever. He combines with his comedy a magic creation entirely his own. Tony Wilson and Mlle. Heloise do a clever turn in the horizontal bars and bounding mat. It is new and novel and pleases greatly. Frank and Adele Artoise, two clever juveniles, sing and dance entertainingly. This is the last week of the Farrell-Taylor company and Rogee, the human orchestra. New moving pictures conclude a long and very fine program.

The National

The bill at the National is exceptionally good and has been playing to big houses throughout the week. The Baker troupe, consisting of six trick bicyclists, are hard to beat, and the Chas. Oro company probably carry off the greatest laurels. Oro and his company present the Chinese Novelty Four, showing a Chinese opium den and a lightning transformation scene when raided by the police. The two Theodors do some clever feats of strength and acrobatic work. Dave Morris and his monologue has been well received. Henry and Alice Carver do some wonderful sharpshooting and equilibrist work. Cotter and Boulder, billed as the big Eastern hits, make good with some catchy songs and clever dancing. Watson and Little present a laughable sketch, called Matrimonial Bargains. Joe Valley, the king of the accordion, and motion pictures complete the bill.

The Wigwam

Out in the Mission district, Manager Harris has been giving the patrons of the Wigwam a highly interesting and amusing bill. Buster Brown and his famous dog, Tige, with Master George Phelps in the title role, are the headliners. The Carson Bros. do some wonderful feats of strength. Emily Benner, with her rich baritone receives a generous share of applause. The Petching Bros. present a Musical Flower Garden, and succeed in getting music out of everything imaginable, including a pear tree. Burton and Brooks present a breezy comedy novelty entitled The Limit. Phil Staats entertains at the piano, including pieces of his own composition. The Florenz troupe offer a good acrobatic turn. Moving pictures complete the program. Next week will be the first of Kresko and Fox, billed the Prattling Pals; Halliday and Curley in a travesty of a war drama called the Battle of Too Soon; Rentfrow and Jansen will produce a comedy act; O. W. Williams, the ventriloquist; Margaret Severance company, presenting the sketch, Nowadays; Earl Girdeller and company, with the new Eastern dog act; Caron and Herbert, acrobats; and Connelly, Wenrich and Connelly in a melange of mirth and melody.

The Gayety

The Allen Curtis Company, presenting the musical farce, Jakey, Mikey and Ikey, is the main attraction at this house this week. The play is on the Kolb and Dill style. Two German comedians with their Hebrew companion get into all kinds of scrapes at a summer resort. Allen Curtis, who is one of the best Hebrew dialect comedians on the stage, as Ikey Rosinski, and Arthur Clamage and Lou Dunbar, as the two Germans, furnish the best part of the fun. Jean Hathaway, assisted by a chorus of a dozen pretty and well drilled maidens, scores a hit with a number of songs. The remainder of the programme is made of the regular vaudeville show. The Roma Quartette, billed as the sweetest singers in vaudeville, easily win applause with their operatic selections. Henry L. Auerbach, assisted by Ethlydene Roberts and Francis Martin, present a laughable playlet entitled The Lost Bracelet. Albert Leonard does some clever dancing. Moving pictures complete the bill. Next week the Allen Curtis Company will be seen in The Jolly Widow.

Pantages-Empire

Barnold's Dog and Monkey Actors, presenting their one-act comedy pantomime, A Hot Time in Dogville, merit their popularity. The Juggling Thorns do some high-class juggling; Knox Brothers and Helene, billed minglers of mirth and melody, are clever; Irving Jones, the well-known song and dance comedian, is entertaining; motion pictures complete a good show.

A. O. Newton and wife of Los Angeles formerly of Seattle have purchased the La Petite Theatre in Ventura and will take charge of the little playhouse at once. The new proprietors are old time show people and have had valuable experience in this particular line. They propose many improvements in the La Petite, among them a new moving picture machine and a new and attractive front.

W. W. Wilson, of a traveling vaudeville company, was married in Monrovia, in Southern California, last Sunday, to Miss Ethel Jones of Los Angeles.

Vaudeville Notes

Dave Morris, the principal comedian with Hearts and Flowers, which disbanded recently in Seattle, is playing dates on the Coast and doing very well. He has been at the National this week and is booked for Oakland next.

Charlie Oro and his company, presenting an amusing Chinese sketch, will play in Vallejo next week. His company is also booked for Sacramento and later at the Wigwam. Oro is well known in vaudeville on the Coast, and makes a hit as the proprietor of an opium den. Oro played the same sketch before the fire, but lost all his scenery and has just recently returned to the Chinese sketch.

Owing to a hitch between Mrs. Holden Allen Evans, former wife of Naval Constructor Evans, and the management of the Sullivan-Considine booking circuit, it is likely that the appearance of the erstwhile London actress at the National Theatre will be postponed for a short time. Mrs. Evans was scheduled to appear for the first time behind the footlights in this city last Monday, but though an expectant crowd attended to see her she made no appearance.

Helen Goff, whom Mmes. Gadski and Langendorff have approved vocally, has just obtained an engagement with the Orpheum circuit. She is a Los Angeles girl.

In the Days of Old, the Days of Gold, the Days of '49

The old timers of California who yet remain will recall Charley Rhodes, the pioneer and popular minstrel, and his famous song, The Days of Old, the Days of Gold, and the Days of '49. Charles Bensei was his real name, and he was a native of New York, but drifted to California with the Argonauts of 1849. Like many another taking production, the catchy lines and air of that then popular song have survived in tradition, while the minstrel is forgotten save but by a few, and he lies in an unnoticed grave in the Sacramento City cemetery. He was the pioneer minstrel of California, and was as erratic as were the times and surroundings in which he lived. But he deserves more than passing recognition of his peculiar abilities. Some of the old timers speak of his song of the Auburn jail, and it comes down to us that he composed it while an inmate of that foothill bastille—not, however, for any serious infraction of the laws or one that would tend to his disgrace. His beginning as a minstrel was in the old theatre in Sacramento and his fame rested mainly on the song, The Days of '49. Its melody infected the cities and the mining camps; its sentiment compassed the continent and in the East, even in this late day, the air is associated with a something that was, in the mining era, the State song of California. Bensei died at Santa Clara, June 5, 1877, at the age of 44, and the Sacramento Union of the 9th contained this brief mention of him:

We have for some time endeavored to accurately reproduce the words of The Days of '49. So far as we know they were not originally published. From the memories of a number of the old timers whom we have interviewed and a careful comparison of their version, we find the following to be conceded as the correct lines, and we are satisfied that they are, as nearly as they can be reproduced at this late day:

Here you see: old Tom More, a relic of former days;
A bummer, too, they call me now, but what care I for praise,
For my heart is filled with the days of old, and oft do I repine
For the days of old, and the days of gold, and the days of '49.

I had comrades then who loved me well, a jovial, saucy crew;
There were some hard cases, I must confess, but still they were tried and true;
They would never flinch whatever the pinch, would ne'er fret nor whine,
But like good old bricks would stand the kicks, in the days of '49.

There was Kentuck Bill, I knew him well, a fellow so full of tricks;
At a poker game he was always there, and heavy, too, as bricks;
He would play your draw, would ante a slug, or go a hateful blind;
But in a game of death, Bill lost his breath, in the days of '49.

There was Racensac Ike, he could outroar a Buffalo Bill, you bet;
He could roar all day, and roar all night; I believe he's roaring yet.
One night he fell into a prospect hole, it was a roaring bad design,
For in that hole he roared out his soul, in the days of '49.

There was a New York Jake, a butcher boy, so fond of getting tight,
And whenever Jake was on a spree he was spoiling for a fight.
One night he ran agin a knife in the hands of old Bob Kline,
And over Jake we held a wake, in the days of '49.

There was Monte Pete, I'll never forget, for the luck he always had;
He'd play you both night and day, as long as you had a scad.
One night a pistol shot laid him out, 'twas his last lay out, in fine;
It caught Pete sure, right in the door, in the days of '49.

There was old lame Jess, that mean old cuss, who never would repent;
He never missed a single meal and never paid a cent;
But poor old Jess, like all the rest, to death did at last resign;
For in his bloom he went up the flume, in the days of '49.

Of all the comrades I had then, not one remains to toast;
They've left me here in my misery, like some poor wandering ghost;
And as I go from place to place, folks call me a traveling sign, Saying, "There's old Tom More, a bummer sure, from the days of '49."

Sanger On the Prairie, Called After Sanger On the Jordan, Play Agents in New York

Feb. 16, 1909—En Tour My Dear Farrell: Allow me to exclaim hurroo! Sunshine at last. I thought sunshine had gone forever, but like the cat it came back. Again hurroo!!! We are in a country principally occupied by dagoes and mangoes, and a few white Americans who are principally policemen, grafters or lookers-on. Irishmen are as scarce here as silver tombstones in Death Valley or a Jew hodecarrier driving a plow. Yet still they come to see our grand old Irish plays represented by a company pronounced by the entire press and public as the very best that have ever toured through these almost unmapped townlets. And they come, the people, come and pay and go away rejoicing, crying, "Come again." Hence hurroo! I say. Today we are nestling in a valley with the sun pouring down his smiles on the well-washed features of the earth. What a contrast to what we've seen for weeks. In my time I've seen cloudbursts, main-water-pipe bursts, I've remotely noted several whisky-bursts, but just at present there is a glorious sunburst and the earth is intoxicated with joy. Everything is sprouting around here. This morning I saw some rats sprouting round the foundations of a butcher shop—and this is the time of the year that cows give the lie to race suicide. Calves are sprouting around everywhere. 'Tis good to see something young frolicking about, for even kids are getting scarce in America I hear, though it's surely not the billy goat's fault. But the sun is bringing out things that for many weeks were swamped by his august majesty, Jupiter Pluvius. Business is sprouting also all along the line, and the poor nomad companies who were playing to flapjacks and coffee get now meals of a rectangular shape—yelept "square." Also there are few of them that have weathered the storms. It was a case of the survival of the quickest, or fittest. Ergo, we survive! Hemi! Many companies have folded their tents and quietly stolen away, while the fur-faced landlord mourned the departure of his whilom guests without the usual "paid with thanks" on their bills. But we, the chosen, are still on deck and sailing with a fair wind and a smiling crew, who crow over the fact that business now is O. K. all along the line. Two new members have joined our circle of fame to prevent the horror of doubling in the cast. One is Ivan Christie—and the other isn't. His name is O'Hone—an Esquimaux foundling from the Rock of Cashel, nigh Tipperary. We are all enjoying the freedom so necessary to pleasant bohemianism. We are unburdened by the long rehearsals extant in San Francisco. We have a roving commission and disposition to go when and where we will—and we are the delight of the people who surround and patronize us. So why sigh for the field of the cloth of gold, when we can diurnally obtain a glimpse of the place where the field of the cloak of golden grain will shortly undulate on the throbbing bosom of our universal mater? I again invite you to come where the sunbeams linger, come on the slow S. P. Come, come, come, come, where all nature seems out on a spree. Being in a poetical vein this sunblessed morning, allow me to bring forth the following end gag done into doggerel—it goes to the tune of the grave-digger—yelept The Old Sexton:

Nigh to an egg that was newly laid Stood a rooster old, and thus he said,
"Which came first in my pedigree,
The hen or the egg or the chicken or me?"
Just then along came a coon with a grin, Saying, "I cum fust, an' I'll gather you in;
And that big black coon he gathered him in.
Yours in sunshine,

of the extremely cold and wet weather, but with the advent of fine weather the amusement season will again be on. F. Lawrence Walker, manager for Charles B. Hanford, was here this week. This was Mr. Walker's third visit to Astoria and he is always welcome, for it is a guarantee that something first class is to follow. This year a double bill will be the offering, viz., The Taming of the Shrew and The Old Guard as a curtain raiser. Last year Mr. Hanford gave us Antony and Cleopatra and the year before Julius Caesar, both real theatrical events. The date of this year's engagement is Wednesday, February 17. Following in rapid succession are the following attractions: Feb. 21, Arthur Cunningham in Kerry Gow; March 1, Uncle Tom's Cabin (the old standby); March 5, The Burgomaster; March 7, Paul Gilmore in Boys of Company B; March 11, Harry Beresford in Who's Your Friend? March 14; Daniel Sully in The Peacemaker, and later on Norman Hackett, Lillian Russell and John Drew. How is this for a bunch of good attractions? SELIG.

Tacoma, Wash., Feb. 13.—Tacoma enjoyed a brief season of grand opera when the Lombardi Italian opera company appeared here the 4th inst. The bills rendered were Lucia, Il Trovatore, Cavalleria Rusticana, I Pagliacci and La Boheme, the last two coming in for the most praise. Ester Ferrabini appeared as Mimi in La Boheme and more than sustained the good impression she made when here with Leoncavallo two seasons ago. Grazioni was also a favorite in this opera. Antola won all the honors in I Pagliacci and Cavalleria. Great disappointment was felt because Dolores Frau was unable to appear in Il Trovatore on account of illness. Elvira Compoli, Scolarini and Pimazzoni pleased greatly in this opera, and in Lucia, Zayaski and Battani appeared in the principal roles. Manceri, who appeared in several of the operas, displayed a fine bass voice. The orchestra, under the direction of Leaders Jacchia and Lebagatta, received much favorable comment. Feb. 7-8, Brewster's Millions repeated its success of last season. Robert Ober, John Alden and June Mathis still remain with the company and the cast is up to the standard. The comedy was capitally played and is one that is always enjoyable. Feb. 11-13, Ben Hur played to record business for four performances. A grand play and one that appeals to all classes. The play is given an elaborate mounting and the scenic effects a triumph of realism. Anthony Andre as Simonides carries off the honors as far as acting and delivery are concerned. Conway Tearle is excellent as Ben Hur and Mitchell Harris a dashing Messala. Alice Haynes, Loyola O'Connor and the Misses Appleton and Stover are satisfactory in every way. Feb. 14, Corinne in Lola from Berlin; Feb. 20, Daniel Sully, in The Matchmaker; 21-22, The Wolf. The Life of an Actress was the last offering at the Savoy Theatre by the stock company, and the house closed the 6th inst. Manager Harry McRae of the Star Theatre having taken over the lease. He has not as yet announced his plans concerning the future of this pretty but hooded house, and it will be closed for the present. Mistress Nell was the bill at the Star Theatre the first week in February, the title role being taken by Miss Oswald in a manner altogether charming. She wore some gorgeous gowns, besides made a fetching Irish lad in her masquerade. Her little dance was a surprise and a delight. The part of the King, though small, was played by Mr. Holluber with the same conscientious care that marks all his work. Robert Lawrence as the old fiddler was in one of the best character parts he has given us. John McCabe as the actor-manager, J. Brigham Percival as the Duke of Buckingham, Ed Lawrence as the King's constable and Miss Van Tassel as the Duchess of Portsmouth were the best among the large cast used in the play. The stage settings were triumphs of realism and beauty. The farce-comedy, Because She Loved Him So, was a hit with the patrons of the Star this week. Miss Oswald was out of the bill, taking a much-needed rest, and the role of the exacting and suspicious wife was taken by Virginia Thornton in a satisfactory manner. Mr. Holluber as the artist husband was natural and clever. Robert Lawrence and Marie Van Tassel as the peaceful, loving old couple were all that could be desired, and Laura Winston, who has just joined the company, made a captivating Spanish senora. Miss Robeson in one of her best characterizations, that of a faithful Irish maid, much like her role in The Three of Us, was comical in the extreme and likable all the time. Denton Vane, John McCabe, Brigham Percival and Ed Lawrence and Bertha Cordray, the two servants who started the trouble going, were all excellent in their parts. The bill beginning Feb. 14 will be Leah Kleschna, to be followed by The Girl I Left Behind Me, and which will be given for the benefit of the Red Men, which is a strong secret order here. Last week the Pantages offered another interesting bill, chief of which was the Piccolo Midgets, four clever little entertainers on the Tom Thumb order. The Verdi Musical Trio offered a high-class musical act, and the Irish comedians, Earl and Bartlett, were laugh-producers. Uncle David, a rural play given by Walter H. Bedell and company, was well acted. Some good dancing by Manning and Ford and the illustrated song by Bert Vincent were well received. This week the Golden Gate Quintet of colored people are playing a return engagement; they are great favorites in Tacoma. Although singing in French, the Three Diamonds were thoroughly comprehended in their excellent musical offerings, the violinist perhaps being the most pleasing. Thomas J. Keough and company in The Ward Heeler were much applauded in their little political comedy, and Goff Phillips, monologist, sang some amusing parodies. Feb. 15, Melbourne McDowell and Virginia Drew Trescott; Alsace and Oraines, and the Rich One, in musical acts; Benton Trio, Roman ring artists; Clarence Olive, monologist; the Two Johnsons, colored comedians and singers. Nothing in the trained animal line has been more interesting than Lukens Seven Lions at the Grand. The Kirsten-Marietta Troupe of equilibrists are among the best ever seen here. Deaves Manikins, which have always been entertaining, are amusing this season in a laughable Uncle Tom's Cabin burlesque. This week Ralph Johnston is the big drawing card in vaudeville. His bicycle jumping exceeds anything ever seen here. The Country Choli sang some popular music in an excellent manner. Chevalo and Capretta please with their exhibition of magic. Leffingwell and Bruce offered a sprightly little farce and Franklyn Odell and company deserve a better vehicle than their present sketch. Gladys Van cancelled her engagement here on account of illness. Beginning Feb. 15, Howard Truesdell and company; Carroll and Cook; Callano and Smith, dancers; Frank Mayne and company; George F. Keane in illustrated songs. A. H.

Personals

JAMES MADONNY, playing Old Nick with Harry Beresford at the American Theatre, was succeeded in the part on Wednesday night by George Kenneth, who is a very good and reliable actor. Mr. Kenneth was with Mr. Beresford several years ago, and had not seen him since until called upon to meet an emergency.

SAM C. HOLLER, a well-known showman, long identified with circuses and spectacular affairs, is in town ahead of Fighting the Flames, the big fire spectacle that has been the sensation of New York for the past three seasons. The show will be given at Market, Van Ness and Eleventh streets. Jimmy De Wolff will follow shortly as business manager, and Jim Holton will come also to do the press work.

RAYMOND HITCHCOCK Friday of last week filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the United States District Court of New York. He gives his liabilities as $28,294, and assets $16 in bank. Hitchcock owes the Johnson Service Company of Milwaukee, Wis., $4,000 as a judgment on a note given for an automobile, which was returned as unsatisfactory; Herman Fromme of Cranford, N. J., $6,600 on notes given for legal services; Thomas Mott Osborne of Auburn, N. Y., $10,900, money loaned; Dr. Max Lautermann, Montreal, Canada, $1,500 for attendance at the trial of the People vs. Hitchcock; Carl Fischer-Hansen, $8,000 on a note given for legal services; Flora Zabelle Hitchcock, 241 West Forty-second street, $2,000 for money loaned, and the Johnson Service Company of Milwaukee, $294 for automobile parts and storage.

A BOSTON TERRIER, acting as a fire alarm, saved the lives of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Blackwood of Ocean View avenue on the night of Feb. 16. Mr. Blackwood has a terrier, named Amelia Gardner, after the former leading woman of the Belasco Theatre in Los Angeles. The household went to bed, leaving an oil stove burning in the upper hall. About 3 o'clock in the morning Mr. Blackwood was aroused by the barking of Amelia Gardner. He threw a shoe at her and finally arose, determined to cast Amelia out into the cold world. But he found the oil stove had exploded and had set fire to some window hangings, and the household were in danger of cremation. To the rhythm of Amelia's barks, Mr. Blackwood picked up a $1,000 Oriental rug and beat out the flames and then took Amelia into the dining room and gave her a supper of caviar sandwiches and chicken salad.

Valencia Theatre

The last performances of George Ade's intensely amusing and interesting rural drama, The County Chairman, will be given this Sunday afternoon and evening, and at the special Washington's Birthday matinee Monday William Gillette's best of all war plays, Secret Service, will be produced on an elaborate scale. The members of the Valencia Stock Company should give excellent accounts of themselves in Secret Service, as a majority of them have made individual hits in the play. Mace Greenleaf counts Captain Thorne as one of his best characters, and Blanche Stoddard has played Edith Varney, his Southern sweetheart, with great success. Robert Homans will have the heavy part of Benton Arrelsford, and Gerald Harcourt, who is becoming a well-deserved favorite, will have a congenial role in Wilfred Varney. Charles Dow Clark will play a colored man. Thomas MacLarnie will display his versatility as Henry Dumont and Reginald Travers. George B. Baldwin, Jr., Thomas Lowell, William Wolbert, John Carson, Arling Alcine and Lee Millar will portray the remaining male characters. Grace Travers, Mrs. General Varney, and Lillian Andrews, Beatrice Nichols and Anna McNaughton will complete the cast. The Fatal Card, the powerful melodrama by G. Haddon Chambers and B. C. Stevens, will follow Secret Service at the Valencia.

Alcazar Theatre

There is no diversity of opinion as to the merits of The Rose of the Rancho, which is announced for a second week, commencing Monday, at the Alcazar. The drama itself, the pictorial embellishments, the music, the dances and the wonderfully clever acting of the people in the cast—all contribute to its remarkable success. Not since the David Warfield engagement has the Alcazar box-office been so steadily besieged by ticket buyers as during the last two weeks, and it would not be unreasonable to predict a continuance of the demand for seats until everyone who has not witnessed The Rose shall have experienced that pleasure. What was said by David Belasco of the Alcazar's production of The Rose has been chronicled by the daily press. No author ever paid higher tribute to the people entrusted with interpretation of his work.

The Orpheum

The program for the week beginning this Sunday matinee is in every respect calculated to please. Frank Nelson, one of the most distinguished character actors in this country, will make his first vaudeville appearance here and present a one-act play by Sewell Collins, entitled Thirty Dollars. Mr. Nelson will portray Philip, a wayward young man and a race track habitue, in which he scored a great hit in New York and won golden opinions from the Gotham press. He will be excellently supported by Dorothy de Schelle, a talented and attractive young actress, and John C. King, a sterling actor. Juan Tschernoff's unique circus troupe, which includes a number of beautiful ponies and prize dogs and a flock of pigeons, will be an attractive feature. The Knickerbocker Quartet of San Francisco will make its first vaudeville appearance and contribute a program of songs. Goldsmith and Hoppe, who excel as singers, dancers and monologists, will show of what mettle they are made. Next week will close the engagements of Imro Fox, the clever and amusing conjurer; Tony Wilson and Mlle. Heloise; the Amors Sisters; and of that thrilling episode of the prize ring, At the Sound of the Gong, in which Tom (Soldier) Wilson has scored a great hit. A new series of Orpheum motion pictures will close the performance.

American Theatre

That odd comedian, Harry Beresford, will present Who's Your Friend? for the last times this Saturday afternoon and evening, and at the Sunday matinee, with a special performance Monday afternoon, Washington's Birthday, Liebler and Company will present Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, with the same company that has just returned from a triumphant tour of Australia. Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch has proved to be one of the best liked and most liberally patronized attractions in the history of the American stage. At every performance audiences laugh themselves into sideaches, applaud the quaint philosophy of the heroine of the Cabbage Patch, or silently express their appreciation of the pathetic touches. Mrs. Flexner's dramatization of Mrs. Rive's charming stories makes Mrs. Wiggs a human being even if people of Mrs. Wiggs' optimism are not plentiful. To her, life's trivialities are nothing, misfortune could always be worse. Her doctrine is that of cheerfulness; her philosophy is of the sort that all might do well to absorb. Altogether, the Mrs. Wiggs readers learned to love in the book is made a most lovable character on the stage. Throughout the play one sees a procession of the well authenticated characters of the book pass and repass and one hears the bright and optimistic utterances of Mrs. Wiggs, the plaintive pessimism of Miss Hazy, the rambling remarks of the liquor-loving Mr. Stubbins and the pathos of Lovey Mary. You behold the Cabbage Patch true to its Louisville prototype, and you leave the theatre feeling as though you had caught a true picture of life there.

Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch Is a Splendid Oakland Attraction

This is the third week of the Hotelling engagement at Ye Liberty, and Mr. Hotelling receded from his heavy work of the previous productions and essayed the lighter rôle of Eugene Courvesier in The First Violin. His work in this line seemed to strike a popular chord with the audience, and through the entire performance his work met with hearty approval. As his friend Helfen, Geo. Friend is greeted with his customary applause. Margo Mirriam is back again with the company, and in the rôle of May Wedderburn was the essence of charm and grace. F. L. Bennison, Henry Shumer, Robt. Harrison and Geo. Webster had prominent rôles and sustained them well. Of the feminine department, Isabelle Fletcher, Lillian Elliott and Estelle Warfield were the best. The stage settings were appropriate and very much in keeping with the play. The attendance has been quite large and the applause was profuse at all times. A Midsummer Night's Dream will be the attraction for next week. Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch, made famous for its splendid array of true to nature characters, is doing a fine business at the Macdonough and is giving the very best of satisfaction. The cast, which contains most of the members of the original company, is composed of an aggregation of artists and every rôle is well taken care of. Jas. J. Jeffries is booked 20-23. At the Orpheum, Paul Seldoms' statues are making an immense hit. They are unquestionably the finest in their line that we have ever witnessed. The balance of the bill is also good, and taken all in all this week's programme is the best that we have had for some time. Dick Crolins & Co., in the sketch Shorty, have a winner. The other numbers are: Johnny McVeigh and College Girls, Byron and Langdon, "Wireless" Paul La Croix. At the Novelty Mgr. Lubeski has another one of his attractive specialties in the way of James Post and his Buty-Korus, who present The Wise Mr. Murphy, a musical comedy abounding with wit, songs and dancing. He also shows some fine new pictures on the vitograph. At the Bell the customary houses are in vogue at every performance, and this week's programme is fully up to the Bell standard. It is reported that James Pilling, formerly manager for Idora Park, has taken a lease on the Columbia Theatre and intends running the place as a popular priced moving picture house. The great Philippine Constabulary Band of eighty-five pieces gave a concert at Ye Liberty the 17th and afforded a musical treat to all who were fortunate to attend. The house was well filled and everyone pleased. February 23 is the date set for the Mme. Langendorff concert at Ye Liberty.

Arthur Cunningham Pleases Portland Theatre-goers With Good Company and Good Play

PORTLAND, Oregon, February 15.—HEILIG THEATRE (Cal Heilig, mgr.; William Pangle, res. mgr.)—The engagement of E. H. Sothern at this theatre was extended two nights, 8th and 9th, because he was unable to fill his previous dates on account of the washouts along the lines of the S. P. On those two nights he played Dundreary and Richelieu. Of course, the critics were loud in their praise of his Dundreary, but adverse comment was made of his Richelieu. The engagement was a success from a financial standpoint. Corinne, in Lola From Berlin, followed and did only fair. She was as entertaining as ever, and Mark Sullivan was always in evidence. As for the piece, it was not any too satisfactory. Last night The Wolf was the bill. It was welcomed by a very small house, and undeservedly so, as it is a very interesting melodrama. Andrew Robson is the star of the piece, and gave a highly creditable performance. The company supporting, although small, was adequate in all respects. Charles Hanford Company come 18th, 19th and 20th.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—The piece that served to introduce Izetta Jewel to Portland playgoers was In the Bishop's Carriage, and the hit that young lady made in her debut in this city in that play stamped her future as to success in this city. That piece is again the bill at this house, and again this young lady scores as Nan the Nipper. Tom Dorgan is impersonated by Earl Dwire, and he gave a good performance of the part. Donald Bowles, who was cast for the part, was incapacitated to play the same on account of sickness. The rest of the company are all well assigned, and all do well, especially Mrs. Nina Gleason, Howard Russell and James Gleason, and, oh, yes, I nearly forgot William Dills, who has one of those comedy rôles in which he is so strong. Next week—My Friend From India.

BAKER THEATRE (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—Arthur Cunningham and his company opened at this house Sunday matinee in Kerry Gow to a good house. Cunningham played the leading rôle in tip-top style, and of course his songs were heartily encored. Cunningham appears to be the logical successor to Murphy in this class of plays, and his many friends wish him the best of luck. His support is good in all respects. Alice Condon was good in the leading female rôle, and the entire company, in fact, are entitled to praise for their conscientious work. Next week—Paul Gilmore.

ORPHEUM THEATRE (J. E. Erricson, mgr.)—Business continues good at this house and the vaudeville offerings are kept up to the usual high standard that bears the label of Orpheum. This week the bill includes Edwin Holt & Co. as a headliner; Bowers, Walters and Crooker; Foy and Clark; Agnes Mahr; Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Coby; Connelly and Webb; and Anna Lichter.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—The Eagle's Nest is the bill for this week at this popular playhouse, and the stock company is doing itself justice in the play. It was offered some time ago in this city and made good, and no doubt will duplicate its former success. Ralph Belmont is found playing the lead this week and is to be congratulated for his fine work in a character rôle. He surprised all his admirers. Mrs. Lillian Griffiths had a comedy rôle that fit her like the proverbial glove, and of course she was in her element. The balance of the company gave good support. The management dressed the play in first-class style.

GRAND THEATRE (J. E. Erricson, mgr.)—Ralph Johnston is the headliner for this week, and the balance of the bill includes Chefano and Cappretta; The Great Daly; Leffingwell; Bruce & Co.; Daly's Country Choir; and Harry MacDuffee.

PANTAGES has the Golden Gate Quintette for their feature act for this week.

Curtain Up at 1:30 P.M.

There are actors and actors of drawing quality, the latter being extended to Charles B. Hanford, who was touring the Pacific Coast in a repertoire of Shakespearean plays. Mr. Hanford was due to play Ashland, Oregon, on February 12th. The company arrived in due time, but the baggage car was brought on later and did not arrive at Ashland until 10:20 that evening. At 8:30 that night a standing-room house was there to greet Mr. Hanford and his company to present Much Ado About Nothing. At the final conclusion there was nothing to do but to have Mr. Hanford step before the curtain and explain to the audience all about it, so in very few words Mr. Hanford remarked that it was his object to always fulfill his contract to the best of his extent, but as he could not control the schedule time of the trains on the Southern Pacific, he was therefore obliged to tell them with all regret that it would be impossible for the curtain to go up much before 10:30, and that if the audience could put up with the entertainment he would give them until the scenery and baggage would arrive he would do to the best of his ability to entertain them. In the meantime Jos. B. Glick, manager of the company, was arranging a vaudeville programme, and it went on as follows: Charles B. Hanford in a talk, The Life of Abraham Lincoln; Andrew Tombs, comedian of the company, told a few stories and also recited Tommy Atkins and Gunga Din. Eugene Ordway recited The Golden Rule. Misses Shrock, Brooks, Stevens and Gross gave the dances from The Winter's Tale. Miss Carmolia Brown sang selections from Tannhauser and Il Trovatore. John M. Kline was seen in a recitation. The entire company sang the opening chorus of The Winter's Tale, and the programme was finished up by Mr. Hanford reciting The Star Spangled Banner. Last, but not least, Mr. Glick was called upon from the front of the house to make a few remarks. He responded to the call, got up on the stage, and this is what he said: "Inasmuch as I am no speaker or entertainer, and I know that should I say anything it would only spoil the talent that came on before me; nevertheless I trust that you have fully enjoyed this entertainment thus far, and only hope that you will doubly enjoy Much Ado About Nothing. Should anybody in the audience decide that they are not able to stand the strain any longer I will be more than willing to give them their money back." The audience took it very well all the way through, and there was no one who left until the final drop of the curtain. At the conclusion of the performance Mr. Hanford made the remark that it was his first experience in vaudeville. It was a very entertaining entertainment all the way through, and everybody seemed well pleased. It will be remembered for years to come in the minds of Ashland theatre goers.

Sunday, the delightful play by Thomas Racewood and in which Ethel Barrymore scored such a success here just before the fire, is announced at the Valencia Theatre to follow The Fatal Card. Blanche Stoddard is hard at work on the titular rôle and promises to give her most ardent admirers a pleasant surprise by her interpretation of the character of the girl from the West who goes to England to live.

Paris Playwright and Author Dead

M. Catulle Mendes, the French poet, was found dead in the railway tunnel at St. Germain near Paris, Feb. 8. It is believed that the death was accidental. He boarded a train at Paris at midnight bound for his home at St. Germain. He had dined the previous evening at the home of a friend, Baron Oppenheim. The authorities are of the opinion that he fell asleep in the carriage and that by mistake he opened the door of his compartment while the train was still in the tunnel and fell beneath the wheels. M. Mendes spent part of the day before his death writing a play on Napoleon, which he was preparing for the Rejane Theatre. The official verdict is that the death of M. Mendes was accidental and due to imprudence. There is no suspicion of foul play. The tragic death of M. Mendes brought forth expressions of sorrow from all sides. Baron Oppenheim accompanied M. Mendes to the railroad station and said the author was in the best of spirits and talked happily. Catulle Mendes, poet, novelist and playwright, was born at Bordeaux, May 22, 1841. His first publication was in 1864, although he founded the Revue Fantaisiste in Paris, when he was only 18 years old. Among his books of poetry are Contes Epiques, Hesperus, and La Colere d'un Franc Tireur. Among his novels may be mentioned Le Roi Vierge, Monstres Parisiens, Jeunes Filles, Jupe Courte, Les Hes d'Amour, and Mephistophela. Of his plays the most popular were Le Capitaine Frassasse, Le Chatiment, and Fiamette.

A Knight Errant

A Knight Errant in Broadway is the story of a certain Englishman's perfidy when he took root in Wall Street. This is only incidental, however, to the central characters, a bonny English girl of mettle and a young American who has red blood enough to rise above his early environments, which threaten to suck him down. The story is full of action in present-day affairs and quite characteristic of Mr. Holland's best style. It is the feature story of Lippincott's Magazine of March.

The Black Patti Troubadours, Voelckel and Nolan, proprietors, play Denver, Col., Feb. 21-27.

The Red Mill

The Red Mill, with its records at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York City, where it held forth for an entire year, with engagements of three months each in Chicago and Boston, will be presented here at the Van Ness Theatre, opening with a special matinee Washington's Birthday, Monday, February 22, when it begins a two weeks' engagement. The musical comedy, the joint work of Henry Blossom and Victor Herbert, and presented by Charles Dillingham's admirable company, proved the fourth consecutive success in which these clever comic opera builders have collaborated. The field of action of The Red Mill is laid in Holland. The first scene, an exterior, shows the red mill of the story at the edge of the little village in Holland. The second scene, an interior, gives us a look at the home of a well-to-do Burgomaster. All of the people of the story are Hollanders, with the exception of two heroes, who are New Yorkers and are stranded in the lowlands. The story is simple: Con Kidder and Kid Connor are two Americans stranded at a small Dutch inn. They have come to the end of their financial resources and are in debt for a week's board. They are about to make their escape by means of a blanket from an upstairs window when they are detected by the Burgomaster and only saved from imprisonment when they offer to work out their indebtedness. Kidder, who professes to being somewhat of a linguist, is made interpreter at the inn, and Connor becomes a waiter. Kidder has but a scant knowledge of French, and when he is confronted by an irate French Countess who does not understand English his attempts at conversation are laughable. Gretchen, the Burgomaster's daughter, is betrothed to the Governor of Zeeland, an old fop and roue, and to escape this marriage she plans an elopement with Doris Van Dam, a young sea captain. The Americans promise to aid the elopers in return for a passage to America. However, the plans are discovered by the Burgomaster and the prospective bride is locked in the red mill until the arrival of the Governor. Connor and Kidder rescue Gretchen by bringing her down on the sails of the windmill. The Governor has arrived, and his bride is missing. The father offers a large reward for the return of the girl, and on the advice of the Sheriff sends to The Hague for Sherlock Holmes and Dr. Watson. Connor and Kidder intercept the wire and present themselves as the detective and his friend, and in a clever burlesque scene they take off the Gillette play. At the opportune moment Gretchen is returned as the bride of Doris, and the reward enables the Americans to return home. The cast here will include Walter Wills as Con Kidder; Neil McNeill as Kid Connor; W. H. Brown, Fred W. Huntly, Milton Dawson, Frederick McGee, Maurice Lavigne, Eugene Arnold, and the Misses Anna McNabb, Marguerite Fry, Sadie Kirby, Edmace de Dreux and a chorus of fifty, including the Dutch Kiddies and orchestra of twenty-five.

Spotlights

As the only actor now before the American public playing an exclusively Shakespearean repertoire, Charles B. Hanford is occupying a position almost without precedent in stage annals. Mr. Hanford, however, is no monopolist, and has under his guidance or in his own company several gifted players, from whom he expects great things as independent interpreters of the classics in the course of time.

Julia Marlowe's New York engagement in The Goddess of Reason began at Daly's Theatre Monday night, February 15th, and will be limited strictly to four weeks.

The James Neill company closed its season in Winnipeg on February 13. Mr. and Mrs. Neill will go into vaudeville, opening immediately and closing June 6. Mr. Neill will open his summer stock season year in St. Paul on June 6, when he will be seen at the Metropolitan for twelve weeks.

Mace Greenleaf will play the Gillette role in Secret Service, which will start a week's run at the Valencia Theatre on the afternoon of Washington's birthday, and as he has played the part often he should render a good account of himself.

W. H. Crane and Robert Edson are headed this way.

The Lois Theatre of Seattle, within a few weeks will stage Lover's Lane, Tess of the D'Urbervilles, The College Widow and Merely Mary Ann.

Dr. M. A. Roberts has opened a $15,000 picture house in Santa Ana, which he has named The Temple Theatre. It is a concrete building.

Hart's New Theatre, San Mateo, California

One of the coziest and best equipped theatres devoted to vaudeville and combination will open on April 1, 1909, in San Mateo, Cal., which is half way between San Francisco and San Jose, making a very desirable one-night stand between the two cities. The theatre occupies the entire lower floor of the Elk's beautiful new club-house, with a seating capacity of 600. Mr. Chas. E. Hart, for the past ten years connected as musical director with comic opera productions, opened a moving picture and vaudeville house last June in San Mateo. Through increasing business he found it necessary to find a larger place which developed in the new enterprise. Mrs. Chas. E. Hart, better known in the profession as Ethel Tillson, who, by the way, is a native daughter of California, will continue to delight the audience with her sweet singing.

The Wolf Was Regarded As a Great Play and Splendidly Acted in Portland

PORTLAND, ORE., Feb. 24.—HEILIG THEATRE (Cal Heilig, mgr.; Wm. Pangle, resident mgr.)—The engagement of The Wolf came to a close at this theatre on the 17th, and it is too bad that the play and company were not better patronized, as without a doubt it is one of the best plays we have had for quite a while, and the company, although small, were all well cast. Following the engagement of this play, Charles B. Hanford opened his annual engagement at this house. Hanford comes here regularly every season, and has a clientele who look forward to his coming. On his present trip he offers A Winter's Tale, Much Ado About Nothing, Othello and Merchant of Venice. He closes here tonight. He plays his parts well and good support is given him by Marie Drofna. Commencing tomorrow the local lodge of Elks offers Tommy Getz's A Night in Bohemia at this house. There are to be three performances. A Stubborn Cinderella follows.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—Once more the stock company takes a dip into comedy, and as usual they are making good. It seems as if they are stronger in this class of plays than others. The bill this week is My Friend from India. Of course, it is packing the house. The play is put on up to the usual high standard of the management, and nothing is left wanting from any view you may take of the performance. Sydney Ayers and Miss Jewel in the leads gave satisfactory performances, and the comedy work of William Dills was first class, in fact, Dills always does give a faithful portrayal of any part assigned to him. Mrs. Mina Gleason is also well cast, as are all the company. Next week the management announces The College Widow.

BAKER THEATRE (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.)—The engagement of Arthur Cunningham was extended at this theatre for this week, and he opened today in Shaun Rhue and was welcomed by all present. Cunningham is to be commended for his faithful presentations of the Irish roles, and his future success is well assured. Of course, his singing is a hit at every performance. His support is first class in all respects, and the productions could not be improved upon. No doubt he will again duplicate his big business of last week the coming one. Among the cast are H. D. Byers and Alice Condon. The next attraction at this house is Paul Gilmore in The Boys of Company B.

ORPHEUM THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—At this popular vaudeville house for the past week Manager Ericson has featured George Ade's playlet, The Mayor and the Manicure, which served to introduce Edwin Holt in the leading role. It is without doubt one of the best of its Coming this week: The Modern Pocahontas; Kitabanzi Troupe; Six Little Girls and the Teddy Bear; the playlet, The Feud; Nonette; Hibbert and Warren, and G. H. Mitchell.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—The stock company did itself proud in last week's bill, The Eagle's Nest, and the entire cast came in for praise for their fine presentation of the piece. Today they presented Dora Thorne, and did it so well that many a tear was shed by the ladies present. Ralph Belmont is to be commended for his intelligent reading of his lines, also Mrs. Lillian Griffiths for her acting of the part of the Lord's mother. The play is well set from the stage standpoint.

GRAND THEATRE (J. E. Eric-son, mgr.)—Howard Truesdell and company are headliners. The others appearing on this week's bill are Carroll and Cooke; Kitty Allen; Frank Mayne and company; W. C. Goodall and company, and Harry McDuffee.

The production of Salome at Oscar Hammerstein's Philadelphia opera-house last Thursday night with Mary Garden in the title role, aroused the opposition of the clergy of Philadelphia. Several of the ministerial bodies adopted resolutions of protest. The house was sold out five hours after the ticket office opened.

In a fortnight, Edwin Milton Royle's musical play, Marrying Mary, will be presented at the American Theatre. Florence Gear will appear in the leading role of Mary Montgomery, and will introduce several songs written especially for her by Silvio Hein.

Ellen Terry's Life and Reminiscences

Miss Terry's book, just issued, is full of interesting incident. She was born at Coventry in 1848 of actor parents and felt that the stage was her natural inheritance. The first part of which she has any recollection was Mamilus in "A Winter's Tale" under Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean. This was April 28, 1856, and she played Mamilus for 102 nights. She spent the next three years at the theatre with the Keans and enjoyed every minute of it and in 1862 and 1863 had what she calls the "experience of my life with a stock company." Then she had a year's experience on the road and in 1864, in the middle of the run of The American Cousin, she left the stage and married George Frederick Watts. She says: "At the time of my first marriage, when I met such great men as Gladstone, Disraeli, and Tennyson, I had never had the advantage—I assume that it is an advantage!—of a single day's schooling in a real school. What I have learned outside my own profession I have learned from my environment. Perhaps it is this which makes me think environment more valuable than a set education, and a stronger agent in forming character even than heredity—I should have written the externals of character—for primal, inner feelings are, I suppose, inherited. When it suddenly came to an end I was thunderstruck, and refused at first to consent to the separation, which was arranged for me in much the same way as my marriage had been." Two years more of the stage follow, when Miss Terry had unusually interesting experiences. Tom Taylor, who was a leading playwright as well as dramatic critic of the Times and editor of Punch, had a great influence upon her—Charles Reade, Rossetti, Charles Wyndham, Lionel Brough and finally Henry Irving. At this time she saw Irving and acted with him, but he made no great impression upon her. She tells further that neither was he much impressed with her. Then follows one of the most startling statements in the book. * * * "Soon afterward I left the stage for six years, without the slightest idea of ever going back. I left it without regret. And I was very happy, leading a quiet domestic life in the heart of the country. When my two children were born I thought of the stage less than ever. They absorbed all my time, all my interest, all my love." The following chapter in the book describes the six-year vacation and it tells of her home, her children, her duties, but never once are the words husband or father used, and the paradise in which she lives might be Adamless for all the mention that is made of him. One supposes that some sort of trouble came later, for she is very hard up and one day out walking meets Charles Reade, who makes her a flattering offer to come back to the stage. She accepts and plays in Reade's Wandering Heir and tells that he came every night and watched the performance most critically. Miss Terry's picture of Charles Reade is one of the most graphic in the book: "Dear, kind, unjust, generous, cautious, impulsive, passionate, gentle Charles Reade. Never have I known any one who combined so many qualities, far asunder as the poles, in one single disposition. He was placid and turbulent, yet always majestic. He was inexplicable and entirely lovable—a stupid old dear, and as wise as Solomon." Of when Taylor died she writes: "New things come into one's life—new loves, new joys, new interests, new friends—but they cannot replace the old. When Tom Taylor died I lost a friend the like of whom I never had again." The year with the Bancrofts follows and it was toward the end of that period she went with Charles Coghlan to see Irving act King Philip and she says he never did anything better to the day of his death. Toward the end of the year with the Bancrofts Miss Terry met Charles Wardell, whose stage name was Keely, and married him in 1876. Soon after she left the Court theatre for the Lyceum and the rest of the book is as much Henry Irving as Ellen Terry. She says at one place: "I of all people can perhaps appreciate Henry Irving least justly, although I was his associate on the stage for a quarter of a century and was on the terms of the closest friendship with him for almost as long a time." One curious trait of character found in Ellen Terry is her irresponsibility. She is as inconsequential and idle as a child and seems rather unmoral than immoral. Speaking of the actor William Terriss, she says: "Terriss had a beautiful mouth. That predisposed me in his favor at once! I have always been 'cracked' on pretty mouths!" Miss Terry gives many interesting details of the Lyceum productions. She also tells of the American tours, but all she has to tell of her theatrical life is of Irving and Terry; one is mentioned of course as much as the other. After Irving's death in October, 1895, Miss Terry made one more tour to America. She says: "In 1907—only the other day—I toured in America for the first time on my own account, playing modern plays for the first time. I made new friends and found my old ones still faithful. But this tour was chiefly momentous to me because at Pittsburg I was married for the third time and married an American. * * * " Perhaps some one who knows will write a story of Ellen Terry's life after she is gone and tell all the interesting things she has omitted. She has been a remarkable figure on the English stage and a fascinating woman. The book does interest, though it has little literary merit, the many reproductions of photographs adding much to its value.

New Play For Maclyn Arbuckle

Klaw & Erlanger and Joseph Brooks will feature Maclyn Arbuckle next season in a play called The Circus Man, by Eugene W. Presbrey. The first production will be made at McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, August 28. Maclyn Arbuckle is playing the role of the fat sheriff, "Slim" Hoover, in The Round Up. It is a source of satisfaction to herald the success of this clean American play of the Arizona desert. Here is a story told by his closest friend. Mr. Arbuckle always has an eye to the future, and he well appreciated that with a show like The Circus Man it would be greatly to his advantage to have his picture taken with some lions as a background. Mr. Arbuckle remembered Cy Du Vry of Lincoln Park, Chicago, about this time and called upon that gentleman. Mr. Du Vry was able to accommodate him with two lions who were manicured and marcelled years ago and recently have been using their old teeth as playthings. Mr. Du Vry feeds them on cold boiled mush. All this looked nice for Mr. Arbuckle, and he said, "Me for the lions." The pictures were taken. The gate was left open as Mr. Arbuckle stepped inside the cage and two keepers with pikes stood handy, but the lions were as docile as blind kittens. All went well until the flashlight powder went off. That frightened the poor lions, who thought Arbuckle was trying to do away with them. They beat it for the gate. Arbuckle thought the lions were after him and he beat it for the gate. The squeeze of the gate occurred and Arbuckle lost some of his clothing at important anatomical points, while the lions got off scared nearly to death.

CHARLES FROHMAN left New York Feb. 17 for London. He will be gone six months to look after his theatrical interests abroad.

Personals

STANLEY JOHNS is now a cafe manager in Bellingham.

HARRY GIBSON has signed to do the advance for the Brackett-Siebert company.

JAMES G. MORTON is recovering from a serious operation in a Tacoma hospital.

JOHN HARTMAN and his company, when they get through in Los Angeles, will play up the coast to Portland and Seattle, where they have much time reserved for them.

GEO. R. MATISON, who has been playing the lead with The Lieutenant and the Cowboy, and getting all kinds of good notices, retired from the company in San Diego Saturday night.

SANDY DINGWALL, the well known theatrical manager who in his advance man days came here more than a decade ago with The War of Wealth, is about to marry Adrienne Augrade.

EDDIE WEIL, formerly John Cort's New York representative, and well remembered out here for fine advance work the first time King Dodo played the West, is now out ahead of Henrietta Crosman.

MAUDE ODELLE and Adolph Hagemann, a wealthy citizen of this city, were married on February 11. Miss Odelle was formerly a member of Walter Sanford's company at the Mission Theatre.

HARRY SLOAN, who was here last summer with May Robson, married Nancy Mayo, one of the Mayo twins, in Rochester recently. The marriage took place three days after the couple met for the first time.

JAMES DECKIN is playing in stock at the Winnipeg Theatre, Winnipeg. Maud Fealey has been engaged as leading woman at this theatre and will probably make her appearance on Feb. 22 in Sweet Kitty Bellairs.

NORMAN HACKETT comes to the American Theatre shortly in Classmates, in which Robert Edson scored such a success, and he will be followed by that sterling character comedian, Dan Sully, in The Matchmaker.

JOSEPH GOTTLÖB left Monday for a six months' trip to Europe, where he will take a course of treatment at the most celebrated of the spas there. On the way he will join his brother, J. J. Gottlob, and spend a month in New York.

THOMAS MACLARNIE, who has demonstrated his sterling worth as an actor in the many and varied characters he has played during his engagement at the Valencia Theatre, has just signed another contract with the management for forty weeks more.

THE engagement of Blanche Stoddard as leading woman of the Valencia stock company is drawing to a close, and she will make her farewell appearance here on Sunday, March 7. Her successor will be another great San Francisco favorite, whose name will be announced soon.

BRIGHT and pretty Beatrice Nichols, who scored such successes as Puckers in The Prince Chap, Lorena Watkins in The County Chairman and Caroline Mitford in Secret Service, has renewed her contract for one year at the Valencia Theatre. She is young, talented and a hard student, and already has many admirers in San Francisco.

PETER RICE, who has been piloting Harry Beresford around the country for several years, was in town last week with his star. Mr. Rice is regarded as one of the most likable of all traveling managers and is everybody's friend. He proved that last season by staying with a Jules Murry attraction a whole season and finding it as pleasant as any he ever signed for. Evidently the "little man" appreciated the "big fellow's" abilities at their proper proportions.

ACTON DAVIES, an eminent New York critic, accompanied David Belasco from New York. Mr. Davies is enjoying his visit here immensely. Before leaving he arranged his New York work most cleverly. His criticisms of the new productions are appearing regularly day by day, and none of his friends know that he has stolen away. "I looked up the plays that were to be in New York on my way out," he said. "One I found in Washington and another I saw in Boston. So I have written my articles and left them to be run on the proper days, just as if I were there."

FANNIE WARD in the Jerome K. Jerome comedy, The New Lady Bantock, now running at Wallack's Theatre, New York City, has made as big a hit in Manhattan as she did in London, Chicago and Boston. The play was praised for its cleanliness and humor. Audiences and critics alike speak in the highest terms of Miss Ward's naturalness and spontaneity. Miss Ward is rapidly assuming the leadership of the younger stars of the American stage. London has seen her in The Marriage of William Ashe, The Three of Us, In the Bishop's Carriage and The Flag Station. This variety of parts has given London audiences a more comprehensive appreciation of her ability and charm, a treat in store for New York. While she is playing at Wallack's a benefit will be given for Mrs. Lester Wallack. At this entertainment Miss Ward will be seen in Eugene Walter's The Flag Station. Several playwrights have asked permission to submit plays for Miss Ward for next season. It is likely that Miss Ward will use The New Lady Bantock for a brief road tour next fall, and come into New York City early with a new play.

AFTER a service of fifteen years as leading man in various Charles Frohman companies, Bruce McRae is to be promoted to the principal part in The Flag Lieutenant, the next comedy that Charles Frohman will produce in America. It was fifteen years ago that Mr. McRae, who is a nephew of Sir Charles Wyndham and as an actor greatly resembles his uncle, obtained his first part in America in Charles Frohman's production of Aristocracy at Wallack's Theatre. His promotion to the chief part in The Flag Lieutenant, which was played in London by Cyril Maude, is especially grateful news to Ethel Barrymore, whom Mr. McRae has loyally supported, in season and out, for several years. The Flag Lieutenant is a naval comedy by Major W. P. Drury and Leo Trevor. As acted at The Play House in London, it was regarded as the greatest success Cyril Maude has ever had in the British capital. It is a sea romance, with its principal act taking place on H. M. S. Royal Edward. It is partly spirited melodrama and partly capital comedy. London greeted The Flag Lieutenant as the best of its kind that it had seen, either artistically or technically, since Captain Marshall's The Second in Command, the play of army life that brought his first great fame to Cyril Maude.

Committee Makes Strict Rules for Nickelodeons

The draft of a proposed ordinance regulating the construction of buildings to be used by nickelodeons and other places of amusement of that character has been submitted to the Building Committee of the Board of Supervisors by an advisory committee, with a recommendation that it be made effective at the earliest possible date. Much opposition to an iron-clad ordinance has been aroused among the promoters of these enterprises, on the ground that it is impossible to conduct them at a profit in buildings where the rents are high. In spite, however, of these protests, the new ordinance requires that such places, having a seating capacity of less than 300, shall be operated only in class A, class B or class C buildings, if they are situated within the fire limits. In buildings other than class A or B, it is required that the walls shall be covered with metal. Regulations are also made for the placing of seats, the distance between aisles, the number of exits, and the precautions that must be taken to make the operating-room fireproof. It is expected that when the bill comes up for enactment before the board, a strong pressure will be brought to modify some of its more drastic provisions.

A Play Contest Now On, Open to Everybody

The great American play is yet to be written. Who will write it? The answer to that question has been suggested by Robert Edson, who is touring in The Call of the North, under the management of Henry B. Harris, and the idea of the actor will be carried out by the Chicago Sunday Tribune in co-operation with Henry B. Harris and Harry J. Powers, of Powers' Theatre, Chicago. A competition opened January 25th, and the promoters of it hope that its result will be the production of a drama essentially American and worthy of the stage which has given to the world a Booth and a Jefferson. From the contest begun by the Chicago Sunday Tribune no one is barred. Primarily it is not to be a contest for prizes for sums of money, but for an opportunity. Harry J. Powers has agreed to produce at Powers' Theatre, Chicago, the play that wins the first award in the Chicago Sunday Tribune's unique contest. Mr. Edson's idea was to offer encouragement in some substantial form to the men and women who believe they can write plays. In the hands of Mr. Powers and Mr. Harris the idea grew. At first the award of prizes was the only reward considered. Out of this original plan grew the larger idea of producing the winning play and thus giving to the author who succeeds in the Chicago Sunday Tribune's contest, that thing which many celebrated playwrights have struggled twenty years to gain—a public hearing. The prizes offered are $200 in the aggregate. The first prize will be $100, the second $75, and the third $25. The winning plays will be produced by Harris and Powers, Chicago, at the earliest possible date after the conclusion of the competition. If the play succeeds at the trial performance the author will receive for subsequent productions royalties on a basis of 4 per cent of the first $4000, 5 per cent of the next $3000, and 7½ per cent of all over $7000 on weekly gross receipts. If the author of the scenario which wins first place in the Chicago Sunday Tribune's competition is unable to expand the skeleton into a play Mr. Harris has agreed to procure the services of a well known playwright to work it into shape. In this event some equitable division of the royalties will be made between the author of the scenario and the man who is called upon to complete the task of preparing the Chicago Sunday Tribune's play for production. All copyright and royalty rights of the author will be fully protected by Powers and Harris. All scenarios submitted should be sent to the Sunday Editor, Chicago Tribune, carefully marked "American Play Competition." All scenarios must be received by the Sunday Editor before midnight March 15. At that time the contest will close and no manuscripts received after that day will be maintained. Three judges will be appointed by the editor of the Chicago Sunday Tribune to pass upon the plays submitted. The names of these judges will be published in the Chicago Sunday Tribune before the contest closes. They will consist probably of a well-known dramatic critic, a prominent author, and a Chicago theatrical manager.

The Big Trunk Store (Inc.)

Just received a carload of latest style TAYLOR TRUNKS

The Crown City Theatre Company, capitalized for $15,000, by I. Margolis, Harry Havill, R. F. Simoneau, E. R. Visner, S. Winestock, B. Zager, J. Rubenstein, R. C. Visner and G. D. Porter, is a new theatrical venture in Los Angeles.

The Fatal Card, the intensely interesting comedy-melodrama by G. Haddon Chambers and B. C. Stevens, which will follow Secret Service at the Valencia Theatre, has not been seen in this city for several years.

Oliver Morosco is Getting Ready for a Big Production of Peter Pan in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 25.—Elaborate preparations are making for the presentation at the Burbank next week of Peter Pan. The offering will be the first in the country at the hands of a stock company, and locally is of double importance, since it will serve to reinstate Blanche Hall, "the most popular stock leading woman in America," according to my good friend, Sidle Lawrence, O. Morosco's publicity purveyor, as leading woman with the Burbank company. Miss Hall, who returns after an absence of several months, has been devoting much study to the title role of the Barrie play, for more months than is usual even for a star creating a role, and should shine in the former Adams part. Her sister, Jessie Mae Hall, is also to appear in the production, having been specially engaged for the part of Wendy. A big auxiliary company has been in training for many weeks, and an elaborate revival seems imminent. Mr. Morosco has secured many of the original scenic effects from New York, as well as the famous "animal" props which so pleased the children when the road production was on tour. Although the royalty of the play is $1,750, said to be a record breaking figure, and the expense of the production is exceedingly large aside from that, Mr. Morosco expects a big run of the play, the advance sale indicating over a fortnight and probably over a month. Florence Oakley is to be replaced at the Belasco within a month, her original contract being nearly expired. Mr. Blackwood has had notice for some time that the lady would not renew her contract, and consequently when he found himself able to secure a successor for her at the expiration of March who would not be available at the end of April when Miss Oakley's contract would terminate, the young woman offered to accommodate by leaving the three weeks or so earlier. The name of Miss Oakley's successor is not announced. Burke Clarke, also of the Belasco company, has resigned, and will leave for the East over Charlie Pike's Salt Lake route in about three weeks. Richard Vivian has got the "benzine buggy" hunch, and spends his spare moments looking over brands. Star Stone has evidently been "educating" the members of his "flock" in the delights of "moting." Dick Ferris has been standing sponsor for one of the best "magic" entertainers that Los Angeles has seen in many a long day. Stiff is the gentleman's name, and by profession he's a commercial traveler. But his real mission in life is to entertain his friends with feats of sleight of hand and ledgerdom and the way Dick has been touting him 'round and inducing a display of his talents before the Ferris friends (who are legion), has been highly enjoyable. Will H. Brill, who used to be a dramatic editor and war correspondent, has "back-slid," and is now out three weeks in advance of The Right of Way. His experience as news gatherer and diplomat is standing him in good stead now, and they say as a general "jollier" he is "IT."

AUDITORIUM—Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves continues to be a favorite with matinee audiences at the Auditorium. The chorus grows from week to week, and now numbers something over sixty. The young women for the most part amateurs when the season opened, are rapidly improving in their work under the tutelage of Florence Leslie, and the ensemble numbers are given with a commendable vim and dash. Maude Beatty, Olga Stech, Billy Onslow, Walter Reed, Ben Sellars and the rest of the principals are provided with suitable musical numbers, and the piece is being satisfactorily received.

BELASCO—A Texas Steer, with Lewis S. Stone as Maverick Brander, and Florence Oakley as his daughter, is demonstrating the superiority of the Hoyt brand of comedy at the Blackwood stock house this week. James K. Applebee has a character part in which he makes much in the role of Fishback, the colored politician. His monology on the evils of office holding proves hilariously funny. Howard Scott's "parasite," who exists upon the guilelessness of Western politicians in Washington is a clever piece of work. Good support is contributed by Charles Ruggles, Beatrice Noyes, Ida Lewis and De Witt Jennings. A sumptuous scenic equipment has been provided by Scenic Artist Robert Brunton, and as typical of Washingtonian atmosphere during Congress, the play is quite "it."

BURBANK—A Temperance Town, also by Charles Hoyt, is receiving a most satisfying revival at the hands of Morosco's Burbankers. The play was given by the same company something like a year ago, and the present revival suffers but little in comparison with the presentation at that time. Two things impressed me particularly—first and foremost the cracking good work of Charles Giblyn, comfortably at home in the character part of the village druggist whose principal objection of saloons is that they interfere with a most lucrative portion of his drugstore revenues, and the other, the exceedingly gorgeous gowns displayed by Alice Lovell Taylor, who plays the clergyman's daughter. Miss Taylor's gowns are creations, at least two of 'em are. Now in the country towns I've visited, clergymen's daughters never seemed able to wear that kind of gowns while they lived at home and on papa. Maybe Miss Taylor's papa was a wealthy clergyman who merely concealed his wealth from his parishioners. I can't account for the gowns on any other hypothesis. The lady's acting is highly commendable, her voicing being a marked improvement over that displayed on previous occasions. William Desmond, Willis Marks, Henry Stockbridge, John Burton, A. Byron Beasley and the rest of the cast are all contributing their share to a satisfying performance.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE—A Chinese Honeymoon as warbled by the Ferris Hartman company is quite a piece. It's got a lot of good music, as many good musicians and singers as are required, and more actors and actresses with a prime eye to comedy possibilities than I have suspected, heretofore, were concealed on the Hartman payroll. Everybody is a comedian—even the leading chorus girls, and they all "comede" with a whole hearted savoir faire that is cheering to witness. First and foremost, even before the star of patronymic honors, comes little Muggins Davis, who plays the lady slavey pinning for a husband. The little Davis does herself and her trainers credit—rare credit—by her understanding interpretation of the comedienne role. While still a novice at the game, this young woman is rapidly developing capabilities and talents which should carry her a long ways upward on the professional road she has chosen. There is still room for improvement, particularly in her vocal work, but then the public doesn't expect a Vaw voice from a soubrette, and Miss Davis, if she exercise care and work hard, will be heard from. Mr. Hartman as Pineapple, grimaces and acts his way through the meagre comedy of the lines, adding much unctuous fun of his own which makes the part well worth while. Walter De Leon, James Fogerty and Josie Hart are "there with the bells," in the fun-making, while Christine Nielsen's "Soo Soo" is a vocal delight, as well as an acting achievement.

MAJESTIC—Marrying Mary with Florence Gear in the old Cahill part at the new Morosco house this week is proving a revelation in many ways. In the first place, the role of the much married young woman, anxious to "take another chance," seems to fit Miss Gear almost as well as do her gowns, and that's going a bit let me state. In the second place, Miss Gear fits the role just as capably, which is going some more. Frankly, the young woman has a most engaging personality and is an actress and singer of ability. Her handling of the young woman with a predilection for the wedding bells is to my way of thinking, superior to that accorded the part by its former interpreter. Starland, one of Miss Gear's new songs, is a catchy effect, and is sung under novel scenic conditions. Enveloped in a black cape which covers her up to her throat, the singer presents the catchy thing on a dark stage, the spot light revealing only her head, which appears to float in space hither and thither. The cast throughout is highly capable, and were it not for the fact that Richard Karl follows Eugene Cowles in the part of Col. Culpepper, there would be no room for unfavorable comparison with the star cast seen here in support of Miss Cahill. As it is Mr. Karl does excellently with the part, acting it right up to mark, but he hasn't a Cowles voice.

MASON OPERA HOUSE—Girls, a Clyde Fitch comedy, satirically deriding the men haters among the fair sex, is pleasing comfortable audiences at the Wyatt play-shop. The play deals with an anti-matrimonial club whose five members are individually and severally pledged to lives of single blessedness, but who eventually chose the "double cussedness" in spite of all their commendable declarations and intentions on the proposition of celibacy. The interpreting company is quite good, but there are two of the women in the title-giving roles, who excel the rest, Caroline Locke and Bessie Toner. These young women contribute stellar excellence and as comedienettes of a semi-serious nature, they are "there with the bells," if I may use a little slang in referring to so "sacred" an affair as a Fitch comedy. Ethel Terry, Suzette Jackson, Hevlyt

Benson and H. S. Northrup are the best of the supporting cast, and while the play is simple as to plot, development and motif, its witty lines and capable handling make it easily enjoyable, if not distinctly memory creating.

THE ORPHEUM—The Orpheum company present a good act in Wireless at the Orpheum this week. Although the sketch is melodramatic, it is well played and the best feature of the present bill. The bill begins with an athletic feat by a man who can stand on his head and walk on his hands, and a woman who can stand on her head and walk on her hands. The act is a good one, and the company is well known.

THE SWEETHEARTS—The Sweethearts company present a good act in Wireless at the Orpheum this week. Although the sketch is melodramatic, it is well played and the best feature of the present bill. The bill begins with an athletic feat by a man who can stand on his head and walk on his hands, and a woman who can stand on her head and walk on her hands. Sim Allen Writes: The Rosabele Leslie company opens a second summer engagement in Tucson the first week in April, and I want to get into touch with some good people.

Leslie King Writes: I signed with E. H. Sothorn the last night he was in Frisco. I play the actor and Fortinbrol in Hamlet, opening last Saturday in Seattle. Am to have a part in Richard III and Richard Love-lace, which Mr. Sothorn will revive in Chicago. We left Spokane for Salt Lake and then week stands East. In the spring we play New York, Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia and Boston. This is a fine engagement and good money.

A Midsummer Night's Dream Packs Ye Liberty in Oakland

Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream was chosen for the fourth and final week of the Hoteling engagement, and from the box-office standpoint it was the most successful of all the productions. The house has been packed at every performance, and the attendance seems to increase as the week progresses. The most striking feature of the production is the magnificent stage settings, which were complete in every detail. A prominent feature also was the fairy dances given by a bevy of children, under the special direction of Miss Helen Buttler. Taken all in all, the production is on a magnificent scale and much better than is usually seen at popular prices. Of the cast, Mr. Hoteling was probably the best, although the principal members of Bishop's company all showed up well. Robert Harrison was to have enacted the role of Demetrius, but was suddenly taken ill. With hardly any preparation whatever, Reed Clarke took up the part and gave a very satisfactory performance. E. L. Bennison, George Webster, George Friend and Isabelle Fletcher gave masterly interpretations. Milton Stallard, who is mainly responsible for the direction of the play, is deserving of the greatest of praise. The Prince of Liars is to follow. Jas. J. Jeffries gave three performances at the Macdonough, 22-24, and played to very light business. The Babes in Toyland opened 25, and played to a packed house. The opera is one of Victor Herbert's late successes, and contains new and novel features. The staging is grand, the wit and comedy new and bright, and the chorus young and pretty. Capacity houses still continue at the Orpheum and this week's bill seems to strike the fancy of all. Seldom's statues still hold over and share the honors with the Royal Italian Quartette. The other numbers which seemed to please immensely are: Mr. Dick Crolous & Co., Leon T. Rogee, Farrel Taylor Company, Miss Helen Grantly, Mr. Johnny McVeigh, Byron & Langdon. The vaudeville houses seem to be holding their own and large audiences prevail; this is especially true of the Bell and the Novelty. Manager Bishop of Ye Liberty announces the engagement of Helen Lackaye, sister to Wilton Lackaye. Miss Lackaye, who has recently achieved much favorable comment as the Widow in The Heir to The Hoorah, will undoubtedly be a welcome acquisition to our stock company. Josef Lhevinne, the celebrated pianist, will give a concert at the Liberty March 12. David Bispham, the well known singer, is booked March 19.

Erroneous Report of Kendall Fellows' Death

Writing from San Antonio, Texas, Mrs. Georgina Kendall Fellows says she is glad to say the recent report published of the death of her son Kendall is erroneous. She writes: "I am only too glad to say that Kendall is improving all the while, and although not perfectly well, the doctors tell me his ultimate recovery is certain. Just now he is in the hands of an oculist and throat specialist who is considered the best here. He looks very well and hopes before long to be back on his beloved boards and facing the footlights so alluring to him."

John R. Stirling Goes Into Hotel Business

John R. Stirling, past exalted ruler of the Detroit lodge of Elks, former secretary of the park commission and afterwards of the Citizens' railway, becomes proprietor of the Hotel Ste Claire, of Detroit, on May 1. The matter has been under consideration for some time and the deal was closed last Saturday, so Mr. Stirling writes to the DRAMATIC REVIEW. Mr. Stirling succeeds William P. Beyer and Edgar O. Sutton. Mr. Beyer has managed the hotel since it opened 16 years ago and for the last seven years Mr. Sutton has been his associate in the business. The hotel has been a success under the Beyer & Sutton regime and enjoys a splendid reputation among the traveling public. Mr. Stirling has lived in Detroit all his life and is one of the most popular men in the city. He retired from the street railway company when it was sold to Tom L. Johnson and R. T. Wilson. For many years Mr. Stirling has been prominently identified with the theatrical business as manager and part proprietor of the Star, Teck and Academy theatres in Buffalo and with several road attractions, the principal of which is Rose Melville in Sis Hopkins, which still receives his personal attention. Mr. Stirling contemplates no changes in the policy of the hotel, which has been so generally satisfactory.

New Theatre For Ocean Park

Ninety days is the time allotted for the completion of the theatre building that is to be erected on Marine street and Ocean front, Ocean Park, near Los Angeles, by B. A. Wheelock. The contract has been awarded to J. W. Jacobs & Sons of Los Angeles. The structure, which is to be of two stories 84x50 feet, will cost $13,000. The first floor will accommodate a theatre with cafe in the basement and office rooms in the second story.

Central Comedy Company

Tedd Brackett and De Moine Seibert, owners of the Central Comedy Company, wish to correct the statement that has been circulated by one, George H. Edwards, to the effect that the Central Comedy Company had stranded and owed salaries. This they positively wish to deny, as this company is one of the few that has weathered the storm and paid salaries, printing bill and all other expenses, and still has some money left. The Central Comedy Company is still out and is going to stay out, they write, and will on March 4 commence to play our return dates. The company is booked solid until next September.

Mrs. JAMES BROWN POTTER, according to a story just published, has definitely given up the stage and is now living with her daughter, Mrs. James Stillman, Jr., at the latter's residence in New York. According to the same story, Mrs. James Stillman, Sr., is now on most cordial terms with the former actress, and is preparing to pave for her a re-entry into New York society. Mrs. Potter's recent vaudeville venture under the direction of William Morris was a frost.

Lee Millar

Among the very capable young actors that are playing at the Valencia Theatre is Lee Millar, who is appearing for the first time in his home town. Since his first essay at acting, some four years ago, Mr. Millar has been very successful in the East, where for one season he was featured with the Robert Downing company. Last season Mr. Millar was leading juvenile in The Kerry Gow company and made a decidedly good impression wherever the company played. For a while he played the leading juvenile in the Quincy Adams Sawyer company and left that engagement to return home on a visit to his folks. Since his engagement opened with the Valencia stock, he has demonstrated that he is possessed of unusual cleverness and has a forceful quality in his work that is under excellent control. Possessed of a tall, handsome appearance and a splendid voice he is unusually well equipped for leading juvenile parts. He has an excellent future and it will not be long before he will be heard of in leading business.

Hammerstein May Bring His High-Priced Warblers Here

The Valencia Theatre management has been in communication with Oscar Hammerstein for several weeks, and, in the event of that impresario bringing his grand opera company to the Coast in April, the organization will be heard in that commodious playhouse. During the operatic season the Valencia stock company would be sent on a brief tour in the repertoire of the best plays which they have been giving this season.

JIMMY HORNE is an affable addition to Manager Harry Bishop's box-office staff in Oakland. Jimmy is one of the cleverest ticket sellers the Coast has developed.

DR. L. MORTIMER SLOCUM, veteran humorist and actor-manager, who went to Washington in the territorial days of 1879 with Westman's Equestrian and Eastman's Equine Paradox, a tent show owned by Jim Hughes, a pioneer stage driver and temperance lecturer of California, is an invalid at the Paxton Hotel in Seattle, because of injuries sustained in falling in a trolley car.

Eugene Spofford Offers Some Good Suggestions in Routeing a Show

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 10.

EDITOR SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW—Dear Sir: Having only recently played the territory from San Francisco to Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado, Utah and Idaho, twice this past season with some success, it has occurred to me that either route of the two submitted would be of some benefit to the readers of your valuable paper, especially to managers and agents of the smaller companies. Such being the case, I submit the routes for your approval. I wish to state while some of the jumps seem large, especially through Arizona, I found every town I played a winner. Business was good in every town played in Arizona and New Mexico. Shows are very scarce all through that part of the country and the people are out to welcome you. The local railroad rate through Arizona and New Mexico is 4 cents per mile; still, it pays to play it with a small company of eight or ten people. In Utah, there are round-trip rates whereby a company can play the branch lines at a rate of less than 2 cents per mile. In Idaho and Utah the railroads make a party rate of 2 cents; in Nevada, 2½ cents per mile. The only rate in New Mexico outside of the regular 4-cent rate is given by the El Paso and Southeastern Railroad (2 cents) going from French, N. M., to Dawson, N. M. While on the subject, allow me to say, Dawson, N. M., is what is called a one-man town; in fact, it is controlled by one man. It is a coal mining town, with the largest coke output in the West. The town has a population of 8,000, with an opera house that cost $60,000, opened last December, and managed as are the other vast enterprises in this astonishing place. The pay-roll is $250,000 a month. There is only one store and one hotel in town, and, I must say, the finest lot of people I have run across in many a day. Trusting this will be of some interest to your many readers, I am, respectfully yours,

EUGENE SPOFFORD.

Van Ness Theatre

The Red Mill, with a record of a splendid metropolitan run and a clever and entertaining book as an added excellence, comes to us this week with another to follow. The idea seized upon by the authors is splendidly worked out and there is plenty of comedy. The music is in Victor Herbert's best vein and is a tremendously strong feature of the show. The company is large and well directed and enthusiastic audiences have witnessed it during the week. Walter S. Wills and Neill McNeil played the parts of the two Americans stranded in Holland and they dance and cavort around and invest the characters with plenty of humor. Milton Dawson, with a good German accent, plays the innkeeper and is one of the best members of the company. His daughter is played by Anne McNabb and she is a sprightly, pretty and clever young soubrette. Marguerite Fry, one of Seattle's fair and loyal daughters, is cast for Gretchen, the Burgomaster's daughter, whom she makes attractive. She displays the singing voice of the company. Sadie Kirby was vivaciously effective as the Burgomaster's sister. The Burgomaster himself was played by W. H. Brown, who was big enough for the most impressive Burgomaster. He had a big, rolling bass voice that went very well with the part. Otherwise he didn't try to characterize the part. The Dutch Kiddies made a hit with their specialties and the several parodies and topical songs were well executed. The Red Mill is a novelty and is picturesque in the extreme.

Princess Theatre

Crowded houses every night is the rule at the Princess this week. Playing the Ponies, which is one of Kolb and Dill's best shows, is responsible for part of the house, while the remainder of the big audience come to see the comedians for the last time—for a little while anyhow. At popular request, Playing the Ponies was reproduced for the farewell week, and, notwithstanding that the show had a long run not long ago, it is received with enthusiasm by the audience. Of course, it is unnecessary to state that Kolb and Dill as Pickus and Pluckus are the same as ever and keep the audience in convulsions of laughter for the greater part of the show. Albert Duncan, as Bud, the jockey, comes in for a good share of applause, as does Adela Rafter and Percy Bronson. The remainder of the cast contains Charles Swickard, Sidney de Grey, George Wright, Harris McGuire, Tom Clarke, Hazel Boyne and Blossom Seelye. Next week the Princess will present The Rounders, an Eastern production, with May Boley, Bud Ross, Frank Moulán, Fred Mace and what is practically an all-star cast in a play that is expected to make a sensational hit.

American Theatre

Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch is one of the best of theatrical attractions—both from the standpoint of the audience and the manager. How do we know? By the business it attracts. The American has been doing a tremendous business all week, and considering this is the third visit of the play, the result is something that proves the unusual value of the play.

A new Mrs. Wiggs is seen this time. She is Blanche Chapman, who scores seemingly as strongly as did her predecessor. Lottie Alter is seen again as Lovey Mary and Helen Lowell repeats her former triumph as Miss Hazy. Florence Busby is a very pretty and charming Lucy. Helen Raymond is just right as Mrs. Eichorn and Katherine Belknap is about the biggest ever as Mrs. Schultz. Georgie Hayes is very pleasing as Asia and Argyll Campbell leaves a fine impression by his sympathetic and natural portrayal of Billy. John Webber is Mr. Stubbins, and he gives him very entertaining characteristics. J. W. Smiley is Mr. Wiggs and Harry L. Fraser is a manly and handsome young Mr. Bobbs. Eugene Shakespeare is Chris Hazy and stumps around with pleasing effect. Harry Bradley changes his clothes from the matrimonial agent in the first act to the deputy sheriff in a later part of the play. He is distinctively good in the two very opposite characters. These are the chief members of the cast and they preserve the quaint philosophy, the kindly humor and the natural charm of the play with great success and with an ease that comes from long contact, for this is the company that has just returned from a visit and a most successful one, to Australia.

Valencia Theatre

Secret Service is one of the standards of American plays. In constructive quality, in acting possibilities and in story it is really surpassed by none and equalled by very, very few. It is one of the triumphs of William Gillette's skill and will long be a popular offering. Through the illness of Blanche Stoddard, the management are given the opportunity to introduce Justina Wayne in the leading female part of Edith Varney. Miss Wayne, fresh from the triumphs of an Australian trip in The Prince Chap, has been seen but infrequently in her home city since she acquired a name and position in the East. Although playing a part that required no great tax on her abilities, Miss Wayne showed a beautiful, attractive personality and a splendid method, with a hint of power should the occasion demand it. Beatrice Nichols was a dimpled, piquant personality as Caroline Mitford and if ever a more charming young woman ever played the part in San Francisco we do not recall her. Grace Travers was pleasing as Mrs. Varney. A hit of impressive proportions was made by Lillian Andrews in the guise of the old colored mammy. In make-up, in voice and intonation and in the illusion created, Miss Andrews came near presenting a perfect portraiture. Mace Greenleaf had the exacting part of Captain Thorne of the Secret Service. This is one of the most effective parts ever written and must be played with the greatest intensity and repression, and it takes an artistry as well as a personality to achieve this. Mr. Greenleaf was handsome and manly, and never overdid the part—but there was lacking something of the intense and expectant atmosphere demanded by the character. Reginald Travers made up the part of Gen. Randolph very well, and, aside from a little too explosiveness, was good in his depiction of the character. Gerald Harcourt was excellently cast as Wilfred Varney and brought out with fine effect the display of youthful fire and heroism with which the part is so plentifully endowed. Charles Dow Clarke deserves all kinds of complimentary notices for his beautiful portrayal of the old Southern darkey. Robert Homans played Benton Arrlesford, of the Southern War Department. Mr. Homans gave a powerful impersonation, but he was too studied in his deliberateness. Thomas McLarnie as Henry Dumont; Thomas Lowell, as the second operator; Wm. Wolbert, George Baldwin and Lee Millar gave also good support in small parts. The scenery was in most excellent taste, and the details of the performance were perhaps brought out with more natural and intelligent effect than ever before in a local stock production. The orchestra music was made notable this week by the introduction of a piano solo, extremely well rendered. Director Heller has a wonderful faculty in getting together unusually fine musical programmes.

Alcazar Theatre

The Rose of the Rancho still continues as a magnet of tremendous power and there seems to be no diminution of interest in this surpassingly beautiful production. Bessie Barriscale, Bertram Lytell, Herbert Farjeon, Bert Wesner and Will Walling continue their highly artistic portrayals and the exquisite music of the play is brought out with particular charm under the direction of Edward Lada, who has one of the most flexible and responsive groups of musicians ever organized. When the run of the play is over, The Darling of the Gods will be offered for an indefinite period.

Malan, Magrath and Wood Lease 16th St. Theatre

Malan and Magrath, the comedians and producers, and Harry Wood, a wealthy mining man, have leased the Sixteenth Street Theatre and will open it on Monday, March 8th, with a stock company, playing dramas, comedies and vaudeville, in conjunction with moving pictures, giving a Saturday and Sunday matinee and two shows each night. With their reputations as producers and their conceded ability, Malan and Magrath ought to make a winner out of this handsome, cozy little theatre.

THE once brilliant, vivacious, magnetic but erratic Victory Bateman is almost down and out. She is singing songs in a New York five-cent picture house.

Correspondence

Laramie, Wyo., Feb. 22.—Nothing doing at opera house the past week. Nothing in sight for near future. Another picture show opens tonight, making three here.

San Diego.—Garrick (Morosco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—Feb. 20-21, The Master Power pleased two fair-sized audiences; 28, Florence Gear in Marrying Mary; March 1-2, Girls; 5-6, The Gingerbread Man. W. B. Gross (King Edward) of Shore Acres fame, and now assistant manager of the Garrick, has entered politics in this city. He is a candidate for a member of the City Board of Education, and it is a pretty assured fact that he will be elected, as Mr. Gross has a large following of friends here. Pickwick (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—Week Feb. 22, the Armstrong Musical Comedy Company in A Scotch Highball. The piece is a bunch of nonsense intermingled with good musical numbers and has little or no plot, but seems to be just about what the public likes, as the house has practically been sold out at every performance. The comedy is handled by Edward Armstrong and Barney Williams, and they do very well. The rest of the company is composed of Arthur Don, Aubrey Carr, Ethel Davis, Libby Blondell and Inez Bayard, and nine pretty chorus girls. Next week, the same company in The Merry Widow's Return. Queen (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.)—Week Feb. 22, Sullivan & Considine vaudeville. Holmes and Holliston in merry little skit, Looking for Betsy; The Mizunos, Japanese acrobats; John J. Birch, the man with the hats; Rosa Roma, violin virtuoso; The Wests, in German dialect songs and dances; Lillian Gardner, soubrette. Latest moving pictures conclude a very good show. Capacity business. Empire (W. W. Bosley, mgr.)—Vaudeville, moving pictures and illustrated songs; good business. Bijou—The Camera-phone; good business. Grand, Gaiety and Union offer moving pictures and illustrated songs to good business.

C. E. LUNDQUIST.
San Bernardino, Feb. 22.—At the Opera House, 17, The Red Mill was presented to a full house; the music is tuneful and the cast good. 18, The Master Power, spoken of as the most powerful drama ever written, to a fair house; the cast is excellent, notably Hazel Buckham as Grace Claire, the Southern maid; Clara Williams, as Dole, the octoroon, and Monroe Saulsbury, as Saul Carleton, the negro State representative. Prosy argument and theorizing, attempting to be counterbalanced by inconsequential byplay, are too much in evidence in the first part of the production; the sudden death of an invalid mother, the outrage of a daughter by a colored fiend, the lynching of the culprit, and the suicide of his victim immediately before the drop of the curtain, are intensely dramatic, realistic and harrowing; these nerve-racking incidents are literally fired at the audience with cannon-ball directness, leaving them in a state bordering on nervous prostration. It is seriously doubtful whether the play in its present shape will be acceptable to the public, but with judicious pruning and changes presents the possibility of a powerful drama. 19, Clyde Fitch's delightful comedy, Girls, was witnessed by a fair house; 20, Florence Gear in Marrying Mary showed to a poor house, due to the rain, but those present enjoyed a rare treat. March 1, The Gingerbread Man; 6, Shore Acres; 15, week, Ellefrod company; 19, The Right of Way; 29, Lillian Russell; April 21, Mme. Nazimova.

J. E. RICH.
San Jose, Feb. 22.—The show business in our combination house is looking up. The Red Mill played last week to about $1,100, and pleased very much. This week we are to have Babes in Toyland on the 24th. At the Jose, Manager Beroyovich has: Thaler's Dog and Pony Circus; Mason, Wilbur and Jordan, comedy acrobats; Trixedia and Robinson, character singers; Kingsbery and Munson, dramatic sketch; Ross and Adams, German Comedians, and Fred Lancaster, in illustrated songs.

Chico, Cal., Feb. 24.—A fair-sized audience filled with the typical college spirit greeted the University of California Glee Club when it appeared at the Majestic, Saturday night, Feb. 20. The programme was well rendered and seemed to more than fill expectations. The musical comedy, A Stubborn Cinderella, appearing Tuesday night, 23, proved an attraction far above the ordinary, and time and again the players were forced to tarry with their lines until the big audience had relieved itself of a prolonged applause. Mr. Mason, in the comedy role, dished out a line of his own which was novel and refreshing, and his reputation was fully sustained. In points of costume and comeliness, the chorus was superior, the best possible singing having apparently been sacrificed to this end. Grace Edmund as prima donna gave an excellent accounting, however. At the Gem, Miss Rose Stevens, vocalist, is the special attraction this week, and box office receipts prove that her performance is very creditable.

C. H. CHACE.
Marysville, Feb. 24.—On February 19th, Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch played to a capacity house and one of the most appreciative audiences of this season. Every member of the cast was a real artist in his lines. On February 23d, the Native Daughters of the Golden West gave a minstrel show under the direction of Katherine Page. The house was packed to the utmost and was quite a treat to the audience, as, instead of expecting to see a real amateur show, most of the numbers on the programme seemed more like professionals. We think Marysville Parlor, No. 162, N. D. G. W., should repeat this performance in the near future, when they can be assured of an overflowing house.

Eureka, Feb. 20.—Margarita Theatre (Girton & Shaw, mgrs.)—The Girton stock has presented The Rose of the Rancho under the name of The Song of the Tuberose, the first four nights this week. It was put on in very satisfactory manner. The latter part of the week the farce-comedy, It Was All a Mistake. This is our old-time friend, The Strange Adventures of Miss Brown. Tomorrow afternoon the exciting melodrama, The Slide for Life. Empire Theatre (Van Sant, mgr.)—Moving pictures and vaudeville to good business. Manager Van Sant is in trouble with the United States courts over infringement of the copyright law, and is being sued by Arthur Aiston for $350 damages for producing a copyrighted play at his theatre here without permission and paying the necessary royalty. This is the play known as Tennessee's Partner, which is owned by Aiston, but was produced here at the Empire Theatre during the engagement of the Max Steinel company, when Manager Van Sant switched over from moving pictures to the drama at his house. The papers from the District Court were sent here the early part of this month and were served on him by Deputy United States Marshal Prentice, Ingomar Theatre—On March 5-6 the Elks' Minstrel Carnival, benefit for the new Elks' Hall.

Vaudeville

John P. Bogardus Is Dead

This will be sad news to thousands of professionals who knew this veteran of the show world in this city for the last fifty years. His death removes from our midst a most picturesque personality who had many friends and no enemies. He was a gentleman always—kindly and charitably disposed toward all and for over sixty years he had been an influential and respected citizen of this State. For over fifty years of that time he had been actively associated with the theatrical business as the editor of The Figaro. After the fire Mr. Bogardus became vaudeville editor of THE DRAMATIC REVIEW. He was particularly suited for this work as his acquaintance in the vaudeville field was extensive and his judgment ripe and discriminating. We feel the loss of this old comrade keenly as a personal one. We knew of his illness for the past three weeks, but hoping that warmth and sunshine would restore him to his usual persistent activity, we were unprepared for his death last Wednesday. Mr. Bogardus leaves a widow and two daughters, Louise Bogardus and Mrs. C. B. Brier of Sacramento. The immediate cause of his death was enlargement of the liver, but this was aggravated by weakness, the result of old age. He was 82 years old at the time of his death. The funeral took place Friday under the auspices of the Society of California Pioneers.

The Orpheum

An intensely interesting bill is attracting the customary large Orpheum business this week. Opening the program is the act of the Amoras Sisters held over from last week. The sisters are clever tumblers. Imro Fox, whom we recall from our boyhood days, is still one of the most entertaining of magicians. His talk is not the least interesting part of his work. A strong local flavor is added to the show by the appearance of the Knickerbocker Quartet, an organization held in high repute here. Of course they met with a great reception and their singing seemed to be just what was wanted. Frank Nelson and company presented the playlet, Thirty Dollars, one of the many sketches that has for its chief interest the doings of touts and the winnings of large sums of money and the resultant happiness, etc. None of the plays of this character have approached in interest or value that sketch of Wm. Courtleigh's called Peaches, which has evidently been the inspiration of most of them. Tony Wilson and Mlle. Heloise have a splendid bounding net act. Miss Heloise is particularly good as a tumbler and her comedy antics are enjoyable. Soldier Tom Wilson and his company repeat their success of last week with The Sound of the Gong. The act shows a very realistic prize fight. Goldsmith & Hoppe have a good comedy musical act. The one who does the Hebrew has a good dialect and a real sense of comedy. The star feature of the bill is Tschernoff's dog and pony circus, not to forget the pigeons. Herr Tschernoff has trained his little animals to a high degree of efficiency and the beauty of his actors and the intelligence exhibited in their work gives an unusual value to the act. The little black pony, in particular, did his work with a colossal understanding. The usual moving picture selection, which concluded the show, was entertaining.

Pantages-Empire

A first-class show has been playing to crowded houses all week at the Empire. The Piccolo Midgets with their clever acrobatic feats and comedy work receive a generous share of applause. Walter H. Bedell and his company present a rural dramatic sketch, entitled Uncle David, and make good. Manning and Ford, up-to-date singers and dancers, do some first-class work. The comedy skit, O'Brien from Galway, by Earl and Bartlett, is full of new jokes. The Verdi Musical Four entertain with some difficult musical numbers. The Salome Dance, as an added feature, wins applause. A fine assortment of moving pictures is an enjoyable part of the program. Next week the bill will contain The Three Dumonds, Italian street singers; Golden Gate Quintet, singers and dancers; Thos. J. Keough and company in a comedy playlet, entitled The Ward Heeler; Goff Phillips, the real funny minstrel fellow; Prof. Brown and his troupe of trained dogs; the Raymond Duo, slackwire artists, and a change of motion pictures will complete the bill.

The Wigwam

A varied program is on tap at the Wigwam in the Mission this week, and good crowds have been enjoying it at every performance. Halliday and Curley present the military travesty, The Battle of Too Soon. Although this sketch has been seen in this city a number of times it never fails to draw a big bundle of laughs from the audience. The acrobatic end of the program is taken care of by Caron and Herbert, and their turn is first-class. Rentfrow and Jansen present a comedy sketch, The Second Mr. Fiddle, in which a dummy plays an important part. Chas. Williams, a ventriloquist, does not present anything new or novel, but his work is high class. James and Kitty Brady, the singing and talking comedians, merit their popularity. Earl Girdeller and company present a new Eastern dog act which is novel and entertaining. Connolly, Wenrich and Connolly, billed in a melange of mirth and melody, create a good deal of fun. Kresko and Fox, the prattling pals, and motion pictures complete the excellent bill. The bill next week will include the Two Les Theodores; Watson and Little; Harry and Alice Carver; Cotter and Boulden; The Musical Brandons; The Baker Troupe; Thalero's dog and pony circus; and Ross and Adams.

ORRAL HUMPHREY is spending a few days in Fresno, en route to Los Angeles.

The National

Manager Grauman of the National has a bill this week that pleases all classes of patrons at the popular Steiner street house. The three Van Diemens, aerial gymnasts, are one of the shining lights on the program. They execute movements of various dancers while hanging by the teeth to a wheel in mid air. Lewis McCord and his company present the ever popular sketch, Her Last Rehearsal. Although this playlet has been seen in this city twice before over the Orpheum circuit, it never fails to make a hit. Carlyle Moore and company present The Man's the Thing. The sketch gives a glimpse of life in England during the sixteenth century with a realistic duel scene. Luken's ponies in their wonderful animal act delight the children as well as the grown-ups. The Florenz Family of acrobats do a number of difficult feats. Zenith Keith, the dainty soubrette, is well received with her dancing and songs. James Polk certainly makes the banjo talk during his turn on the stage. Sylvester Strong, a coon shouter, and Marjory Barrett, a soubrette, complete the bill. The following will appear next week: Kirsten Marietta troupe; Luken's lions; Deaves' manikins; Newhoff and Phelps; Art Adair; and Joe Edmonds.

present The New Judge and are the feature of the programme. The company includes Jas. McGrath, Billy Jones, H. L. Rattenberry and Mrs. Harry Bernard, together with a Beauty Chorus and Pony Ballet. Others on the programme this week are Betty Schultz, the violinist; The O'Malleys in a clever dancing and singing act; Richter and Test, the odd comedians, and Rose Hill, a vocalist. Next week the following will be presented:

The Washington Square Theatre is the latest to fall into line and play moving pictures instead of vaudeville. The change, which takes place next Monday, tells its own story. The vaudeville bill this week consists of Jarvis and Martin; The Bernsteins; Flood and Hayes, and Kittie Kelly.

Clarence I. Norris, late of Norris & Rowe's Circus, takes out a dog and pony show in about six weeks. This will be a two-act show.

Will H. Armstrong, who, with his wife, Magdalene Holly, are so popular and successful as leading features at the Unique Theatre in Los Angeles, are not connected with any other team of a similar name. They have connection with the Armstrong Musical Comedy Co.

Vaudeville Notes

F. M. Clark of Cincinnati has secured a lease on Byde-a-Wyle Theatre, Long Beach, and will open it March 1 as a vaudeville house, using the Sullivan-Considine attractions.

News comes from San Jose that Emma Schell, who, with her husband, has exhibited two trained lions all over the world, has filed in Judge Richard's department of the Superior Court a suit for divorce, alleging that her husband has habitually practiced against her extreme cruelty and that last Tuesday night he drove her from their home on Moorpark avenue, locked her from the house, and forced her to stand for hours in the cold and rain in her scanty night clothing. The Court granted a temporary restraining order prohibiting the husband from disposing of the Moorpark avenue property, which they acquired a few months ago, while here on a trip exhibiting their lions. Mrs. Schell also demands all the property be given to her; that she be granted $250 per month alimony, and that $500 attorney's fees.

Humane Officer Reynolds on Feb. 22 ordered the discontinuance of the juvenile act given at the Orpheum Theatre, Los Angeles, by Freddie and Adele Astaire, the children being under the legal age in California. "The boy and girl," said Mrs. Astaire, "have been permitted to play in every other city, even in Oakland, where the same law is in operation. They are being educated for the stage and have their regular schooling in the ordinary English branches besides. Freddie is 13 and Adele is 11. But there seems to be no appeal, and the act had to close." Manager Clarence Drown secured Helen Goff to take the place of the children's act.

Jack Sutton's Van Die-mans

*This week at the National Theatre is the original Revolving Teeth act, and was seen at the Chutes in 1902, under the Orpheum management, booked by Archie Levy. Since that time several similar acts have sprung up, all claiming originality. Mr. Sutton is an old-timer in San Francisco. He was stage manager at the Orpheum back in 1888, and was also introduced in the Wild West show at Woodward Garden and Central Park. Since that time, he has visited Australia and many parts of the world—and says Howdy to all old-timers whom he may not meet while here.

Marian Murray Captures Millionaire's Son

Marian Murray, who impersonates the Gibson Girl in the sister act of the Murray Sisters, now playing the Orpheum time, has announced her engagement to Joseph Ghirardelli, son of the millionaire chocolate manufacturer of San Francisco. It is said that she had set March 10 as the date for their wedding, but in Los Angeles this week Miss Murray declared that she had not set a date for the ceremony. Miss Murray explained that as she is under contract for two years with a theatrical company she did not expect to wed soon. Mrs. J. L. Ghirardelli, mother of the prospective bridegroom, who is in Los Angeles on a visit, said Monday night: "I am sure there must be some mistake. It has been our understanding that the wedding is not to take place for perhaps a year. Miss Murray intends to go to her home in Chicago as soon as she finishes her engagement in Los Angeles, and it will be June at least before she returns to California. The wedding is not to take place until some time after her arrival here. There has been on opposition of any character to the proposed marriage. I am quite satisfied with my son's choice of a wife."

Jim Post, the Mascot and Theatrical Doctor

"Well, Jim, you've gone and done it again. I guess we'll have to call you the Theatrical Doctor for all house ailments that don't seem to be cured by the regular doses." And as we said this to the most popular Irish comedian in the West, as he sat "making up" in his dressing room at the Novelty Theatre in Oakland, he smiled and said, "Yes, it looks that way. I took the Jose Theatre in San Jose and made a live one out of it after all others had failed. Then I moved over to the Unique in the same city and packed them to the doors for five weeks. Then came the worst elephant of all, the Novelty in San Francisco. You all said, 'Here is where he dies.' But did he? Well, I guess not! Simply packed and jammed them in and you all know it. Now here I'm over at this house which you thought was good for one week more. Ha, ha! Have you heard about it? Of course you have. We are packing them to the doors and no mistake. Just tell the managers when they want a good, first-class attraction and one that will bring the change to the box office that they shouldn't forget that the old reliable is the only sure winner. In the future I will only do business with good, reliable, first-class managers, as I have no time to bother around the front of the house. Business is so good here at the Novelty in Oakland that here is a tribute I received from Tony Lubelski today: 'I stuck to this ship when everybody thought she was sinking, and she pretty nearly went under, but the life boat came along just in time, and you stay here a year.' I'm willing. Yes, I still have the Buty Korus and some pretty good first-class actors to support me. Here they are—clever members of a real show: James Post, J. Edw. Mathews, Joe Hayden, R. Clinton Montgomery, Guy Oakes, George Harris, May Ashley, Myrtle Alzora, Pearl Clow, Fritzze Guy, Juliet Mahr, Frances Wrenn, Nellie Harding, Grace Oaks, Lotus Moore, Jessica Orr." And then Jim was called to go to work and I heard a tremendous burst of applause at his entrance, there was no room to doubt (even if I had wished to) that here was an actor with a real following. It reminded me of the days of Charlie Reed, when that

Vaudeville Notes

Griffith Way writes The Dramatic Review from Seattle that his wife, Laura Hudson, who is being featured in The Feud, over the Orpheum time, is ill in a Seattle hospital with pneumonia, and consequently they have had to cancel their time.

Bessie Hunter has retired from the cast of The Man's the Thing, a stirring playlet being featured over the S. & C. time, with Carlyle Moore as the star. Miss Hunter has been playing the part of the barmaid during the time Miss Moore (Ethelynn Palmer) retired from the stage to present her lord and master with a bouncing boy.

Lewis McCord and company who present Her Last Rehearsal at the National this week, have a record which is hard to beat. Mr. McCord has played the part of the stage manager over five thousand times during the nine years he has used the skit. The McCord company have been seen in San Francisco twice before, both times over the Orpheum circuit. McCord goes to the Bell in Oakland next week and then plays at the Wigwam.

The Van Dieman troupe of aerial artists, now at the National, introduced the first revolving aerial wheel in this country. Jack Sutton, who is well known in the show business, brought the act from Australia in 1902. They played at the Chutes for the Orpheum company and have since toured the country a number of times. Their act of hanging by the teeth from a rapidly revolving wheel in mid air has been copied by many imitators.

The Lewis & Lake Musical Comedy Company are to play at Wheelman's Theatre, Reno, for an indefinite period, opening next week.

Mme. Eames Says Farewell In Metropolitan Opera House

Notable Scene At Singer's Last Appearance in La Tosca, Perhaps for All Time

Mme. Emma Eames said good-by last Monday in the Metropolitan Opera House, where one of the largest and most fashionable audiences of the season gathered to applaud the popular American singer as Tosca, one of her very best roles. And applaud it did, bringing Mme. Eames before the curtain half a dozen times after the first act and loading her down with flowers. This, however, was but a beginning. After the second act, which is La Tosca's greatest opportunity, and in which, by the way, Mme. Eames never sang more beautifully or acted with more dramatic sincerity, came the real demonstration of the evening. First with Mr. Scotti and then a dozen times alone Mme. Eames came before the curtain, while four ushers lined the footlights with cartloads of flowers. Pieces six feet high, under which two men staggered, made a barricade behind which the singer bowed and smiled and laughed and kissed her hands to the audience. When, finally, she was hemmed in on all sides by flowers so that there was no escape, Mme. Eames signalled for silence and said: "Before I go I want to thank you for all you have been to me. You have exacted of me always my best and have followed each step with appreciation and encouragement for eighteen years. If today I am an artist I must also thank you for having helped to make me one. Thank you also for the love you have given me. Now I go." An incident of the evening that won a special round of applause for Mme. Eames occurred in the second act when the singer extinguished a slight fire on Scarpia's supper table. Mr. Caruso was still indisposed, and placards in the lobby announced that his place as Cavaradossi would be taken by Mr. Martin. So an American soprano's admirable Tosca had an American tenor's Cavaradossi as counterpart, and a fine one, too. Mr. Martin's impassioned singing of the aria in the last act was one of the best things he has done this season. Mr. Scotti was again a Scarpia of sinister power, and Mr. Paterna was the old sacristan. Mr. Spetrino conducted. Mme. Eames will not return to the Metropolitan next season, in fact, she may never sing in opera again.

Spotlights

Manager Tom Considine's son, John Considine, of Seattle has passed the necessary examinations and will enter West Point on March 1.

One of the best plays put on by any local house this season is being offered to playgoers at the Novelty this week. It is called, "The New Magdalen," but it is the same production in which Florence Roberts scored a big triumph at the Barton, under the caption of "Zira." All the members of the Novelty company are doing splendid work in this piece. — Louis Thompson has established himself as a great favorite with the public, and his interpretation of the character of the Rev. Julian Gray is a really fine piece of work. Max Steinle as Horace Holmefcroft is excellent. Neva West is scoring a remarkable performance in her character of Mercy Merrick, the woman who was so sinned against, but who rose to such intellectual and moral heights that she won her place in the hearts of those around her. Louise Melrose takes the part of Lady Janet Roy with her usual pleasing effect, and Georgie Woodthorpe makes a most acceptable Grace Roseberry. — Fresno Republican.

James Neill surprised even his greatest admirers last night by giving a highly finished and artistic character study of the part of David Harum in the dramatization of Westcott's novel of that name. If Mr. Neill were well advised he would stick to such roles for in none is he seen to such advantage, as he has proved by his Myles O'Hara in The Jilt and much more emphatically last night as David Harum. It was a carefully thought-out part and yet played with refreshing spontaneity and complete naturalness. His chuckling laugh, when, conscious of his own rectitude, he is unjustly accused, especially by the little spitfire Mary Blake, was absolutely contagious, and one smiled with him in sympathy and almost became fellow-conspirators in his beneficent plots for the well-being of all and sundry, showing his humanness only in his love of getting the best in a horse deal. His make-up was as artistic as his portrayal, while his facial play was genuine comedy. Mr. Neill showed a vein of pathos which was none the less effective because concealed behind a certain gruffness of manner. It probably gained by that. Mr. Neill was at his best when telling of the death of his boy and in the scene in which he hands over the paid-off mortgage to the widow of the man who had taken him when a small lad to the circus—the first kind action he had experienced in all his young life. It was a most affecting piece of acting and at the conclusion won for him a hearty outburst of applause. Mr. Neill has been happy in his selection of a play in which to say good-bye to his many friends in Winnipeg. They will not soon forget his undoubtedly fine work as David Harum. Charles Arthur as John Lennox, and Elsie Esmond as Mary Blake make a delightful pair of young lovers, while Aunt Polly is given a life-like representation by Engel Sumner. — Winnipeg Free Press, Feb. 9.

So great has been the success of Klaw & Erlanger's great Biblical production, Ben-Hur, on the Pacific Coast, that negotiations have been opened for the play to run for a long season at the Moore Theatre, Seattle, during the Alaska-Yukon Exposition next year. This is the third trip of the play to the Coast. If anything, Ben-Hur is a bigger play today than it was on the night of its first production. This season the surprise and gratification of the management lies in the interest taken in the play by the school children of America. Klaw & Erlanger are not only filling their houses at present, but are educating the children of the United States to expect nothing but the best and biggest productions under the firm's name.

Lillian Russell in Wildfire, the Hobart and Broadhurst comedy, in which she clinched her right to the title of Princess of Comediennes, rejecting that of Queen of Comic Opera, will start next week on her Pacific Coast tour, traveling in her private car until June 14. Miss Russell will be seen in every city of importance on the Pacific Coast from San Diego to Vancouver. Wildfire is running this year like its name. The Widow's Might, by Edmund Day, author of the Round Up, is the play which Klaw & Erlanger and Joseph Brooks have in preparation for her for next season.

During his two weeks' engagement at the Van Ness, starting March 29, Richard Carle will begin active rehearsals for his new musical comedy, The Hurdy Gurdy Girl, in which he will begin a summer run at the Colonial Theatre in Chicago on May 30. When this piece begins, Mr. Carle will have two musical comedies on the Chicago boards, as The Boy and the Girl, another of his pieces, begins a ten weeks' stay at the Whitney Theatre on March 14. Mr. Carle and his partner, Charles Marks, have already engaged most of the company for the latter play, among the principals being Edward Garvie, Toby Lyons, Harriett Standing and Jeanne Towler. The author-comedian will be seen in only one of his musical comedies in San Francisco—Mary's Lamb. He had been asked to revive The Tenderfoot, but he will be too busy on his new plays, and, besides, the expense of providing extra scenery will be too great. Cecilia Rhoda, who is with Mr. Carle in Mary's Lamb, will also have a part in The Hurdy Gurdy Girl.

Easter Monday, April 12, has been determined upon as the date for producing Peter Pan at the Valencia Theatre. Barrie's delightful fantasy will be staged upon the sumptuous scale for which the Valencia is noted, and the cast will be made up of the best artists obtainable.

No more catchy and tuneful music has been written for an American song play than that furnished by Silvio Hein for Edwin Milton Royle's play, Marrying Mary, which will follow Babes in Toyland at the American Theatre, with Florence Gear and a large singing company. From the opening waltz, a waltz, by the way, as popular and full of rhythm as the famous Merry Widow waltz, to the final measures, when Marrying Mary Montgomery is whirled into the arms of her true love, the songs, duos, sextets and choruses are written for the purpose of entertainment. Full of simple gallantry, they may well be likened to the graceful and charming melodic romances of the best of the modern school. They are sprightly, graceful and gay.

With the Fargo opera house packed to the doors Feb. 12, a majority of the audience school children and women, George A. Hadley, engineer at the theatre, dashed from the stage through the audience, calling for Chief Sutherland of the fire department. In an instant the crowd was a veritable mob, with every one cramming for the exit. Cries of "Fire!" were all that could be heard. Cooler heads prevailed until a pianist was rushed to the instrument on the stage and America was played. A chorus of voices on the stage took up the air and in a moment the audience joined and order was restored again. No one was seriously injured.

Without legitimate excuse, the Sandusky-Lawrence Company has canceled the time held for it at the Seattle Theatre in order to play some California time which presented itself. Managers Russell & Drew have therefore engaged a stock company which will be in every way stronger than the Del Lawrence organization, and which will open, following the Pollards, to hold the dressing rooms at the Seattle until, eight weeks later, Selma Herman and the permanent stock company arrives from New York. Heading the company which will open at the Seattle week after next are Noel Travers and Virginia Thornton, both of whom are well known here. Travers appeared here very recently at the Lois, playing the title role in Strongheart. He also played a long and successful stock engagement at the Savoy in Tacoma last fall. Blanche Bryant and William L. Thorne have also been spoken of as members of the company. The opening bill is to be A Race Across the Continent. This will be followed by King and Queen of Gamblers and other of Al Wood's pictorial and sensational modern offerings. — Seattle Argus.

A Blast From the Pulpit

New York, February 7.—"The stage is worse today than it was in the days of paganism," said Archbishop Farley, in his sermon in St. Patrick's Cathedral today. The Archbishop said: "The old preachers wanted us to believe that we must live undefiled to be saved. All about us we have the men and women who are setting evil examples. Men hoary with age go to the public places and to the theatres in shamelessness and they bring with them youngsters who cannot escape corruption. We see today men and women—old men and old women—who ought to know better, bringing the young to these orgies of obscenity." If the Archbishop is quoted correctly he ought to wind up in the home for foolish old men.

Klaw & Erlanger's production of The Right of Way is to be seen at the Van Ness Theatre in the near future. Guy Standing and Theodore Roberts play the leading roles. Lillian Russell, Ethel Barrymore and Billie Burke are some of the feminine stars to appear at the Van Ness in the near future.

J. J. Gottlob Signs Some "Begin" Shows

Word comes from New York that J. J. Gottlob of the Van Ness Theatre management has, during his visit there, captured for early bookings at his playhouse some of the very best attractions to be had. He has been able to secure no less than twelve to fill the sixteen weeks following the first of March. Possibly the most important engagement will be that of Alla Nazimova, who, since Henry Miller discovered her three years ago, has developed into a star of the first magnitude. Since she became an English-speaking actress—a feat she accomplished in a remarkably short time—she has done more to popularize the Ibsen plays than any one other exponent of them. She will be seen here in A Doll's House, Hedda Gabler, and Robert Bracco's Comtesse Coquette. Three weeks of the Van Ness time will be devoted in succession to Clyde Fitch's Girls; Lillian Russell in Wildfire, and Klaw & Erlanger's production of The Right of Way, with Theodore Roberts, Guy Standing and May Buckley in the leading roles. Lulu Glaser is to make a trip to the Coast, as are also Ethel Barrymore, Billie Burke, John Drew, Richard Carle, N. C. Goodwin and Lew Fields.

Alcazar Theatre

With magnetism undiminished, The Rose of the Rancho will be started on its third consecutive week next Monday evening at the Alcazar. It promises to break the long-run record of the Sutter Street playhouse, for the demand for seats is hardly less pressing today than it was a fortnight ago. Many of the orders come from out of town. A delegation of fifty-three came down from Sacramento to witness the performance last Thursday evening, and seats, single and en block, have been reserved for folk residing as far distant as Nevada. The fact that The Rose will never be seen elsewhere in Northern California than at the Alcazar may have something to do with our country cousins flocking to town to see it.

Valencia Theatre

Although William Gillette's always interesting war drama, Secret Service, could easily run for another week, the last performances will be given this Sunday afternoon and evening and on Monday night The Fatal Card, by Haddon Chambers and B. C. Stephenson, will be revived on an elaborate scale. The scenes are laid in Western America and England. There is much comedy relief to lighten up the more somber scenes of the play, supplied by Harry Burgess, a young London cockney, and his sweetheart. Mace Greenleaf, as Gerald Austen, will make an ideal hero, and Darrell Standing, who has been devoting his entire time of late to staging the Valencia productions, will reappear as Marrable, and Thomas Lowell will play Jim Dixon, his confederate. Thomas MacLarnie will again show his versatility by assuming the amusing role of Burgess, and Charles Dow Clark, who has had two consecutive weeks of negro characters, will blossom forth as Terence O'Flynn. Robert Homans will be Austen's father, and Gerald Harcourt, George B. Baldwin, Jr., Arling Alcine, William Wolbert and Lee Millar will play the rest of the important male roles. Pretty Beatrice Nichols, who has made such a hit as Caroline Mitford in Secret Service, will play the important part of Margaret, and Grace Travers will be Mercedes, the hostess of the Rising Star in Colorado, and Lillian Andrews will have another capital character part in Penelope Austen, her aunt.

The Orpheum

The bill at the Orpheum next week is rich in novelty. Harry Foy and Florence Clark will make their reappearance and present a new eccentricity called The Spring of Youth. Foy will always be remembered as "The man who ate the goldfish." For The Spring of Youth they carry a special set of apparatus, for it is the most important production they have yet attempted. Bowers, Walter and Crocker, The Three Rubes, will introduce an entirely novel act. Attired as backwoods farmers, they go through a routine of reels and jigs and conclude with an acrobatic contest which never fails to provoke roars of laughter. Agnes Mahr, the American dancer, will present her creation, The American Tommy Atkins. She is assisted by Florence Mahr, and she introduces a number of dances that are chic, novel and intricate. Jack Connelly and Margaret Webb will be responsible for what they call a cyclone of comedy, melody and action. Mr. Connelly is a pianist of the acrobatic order and Miss Webb excels as a vocalist. With specially devised electrical and mechanical effects, they conclude their performance with a veritable cyclone which clears everything before it excepting the two artists on the stage. Lloyd Scott, traveler and lecturer, will deliver a brief travel talk on Egypt, illustrated by views, moving pictures and panoramas, showing the Nile, the pyramids and other historic places in the land of the Pharaohs. Dick Crolius, who recently scored a great hit in the race track incident, Shorty, will return for next week only, which will be the last of Frank Nelson and company, Goldsmith and Hoppe and Jwan Tschernoff's marvelously trained ponies and dogs.

Princess Theatre

Kolb and Dill are in their last week at the Princess Theatre, and are drawing packed houses in Playing the Ponies. The musical comedy season will open next Monday evening with a production of Harry B. Smith's and Ludwig Englander's New York Casino success, The Rounders. The cast will include May Boley, Frank Moulán, Helen Darling, Zoe Barnett, Ethel Du Fre Houston, Fred Mace, James Stevens, Bud Ross, Bert Phoenix and others. A special feature will be the chorus of forty. Beautiful and elaborate costumes and scenery have been specially prepared.

one of the wittiest and most entertaining musical successes of the past decade, will begin an engagement limited to one week. It was making a tremendous success in this city at the Columbia Theatre three years ago, when the fire closed that and every other place of amusement in San Francisco. The entire New York production and a company with a carefully selected cast of twenty principals, headed by Eddie Redway and Gene Ormond and a capable chorus of twenty people, comes here under the personal direction of Julian Mitchell, America's foremost producer of unique stage effects. In the staging of Toyland, Mr. Mitchell has even surpassed his previous great successes. He considers this, his best effort, by far the most notable artistic achievement in the matter of effective stage pictures for which he is responsible. Among the musical numbers that are best liked and which are in the true Herbert style, are Toyland, I Can't Do That Sum, My Castle in Spain, Don't Cry, Bopeep, Beatrice Barefacts, and many others that redound to the credit of the composer. Marrying Mary, Edwin Milton Royle's clever musical play, with Florence Gear in the titular role, will follow Babes in Toyland at the American.

JACK LEDWIDGE, master carpenter at the Van Ness Theatre, left on Monday for New York. He will spend a couple of months in the East looking for ideas to be used in the new Columbia Theatre, which will be opened some time next November.

Won't Be Billed As "Sir Henry's Son"

Lawrence Irving, making with his wife, Mabel Hackney, his American debut in vaudeville, responded to a curtain call in the Orpheum Theatre, Boston, last week, and objected to being advertised as the son of Sir Henry Irving. He also stated that he feels that his own role in the playlet is overshadowed by the work of his talented wife. This statement, gallant from him, would be somewhat harsh for the critic to observe. It may be said, however, that the audience was delighted with Miss Hackney. The playlet, The King and the Vagabond, is Mr. Irving's own adaptation of Theodore de Banville's French classic.

Gringore. It relates an adventure between a poet and Louis XII. In the curtain speech Mr. Irving referred to the previous appearances both of himself and his better half, as he smiled at her. This was in Sir Henry Irving's company, when Miss Hackney played Portia. He said it is very displeasing to him to be advertised as Sir Henry's son, and said he believes his father would not like to have his name posted around on the billboards to advertise his son.

at the Plaza, also a recent Shubert acquisition. Best seats will be sold for $1.50. The Shuberts now control a Greater New York circuit, apart from their Broadway theatres. After a production has been offered at one of their Broadway houses, they are now able to book it at the West End, the Metropolis, the Yorkville, the New German—to be known as the Plaza—and the Grand Opera House, Brooklyn.

Following Lillian Russell at the Van Ness Theatre will be seen Klaw & Erlanger's elaborate production of The Right of Way, with Guy Standing and Theodore Roberts in the star roles. This is the dramatization of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, which has proven a most successful attraction throughout the East.

Allan Curtiss and his musical comedy company opened at the Novelty Grand in Reno last Monday for an indefinite stay.

W. J. Butler of Marshfield, Ore., is negotiating for a stock for Marshfield.

Personals

MILDRED FITZGERALD joins the Girton stock in Eureka next week.

WHITAKER RAY is this year ahead of the great Shubert success—Girls.

THOMAS HEFFRON has joined the Willard Mack stock in Salt Lake City.

BLANCHE STODDARD closes with the Valencia Stock on April 11th. She is in need of a long rest.

CHARLES GUNN has signed to play leads for Ed Redmond, the season opening in Fresno at the Empire next week.

CARL HINCKLEY, who has been playing characters with the Lois stock of Seattle, has retired from the company.

FRANK SHERIDAN, who originated the role of the sea captain in Paid in Full, is a member of Lillian Russell's company.

MANAGER ALEX PANTAGES has let a contract for a $25,000 home at Thirty-sixth Avenue and Madison Street, Seattle, overlooking the lakes.

HOWARD NUGENT, after having paid that visit to Vancouver, is back on the Rialto and suggests his eligibility for a good stock or combination.

C. F. O'Neil, a blind man of Placerville, has leased the Swigart Opera House of that place, playing combinations with a moving picture show in between.

SIEBERT AND LINDLEY closed with the Brackett-Siebert company last Saturday night and left immediately for Spokane to join the Jessie Shirley company.

LILLIAN HAYWARDS last Wednesday was seen in Chico in a vaudeville entertainment, under the auspices of Rebekah Degree, I. O. O. F., at the Majestic Theatre.

WHEN William Desmond opens at the Valencia Theatre as leading man on October 25th for a year's straight engagement, A. Byron Beasley will become leading man at the Burbank Theatre, Los Angeles. This was decided last Saturday, when Walter Hoff Seeley arrived in Los Angeles from this city.

Landers Stevens and Georgie Cooper Return to Work and Oakland Gives Them an Ovation

Owing to the fact that the seating capacity of the Macdonough was inadequate to meet the requirements of all those who desired to see Kolb and Dill in Playing the Ponies last week, the management wisely decided to have the same play run for a longer period, and although this is the second week, the house is filled at every performance and the size of the audiences show no decrease whatever. Kolb and Dill, Adele Rafter, Albert Duncan, Blossom Seeley, and even the lesser lights receive nightly ovations. Wiener and Schnitzel is to follow. Landers Stevens and Georgie Cooper returned from their Eastern trip and made their reappearance in The Walls of Jericho at Ye Liberty. The play is well presented and thoroughly enjoyed, but is only a secondary feature to the reception tendered these two popular people. The applause that greeted them at their first appearance Monday evening was deafening and they were literally covered with an enormous array of beautiful floral offerings. Mr. Stevens was overcome with the spontaneous outburst of enthusiasm and, although nervous, responded with a nicely worded speech. The performance itself is well worth seeing and contains everything that makes a play of this kind interesting. The plot is well defined, the characters true to life, and, best of all, the lines are bright and snappy and the climaxes stirring. Landers Stevens and Isabelle Fletcher in the principal roles give excellent performances and set a fine example to the balance of the cast. E. L. Bennison looked and acted the rough miner to perfection, and the comedy work of George Webster was greatly appreciated. George Friend, Henry Shumer and Elmer Booth sustained their roles in a manner that took well with the audience and the performances of Lillian Elliott, Estelle Warfield and Helene Lackaye were pleasing and artistic. The stage settings and scenic effects are very elaborate and are evidences of the rare skill and judgment of Milton Stallard, Chas. Blair and Grace Wishaar, Bishop's competent crew behind the scenes. George Ade's The College Widow is the next attraction. At the Orpheum it is the same old story of a fine bill and packed houses, in fact there is not a weak number on this week's program. Frank Nelson and company; Jwan Tschernoff's circus; Nonette, Goldsmith and Hoppe; Imro

Fox; Amoros Sisters; Tony Wilson; and Mlle. Heloise and Soldier Wilson in The Sound of the Gong. At the Novelty, James Post and his Buty Korus have changed their bill and are introducing a new musical comedy entitled Two of a Kind. The show is good and business satisfactory. The Bell is giving their usual fine attraction and are giving three performances daily. Katherine Mulkins, a well-known Eastern actress who played prominent parts in Checkers and The Powers That Be, has signed to play ingenue characters with Bishop's players. Josef Lhevinne, the great Russian pianist will give a concert at Ye Liberty, 12.

L. SCHEELINE.

Spotlights

Sydney Booth, who plays the role of the automobile enthusiast in Lillian Russell's production of Wildfire, is the last of the famous Booth family. He is a son of Junius Brutus Booth, Jr.

The Pollard Opera Company, which reaches the Coast in May from Australia, will be composed of adults in place of the children who have been coming here for years.

The Half Breed, a stirring melodrama of Indian life in Arizona, and in which Mace Greenleaf made the hit of his career during a long run of the original production in Los Angeles, will be staged for the first time in this city at the Valencia Theatre, following Out of the Fold. The Half Breed is the joint work of Harry Cottrell and Oliver Morosco.

It is announced that the Russian actress, Mme. Alla Nazimova, has arranged to bring all her leading successes to this city for presentation during her two weeks' engagement at the Van Ness Theatre. At first it was intended to offer only three plays, but the list now includes Ibsen's trio, A Doll's House, The Master Builder and Hedda Gabler; Robert Bracco's Comtesse Coquette and Owen Johnson's The Comet.

The Shuberts last week signed the final papers whereby they will book all the attractions for two more New York theatres, the Metropolis and the Yorkville, beginning next Autumn. The Yorkville and the Metropolis will be conducted on the same plan which has been so successful at the West End, and which is also to be followed FERRIS HARTMAN concludes his Los Angeles season on May 1st. On the following day, Murray and Mack open for a summer season in a repertoire of their old-time successes.

LONNIE NELSON, who fractured two of the small bones in an ankle recently while running up stairs, is fast recovering and is considering an offer with a well-known company.

WILLIS BASS, ahead of the Ellefords, will sail on Saturday for Honolulu to pave the way for the annual engagement of this popular organization. Mrs. Bass will accompany him.

THE Valencia Theatre management has loaned Manager Harry Bishop of Ye Liberty Playhouse, Oakland, Miss Grace Travers, who will appear in The College Widow next week as the athletic girl.

EDMUND DAY, author of The Round-Up, is now in Los Angeles and will spend the next two or three months there, resting from recent hard work. Mr. Day will do much work on two new plays he has in course of preparation.

DAN SULLY, one of the very few old-time comedians who are always welcome in San Francisco, will appear at the American Theatre the latter part of the month in his latest success, The Matchmaker. Mr. Sully belongs to a school peculiarly his own and is sure of a warm welcome here.

George Broadhurst Has Scored Another Play Success in Los Angeles

BELASCO—The Dollar Mark is a big success at the Belasco Theatre this week. The play was given its first production on any stage Monday night, and its author, Mr. Broadhurst, is much pleased with the way his "new American play" is handled by Mr. Blackwood's company. The story of The Dollar Mark concerns a young mining engineer who owns an unusually rich copper mine in Montana. Mr. Broadhurst has obviously modeled this young mine-owner after Augustus Heinze. Introduced in the first act are president of the Consolidated, undoubtedly a stage duplicate of H. H. Rogers, and a number of other personages who continue throughout the four acts of the play. There is introduced at the very outset of the play a strong love interest, which centers around the young sister of a New York broker. She is sought in marriage by the president of the Consolidated, and by the young Montana mine owner. Of course, the young man wins out, and thereby not only must encounter the business enmity of the president of the Consolidated, but his personal hatred as well. The story of The Dollar Mark is keenly absorbing, and its dramatic moments are powerful and intense. There is a strong vein of comedy running through the play, supplied by the ministerially inclined young son of one of the directors (obviously modeled after John D. Rockefeller, Jr.) and the son of the president of the Consolidated. Lewis S. Stone gives a finished and convincing characterization of Gresham, the man who is making the fight for the right and playing the game strictly according to the rules. David M. Hartford appears for the first time with the Belasco Company as Baylis. Miss Oakley, who is appearing for the last time with the company, gives a satisfying portrayal of the part of Alice Chandler, although the part does not offer opportunity for any very strong acting. Beatrice Noyes is excellent as the manicure lady. DeWitt C. Jennings has a fine character comedy part as Anthony Martin, Gresham's partner. Howard Scott as William Stoneman (the "John D., Jr." of the play) is fine. Adele Farrington returns to the company in the role of Mrs. Chandler, wife of a New York broker. Every part is well done and the staging is admirable. MASON—The Right of Way is a masterful drama in the hands of a very good company. The story of this play is too well known to require repetition. Eugene W. Presbrey's dramatic version of Sir Gilbert Parker's greatest novel is even more satisfying than the book itself because the morbid tragedy of the story's ending has been eliminated, and a hope of future happiness substituted. Guy Standing, as Steele, the dissolute lawyer, and Theodore Roberts as Portugais, the French-Canadian "habitant," give two stage characterizations not often excelled. Evelyn Walls as Paulette Du Bois does some very fine acting and is by far the most clever woman in the cast. The staging is excellent, and the cast, though a large one, is a most satisfactory production. ORPHEUM—The headliner at the Orpheum this week is Israel Zangwill's play, The Never, Never Land. It is a somewhat difficult proposition to make a drama in such a condensed form that it can be given in twenty minutes, the time allowed for one act on a vaudeville stage. This Mr. Zangwill has accomplished, and the result is most pleasing. The sketch is exceedingly strong in its dramatic workmanship, and in its phrasing shows Zangwill at his best. Helen Grantly is very good in the leading feminine role, and J. M. Colville and Harry Hilliard both do good work in their respective parts. Mr. Crolius, in his sketch, Shorty, is exceedingly good and he is surrounded by able assistants. The Farrell-Taylor Company in black-face farce furnish another good number. Holding over from last week are Seldom's Venus, Byron and Langdon and Johnny McVeigh and his college girls; new motion pictures complete the bill. BURBANK—Peter Pan continues to draw the packed houses at the Burbank this week that marked the first week of its presentation by Mr. Morosco's able stock company. A phenomenal run of the play is looked for, every performance for the week being sold out. MAJESTIC—The Gingerbread Men, at the Majestic Theatre this week is full of bright, pretty music, presented by a good-looking chorus and able principals. What more could be desired? This piece has lost none of its charm since it was seen here a year ago at the Los Angeles Theatre. Many familiar faces are seen in the cast. It has a pretty, fantastic little story and a superabundance of good comedy, and, as its characters are particularly interesting, it never fails to please its auditors. The personnel of the company includes such clever people as Chas. J. McCowan, Herbert Salinger, Maurice Holden, Fred J. Nice, Ross Snow, Adele Archer, Georgia Campbell, Lola Rennard and Rose Murray, all of whom do excellent work. GRAND—There is some exceptionally clever comedy in Olivette, this week at the Grand. Ferris Hartman is great. His make-up and interpretation of the silly foster brother to the Duke of Ifo, could not be improved. Christine Nielsen makes the most of every opportunity in the role of the countess and renders several excellent solos. Walter de Leon provides an abundance of foolery and sings some new and catchy songs. Mr. Walsh, the new member of the company, has a good natural voice and a heartily manly way of handling it. The costuming is elaborate, and the work of the chorus is well worth the applause it receives. AUDITORIUM—Manager Crawford retains Babes in the Wood for a second week at the Auditorium. The performance "is now running with all the smoothness of a metropolitan show," if the statements of the prolific P. A. of the house may be quoted. EMPIRE—The Empire Theatre, under the management of Walter J. Fulkerson, presents this week Fay Caranza, operatic vocalist; Rentfrow and Jansen, in The Second Mr. Fiddle; Walter Perry, comedian, and the stock company in a one-act farce-comedy by Will M. Hall, entitled Solomon's Finish. FISCHER'S—The fads and foibles of Western stock salesmen as seen through the spectacles of transient visitors in Los Angeles and Southern California furnish much of the humor in Are You a Tourist?, at Fischer's Theatre this week. The piece, an original comedy by Chas. Alphin, Herr Fischer's producer, deals with the operations of a broker in the placing of wildcat mining stocks. Mr. Alphin has provided several new and original songs for the piece, notably When the Old Moon's Asleep in the New Moon's Arms, Sweet Katherine, My Little Indian Maid, Dear Old Philadelphia, and a quartette by the men of the company, Nursery Rhymes. Dot Raymond, Ben Dillon, Tracy McDermott, Max Bloom, Nellie Montgomery, Frank Vack and Pearl Jardiere are all suitably cast in Are You a Tourist?

UNIQUE—College Days is the current sketch at the Unique. The cast includes Geo. Rehn, Lillian Sutherland, Will Armstrong, Will H. Coyne, Miss Darragh, Rose Rehn, Jack Curtis. The piece is a breezy burlesque comedy and is as full of good laughs as any piece that producer Rehn has yet put on. WALKER'S—The programme at the Walker Theatre this week is a particularly good one. The headline attraction is the Dempseys, in psychic phenomena. They call their act Psychomancy, and do tests in telepathy and second sight. Other numbers on the bill are Earl Gerdeller and his acrobatic dogs; Kawana, Japanese juggler; Elma Elwood, soubrette; Walter Berlin, quick change artist; McCloud and Melville, song and dance performers, and Joseph Manley, singer of illustrated songs. New motion pictures conclude a most satisfactory bill. NOTES ABOUT TOWN—Next week Frank Blair will succeed Mr. Rehn as producer at the Unique. Mr. Rehn has closed a contract with a San Diego Playhouse and expects to open with a stock company in a few weeks. Elsie Esmond and Robert Morris, her husband, are soon to return to the Burbank, and this news will be received with much joy by their many friends. Miss Esmond had a great deal of praise for her fine work at Winnipeg. Florence Leslie, the well-known instructor of dancing and the ballet of the Auditorium, will sever her connection with the theatre at the close of Uncle Tom's Cabin, taking a much-needed rest, prior to her opening in a similar capacity under the management of John H. Blackwood. Miss Leslie will be much missed by the patrons of the Auditorium. Francis Haggerty, manager of the Los Angeles Theatre, with a number of managers of vaudeville houses here and in the surrounding territory, formed last week what is known as the Southern California Vaudeville Circuit. This embraces the Chutes and the Regal Theatres and one other in this city, and similar houses at Pasadena, Long Beach, Redondo, San Bernardino, Redlands, Riverside and San Diego. "This is to be in no sense a trust," said Mr. Haggerty, "but simply a co-operative organization so that better acts, and new faces can be readily secured. By working in harmony, these theatres will be enabled to offer performers ten or twenty weeks continuous engagement, which will be an advantage in every way." Another meeting will be held at the Regal Theatre on Tuesday, when the organization will be perfected. LOS ANGELES—The current bill at the Los Angeles Theatre is made up of seven new acts, the extra turn taking the place of the usual motion picture, which is omitted. A novel and attractive number is provided by Henry and Alice Carver, the man an equilibrist and the woman a sharp-shooter. Halliday and Curley, last seen here a few months ago at the Orpheum, retain their old sketch, a burlesque on the ever-popular "war play," entitled The Battle of Too Soon. The playlet is ridiculously funny and many of its jokes are so bad that they're good. Carson brothers offer one of the best two-man acrobatic stunts seen at a local theatre in a long time. C. W. Williams contributes to the bill an old-fashioned ventriloquial act. Other performers on the programme are Rose Stevens, prima donna soprano; Komaro, in a comedy wire act, and Connelly, Wenrich and Connelly, in a singing and dancing number. C. M. EMERY.

Marie Dressler a London Manager

On Saturday evening, Feb. 27th, Marie Dressler inaugurated her lease of the Aldwych Theatre, London, Eng., with the production of two musical pieces by Edgar Smith and Maurice Levi, the first entitled Philocæna, in which Miss Dressler appeared as a grown up enfant terrible, and the second, The Collettees, being a two-act travesty of The College Widow.

New York, March 7.—Marie Doro was The Richest Girl in the Criterion Theatre last week. She was the star in the latest play by Paul Gavault and Michael Morton. It was the first time in New York of this farcical play—so it is called on the bills—and it was favorably received and applause was bestowed upon the principals, particularly upon the star. Miss Doro literally came upon the scene with a bang. This is no exaggeration, for the tire of her stage automobile burst just that way. And that's when all the complications began. She was, in the play, mind you, the daughter of a chocolate king, and she had so much money that she didn't know what to do. So she made everybody else do what they didn't want to do. And that afforded amusement for the audience. In the end love overcame all the obstacles, chocolate, millions and even a desire to go into a convent, for when the final curtain falls about every eligible person you've been introduced to in the preceding acts is engaged to be married. What more would you? Miss Doro was very cunning and exceedingly pretty as the vixenish chocolate girl. She used her eyes in a way that made you admire her very much. And in her one serious, sentimental moment, at the close of the third act, she was winsome. Orrin Johnson was the young man whose destiny was upset by the tire blowout and the chocolate girl, and he acted with a great deal of spirit. His friend, an ambitious artist, was well played by Frederic Eric, while Louis Massen acted the part of the chocolate king convincingly. Then there was Anne Meredith, the girl who fainted so frequently and successfully, to say nothing of the excitable Viscountess Gaston, admirably portrayed by Fred Tiden. All the others concerned are in line for praise. So The Richest Girl proved to be a very pleasant evening's entertainment. There's nothing in it to offend you and no problem to make you frown yourself old before your time, and some of the laughs may smooth out a few wrinkles—who knows?

For the last week of his engagement at the Academy of Music, David Warfield last Monday appeared as Wes' Bigelow in A Grand Army Man, a revival of which has been long delayed because of his audience's insistence upon The Music Master. The play, written by Pauline Phelps and Marion Short, served to dedicate the Stuyvesant Theatre a year ago, and it is familiar because of its long run. Its central character of a kindly and sympathetic and generous veteran of the Civil War, who is also a stage driver in a Western town, reveals Mr. Warfield in a homely impersonation filled with tenderness, pathos and nobility of nature. The cast for the revival proved to be the same as before. The big theatre was filled, as it has been on every night of Mr. Warfield's engagement. * * * Meyer & Son was presented last week for the first time at the Garden Theatre, and from the hearty applause at the close of each of the three acts, it seemed that the large audience admired and enjoyed the play. Jew and Gentile may admire and respect each other, but there the line is drawn.—Jacob Strauss. Are we Jews to live apart from our fellow men forever?—Max Meyer. Of the Trinity our worship one was a Jew.—Nathan Meyer. These quotations from the play, which touches on intermarriage between the races—and that is its motif—serve to give a idea of the general scheme which Thomas Addison, the author, has in view. That it interested those who witnessed it is certain; it will continue to draw good houses. It is worth seeing. William Humphrey as Nathan Meyer perhaps carried off the major part of the applause. His work was good, and he seldom failed to interpret his lines correctly. Next in the favor of the audience came Charles Morrison, who as Peter Mulvey, a politician, was all that could be asked. Irene Moore, as Doris Gray, with whom Max Meyer is in love, was pretty and pleasing, as was Ethel Browning. George Staley as Major Russell Gray gave satisfaction. The entire cast fitted well into the play, and all received recognition. There were several curtain calls and Mr. Addison was forced to make a speech. The problem is not settled, but is left in status quo, with the Jew father rather opposing intermarriage and the Gentile father favoring it. * * * Lots of things happen in the course of the new play, A Woman of Impulse, by Louis Ansbacher, in which Kathryn Kidder, after a long absence from the New York stage, appeared last Monday in the Herald Square Theatre, reopening that playhouse. In the third act, a gentleman upon villainy intent climbs into a woman's bedchamber, gets stabbed by the woman and then killed by an outraged husband, who finishes the job. For fear that matters might become too doleful, a comic coroner is brought post haste. All the characters in the play tell their stories to him, after which he announces that as the deceased was, according to all accounts, a villain of the deepest dye and deserved even more than he got, he would call the thing an accident, and so spare an aristocratic family's feelings. This extraordinary decision was received with a burst of laughter and applause from the large audience. Miss Kidder as the woman of impulse plays the part of a great but erratic singer, whose aristocratic husband has a hard time of it. A visit to the ancestral hall is a rank failure, when, Magdalen-like, she outrages the petty conventions of her surroundings and stirs up a hornets' nest. The tragedy above mentioned follows. In both comedy and tragedy Miss Kidder plays with intelligence and force. Some good work was done by the supporting cast, in which Jane Marbury, Cuyler Hastings, Charles Wyngate and Charles Rowan worked hard and conscientiously. Miss Kidder was recalled many times at the close of the different acts, and after the coroner's scene Mr. Ansbacher thanked the audience upon behalf of his wife (Miss Kidder) and said that he and every one else concerned felt much encouraged. * * * Selene Johnson, Louise Closser Hale, Frank Gilmore, Lumsdon Hare, Alfred Hickman and Fritz Williams will appear with Dorothy Donnelly in Henry James's comedy, Disengaged, which is to be given for the first time on any stage on Thursday afternoon, March 11, at the Hudson Theatre, for the benefit of St. Andrew's Convalescent Hospital. * * * Liebler & Co. have engaged Eva Vincent for the part of Mrs. Jeremiah Fogarty in The Head of the House, the new Townsend-O'Malley comedy of New York life in which Ada Lewis starts her starring tour shortly. Mrs. Fogarty is the wife of a district leader—played by John W. Ransone—and has many opportunities for broad comedy. * * * Good old Trovatore, that operatic warhorse that has served so many years, was brought out last week in the Manhattan for the first time this season. It was a rousing performance, with Mr. Zennatello singing his best as Manrico and Mme. Agostinelli doing the same as Leonora. Miss Gerville-Reache sang the part of Azucena and made much of the stirring music allotted the role. Mr. Sammarco was excellent as Di Luna. Giuseppe Sturani, the leader of the Philadelphia contingent of these opera forces, conducted the work with effective swing. There was a big audience and lots of applause for the singers. * * * The management of the Metropolitan Opera House announced last week that it had engaged an entirely separate company of French singers for the performance of opera comique next season at the Metropolitan and the New Theatre. This is the announcement: "The Metropolitan Opera Company has completed arrangements for the engagement next season of a company of French artists, in addition to the present organization of singers, for the operas of the Italian and German repertory. The French company will be employed in the presentation of operas of the type that figures in the repertory of the Opera Comique in Paris. The operas that may appropriately be given on the large stage of the Metropolitan Opera House will be performed at that house during the regular season, while the others will be produced by the French company at the New Theatre, where the Metropolitan Opera Company has arranged to give a season of forty performances—one evening and one matinee each week. Subscriptions to the performances at the New Theatre will be invited shortly." * * * About a thousand women started a small-sized riot in the lobbies of the Garden Theatre last week, the cause being a distribution of silk stockings to every woman who bought a ticket for the hundredth performance of Henry E. Dixey in Mary Jane's Pa. As the crowd filed into the theatre each woman received a card which, if presented at the box-office at the close of the performance, was good for one pair of silk stockings warranted real silk, fast dyes, a yard wide, cut on the bias and with all the other qualifications that make such things valuable in the eyes of the fair sex. Mr. Dixey's last words in Mary Jane's Pa are: There is nothing so much worth fighting for in this world as love. And every woman in the house made the mental addition, And silk stockings. For the curtain had not begun to come down before the whole feminine half of the house was on the way toward the box-office. Talk about your bargain sale crushes! Talk about your weaker sex! The ushers were swept away like chaff as the crowd made for the doors. Silk stockings or die is my motto! was apparently the motto of all. The ushers shouted and pushed in a vain attempt to keep some sort of order, but the lobby became a solid mass in which men were so much out of their element that they got out to the sidewalk as fast as they could, leaving the women to fight it out. With fire in their eyes and silk stockings on the brain they did fight it out. Somehow a line was formed of the first three or four hundred the ushers uniting in a flying wedge. As every woman reached the box-office and presented her card she shouted out the size she wanted and got a box. Most of them called for 8's. "My size is 6, but give me 9. They are for a friend," was a common request. Some wanted blue and some wanted pink, but they all got black, for that was the only kind available. One woman, who had lost hat and coat in the skirmish, begged her husband to take her place in the line. She knew she was going to faint. Not for a million silk stockings, was the answer. It took a good hour before the last woman left the theatre, exhausted but triumphant. If the stockings were not all their hearts hoped, they had at least lots of exercise.

Philadelphia, March 6.—Geraldine Bonner and Elmer Harris's social satire, Sham, was revealed at the Garrick Theatre, Monday evening, and was favorably received by a good-sized audience, which followed the superficial plot with interest, laughed at ludicrous situations and keenly enjoyed the sparkle and tang of the dialogue. Henrietta Crossman was the star, and was very successful in giving the necessary lightness of touch in the comedy scenes and the proper amount of sincerity to most of the tender moments. Paul Dickey, recently seen here in Pierre of the Plains, was a manly and likable Tom Jaffray, whose ease of manner counted much in his favor. The veteran actor, Charles Walcott, was polished and dignified in a minor role. There were handsome gowns worn and the production was neatly and tastefully staged. Sham is a diverting and enjoyable play, though there is some need for quickening the action. The first act, with its overelaboration of comedy details, is really the weakest part of the piece. William Gillette's new play, Samson, by Henri Bernstein, was presented at the Broad Street Theatre for the first time Monday night. The general effect will probably be something of a disappointment for the many admirers of the veteran actor, because, although he presents it as a melodrama, the play is nothing of the kind, so that the big scenes are robbed of force by their potency and leave an impression of confusion. Yet the play is not on so pleasant a theme as The Thief, by the same author, and also seen here this season, and it is actually clever. Gillette appears to feel that his part is not sufficiently verbose, and he fills it out with considerably more gestures and facial contortions than would be indulged in by the average strong man who has risen to a commanding position among his fellows by a diplomatic control and concealment of his emotions. There is no moral in the play and no preaching. It is simply a story taken from the Parisian life of today, and might indeed have much the same sort of telling were it to have an American setting. Clearly Bernstein has in this, no more than he has in The Thief, any message to mankind, and since his object seems merely to be to interest, he is to be congratulated that this present work is not so repellent in theme as the other. In some respects The Golden Butterfly, the new Reginald De Koven-Harry B. Smith comic opera, produced for the first time in Philadelphia at the Forrest Theatre, verges upon the grander musical themes which mark the Metropolitan or Hammerstein productions. Miss Van Studdiford's excellent singing and acting were emphasized by the remarkably clever work of Walter Percival. This young man has a good voice and he can act. His spontaneous methods and buoyancy helped to give The Golden Butterfly a sparkle and vim that will surely make its stay here notable. Miss Van Studdiford's best song was probably Don't Forget Me. There are seventeen musical numbers, concerted and otherwise, and the score does not fall far short of many grand operas in orchestral demands. The scenic investiture and costuming were far above the average, and show girls and chorus girls were not given undue prominence—which is as it should be in well-regulated comic operas. The Golden Butterfly is worth while—it has little of the musical show grub to it. Lyric (Messrs. Shubert, mgrs.)—The World and His Wife, the Spanish piece from the pen of Charles Frederick Nirdlinger, began its second week at the Lyric Theatre Monday evening. William Faversham is the star and is surrounded by a capable cast. Walnut (Frank J. Howe, Jr., mgr.)—In New York seems to have made good at the Walnut Street Theatre, for it continues to draw good houses. (Chestnut Opera House (Nixon & Zimmerman, mgrs.)—Charles Rann Kennedy's socio-religious play, The Servant in the House, entered upon the third week of its engagement. The Henry Miller company gives the play excellent presentation. Adelphia (Messrs. Shubert, mgrs.)—Bertha Kalich began the last week of her local engagement Monday evening. She appeared in Thomas Dickinson's play, The Unbroken Road, at the Adelphia Theatre. A presentation of David Belasco's four-act play of the West in stirring fighting days, The Girl I Left Behind Me, was given at the Park Theatre this week by the Harry McRae Webster Associate Players. From the opening act to the close the art of the performers kept the large audience in perfect sympathy with the action of the piece. The play itself calls for no review, it is familiar from former presentations. Of the players, good work was done by Mr. Stuart and Miss Kinslow, Lottie Briscoe and Cordelia Macdonald. The rest of the company gave capital support. It was rather appropriate that The Girl I Left Behind Me, the famous farewell air of the soldier, should be the title of the last play given by the Associated Players, who are now on their final week's engagement at Ye Park, the theatre passing back to road show productions Monday, with Benjamin Chapin in his famous impersonation of Lincoln, in Honest Abe. It was announced Monday night that this would be the concluding week of the engagement of The Servant in the House at the Chestnut Street Opera House. For two weeks, beginning next Monday, Annie Russell in The Stronger Sex will be the attraction there. The Stronger Sex ran for a year in London and has had a most successful engagement in New York. The Stanford & Western stock company are doing a fine business at the Empire, playing to crowded houses at every performance. Emily Smiley and Paul Taylor continue to win favor with their pleasing work. Charming Virginia Hennings pleases this week and sings herself into the graces of the people with her Gingerhead Red Top and I Got a Pain in My Sawdust songs. She sings with ease and her actions are original. Her make-up is very taking. Besides her singing she never fails to score with her acting. Bijou (burlesque)—Williams' Imperials gave a bright show this week. The Hastings show at the Casino was breezy enough to suit patrons. At the Gayety this week the Golden Crook Burlesque Company gave an enjoyable show. A new melodrama, Messenger Boy No. 42, presented at the National this week, proved to be diverting. Violet Hillson got a great deal out of a soubrette role. A burlesque boxing match, intended as a satire on a recent pugilistic encounter between a Philadelphia swell and a Philadelphia professional fighter, was a great laugh-getter at the Eleventh Street Opera House. A very interesting bill is to be found at Keith's Theatre this week. Honors are shared by Bobby North, a Hebrew comedian, who was a feature of the Merry-Go-Round company; the Jesse L. Lasky's version of The Love Waltz, a pretty little operetta modeled on The Dream Waltz, and W. C. Fields, a comedy juggler; the Holding Manikins, a comedy; the Bison City Four, have entertaining acts. Unique Theatre—Chester Blodgett, Johnstone, the famous trick cyclist, performed some very difficult feats at the Unique. The bill was a good one throughout, including Al H. Burton, monologist; George F. Offerman, vocalist; Randolph and Lockhart, singers and talkers, and others. Fifteenth Street Theatre—The usual enjoyable moving pictures and vaudeville entertainment was given. Liberty Theatre—The vaudeville program included four excellent acts, the Zarrow Trio, comedy cyclists; Ed and May Woodward, sunburned Rubes; Deltorelli and Glissarns, musical clowns, and Mlle. Mable and her dogs. Lubin's Palace—The offering at Lubin's Palace Theatre is very good, the vaudeville acts are exceptionally good and the pictures likewise. Girard Theatre (Stair & Havlin, mgrs.)—The role of Sapho in the dramatization of Daudet's novel of the same name, was played this week at the Girard Theatre by Eugenie Blair. The same company which appeared with Miss Blair last week in The Strength of the Weak gave full value to the lines and situations of Sapho. The production reflects credit upon her and her management. Grand Opera House (Stair & Havlin, mgrs.)—George Stone as the Scarecrow and William Baker as the Tin Woodsman kept the fun going at a lively clip in the production of The Wizard of Oz. Like a delicate cameo exquisitely engraved, or a delightful story hand-illuminated on old vellum and bound in rare leathers, are a couple of sentiments levied upon David Belasco's comedy drama, Sweet Kitty Bellairs, and founded on Egerton Castle's book, The Bath Comedy. The play is in four acts and has thirty-seven speaking parts, the time being in the spring of 1793, during the French Republican wars (the Gainsborough Period) and the place, England. Marion Barney continues to be the center of attraction, and was seen to excellent advantage in the title role of Mistress Kitty Bellairs, produced by the Orpheum players at their permanent home, the Chestnut Street Theatre. Miss Barney is a handsome woman, well equipped both physically and artistically to grace her position in this organization, and an actress of worth, born of a sufficiently practical experience in this particular line of work, has established for herself a strong following in the Quaker City. No wiser choice of a leading man could have been made by Manager Grant Lafferty when he selected William Ingersoll to head the Orpheum players. Mr. Ingersoll's role of Lord Verney was received with cordial expressions of favor. Mr. Ingersoll is an actor of neat, clean-cut methods and ingratiating personality and a straight-out manner of acting that wins his audience. Kathlene MacDonnell unmistakably impressed her audience with her part of Lady Julia Standish. Properly developed, she should rise to great heights. John Stokes was seen to good advantage in the role of Sir Jasper Standish. Another valuable member of this organization is Louise Randolph, and she essayed the part of Lady Bab Flyte, the late Belle of Bath, in a creditable manner. J. Hammond Dailey, Peter Lang and Helen Reimer made the most of their parts. The ballroom scene in the third act was elaborate and picturesque and the dance was arranged and directed by a local dancing professor. The whole production was handled in an excellent manner. Manager Lafferty and Stage Director Percy Winter certainly deserve a great amount of credit, for they left nothing undone to make the production just what it should be. The scenic effects were beautiful and the play had the full support of the Orpheum players. The prologue was rendered by Mistress Moore in a very pleasing manner. Business has been good all week. Next week they will present John Drew's delightful comedy, The Duke of Killcrankie. CALVIN M. FRANKLIN.

New Orleans, March 6.—Tulane Theatre—Wm. H. Crane chose wisely when he revoked his decision to retire from the stage and decided to again star in Geo. Ade's new play, Father and the Boys, for he has in that piece undoubtedly the best opportunity accorded him in many years, and he plainly shows it by the evident satisfaction which he derives in playing the part and speaking the bright lines. Judging from the hearty outbursts of affection and satisfaction which he has received at each performance during the week, it is safe to say that it will be a long while before the public will cease to enjoy seeing the piece, as I am told by Mr. Moore, the star's manager, that an extended tour of the Coast and Northwest is planned for next season. There is not a dull moment in Father and the Boys. You no sooner recover from a hearty laugh, when out comes another bright saying or ludicrous situation and you are off again. There is nothing particularly individual of George Ade in the play, unless it is the bits of slang invested in the role of Bessie Brayton, cleverly portrayed by Margaret Dale. However, Crane and his superb company give it a masterly presentation, and it is easily the best comedy we have seen in many years. The genius of the eminent comedian finds the most congenial latitude in the role, which carries a moral to many staid old business men to the effect that if you are good you will be happy, but you won't have any fun. Margaret Dale as Bessie Brayton was stunning. The character, that of a Western girl untamed by refinement or conventionalisms, is unlike that which we have grown to associate her with, but she is chic and delightful withal and dresses in the extreme good taste. Ivy, Frontman and Vivian Martin, two stunning girls, were delightful in their several roles. Forrest Orr and Thomas Meighan were highly acceptable in the roles of the Boys. Joe Whiting, Percy Brooke, Dan Collier and Scott Daily are to be credited with distinguished successes. Next week, John Drew; 14, Paid in Full. Crescent Theatre—The Honeyymooners, a musical adaptation of Running for Office, by George M. Cohan, has had a prosperous week's run. The cast is headed by Willie Dunlay, who has a good voice and dances well. Anna Wheaton is dainty and graceful and a good entertainer. The songs are catchy and pleasing, and taken altogether the piece offers a good evening's entertainment. Next week, Rose Melville.

W. L. McCONNELL.
El Paso, Texas, March 8.—El Paso Theatre (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—Black Patti, March 6-7, with matinee 6, to good business. Crawford (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—The Glass players in repertoire. March 7, The Devil; good business. Majestic (Frank Rich, mgr.)—Majestic Musical Company, with change of bill twice a week, to overflow business nightly.

GEO. A. MANSFIELD.
Laramie, Wyo., March 8.—We Are King, to fairly good house, Saturday night at Opera House. One of the best attractions offered here this season. Florence Roberts about April 1.

A. D. K.
Salt Lake City, Utah, March 8.—Salt Lake Theatre (Geo. D. Pyper, mgr.)—Lillian Russell in Wildfire appears at the Salt Lake Theatre. The play is particularly well fitted to Miss Russell's style of acting, and is full of life and race course atmosphere. Colonial Theatre—Willard Mack presents The Rose of the Rancho in a most creditable manner. The atmosphere and locality of The Rose of the Rancho are very much out of the ordinary, and the picturesque Spanish life well portrayed. Miss Hall, the new leading lady of the Mack company, very ably keeps up the standard of her predecessor, Blanche Douglas. Miss Douglas, prior to her departure from Salt Lake, was presented with a beautiful bracelet by the members of the company as a token of their esteem. Orpheum Theatre—The Orpheum this week presents a bill of great diversity which is sure to please. It is hard to pick the headliner, as all the acts are excellent. Grand Theatre—Manager Jensen of the Grand Theatre has engaged the great McEwan for another week. McEwan in his tricks of magic has been a great drawing card and warrants another week of presentation.

GLEN SMYTH.
San Diego, Cal.—Garrick (Morosco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—Mar. 5-6, The Gingerbread Man. This production was put on in a first-class manner, and can be classed among the best musical shows that have visited us this year. The cast is a large one and is headed by Fred Nice, who does some clever dancing. The chorus is pretty, well drilled and can sing; the music is of the whistling kind and the costumes, scenery, etc., are gorgeous. They did deservedly big business. 4-15, Theodore Roberts and Guy Standing in The Right of Way; 19-20, The Burgomaster; 26-27, Norman Hackett in Classmates. Pickwick (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—Week, Mar. 8, Armstrong Musical Comedy Company in Brown's Vacation. This is a musical absurdity and is doing good business. Good work is being done by Miss Davis, Miss Blondell and Miss Bayard. Queen (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.)—Week, Mar. 8, Sullivan & Considine vaudeville. Phil Staats, comedy piano act; Henry Aurbach & Company, in sketch; Emily Benner, female baritone; Tannehill and Radcliff. Latest moving pictures. With the exception of Phil Staats, who, by the way, has a very clever act, and Emily Benner, the show as presented this week is hardly up to the standard set by the Queen. Good business, however, continues to rule. Grand (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.)—Leonard Kane, Southern Quartette; Betty Scholtz, moving pictures and illustrated songs. Fair show and business. Bijou, Empire and Union Theatres offer moving pictures and illustrated songs to good business.

C. E. LUNDQUIST.
Fresno, March 10.—Barton Opera House (Robt. G. Barton, prop. and mgr.)—Girls, 4. Large audience delighted. Best comedy here this season. Joseph DeGrasse in Merchant of Venice, 10. Gingerbread Man, 16. Right of Way, with Guy Standing and Theo. Roberts, 21. Novelty Theatre (A. J. Hotchkiss, mgr.)—Raymond Teal musical comedy company, 1-21, playing The Man Behind, week 8, to good business. Raymond Teal a hit in his black face monologue and songs. Empire Theatre (Ed Hoen, prop. and mgr.)—8-14, Gertie Dunlap company in stock. Fair business. The Redmond stock company will open at this house 22. Gertie Dunlap company will go to Oklahoma City. Manager Hoen of the Empire is installing plush upholstered opera chairs and will have the house redecorated in a rich style. Although the managers do not complain of poor business it would seem that Fresno with a population of about 25,000 is one town in California that is very much overdone in the amusement line. There are in operation at the present time eight places of amusement. The Barton, playing K. & E. attractions, seats 1,800. Novelty, playing stock and vaudeville, seats 1,000. The Empire, playing stock and vaudeville, seats 1,100. The Star, playing moving pictures and vaudeville, seats 700, and four moving picture theatres, each seating about 500. Recreation Park Theatre, playing vaudeville, will open April 15, seats 1,200. The roller skating rink opens April 1. A. R. Brooks, one of the best known character actors in the country, died March 10, at the county hospital, after an illness of three months. He had been ill for several years, however, with a liver complaint and death was not unexpected. A. R. Brooks, "Dad" Brooks, as he was affectionately called around Fresno, first appeared before the footlights in this city about thirty years ago with Frank Mayo in Davy Crockett. He toured the world several times with Mayo, being recognized as a first-class artist when in his prime. Two years ago he came to this city with the Girton stock company, playing here twenty-three weeks at the Novelty Theatre. Last November he again came to Fresno, broken down in health, and was given a position with the Alta Phipps company by Manager Hotchkiss of the Novelty. His last part was Lord Storm in The Christian, he having great difficulty in playing his lines in that production. On December 31 he was taken to the county hospital, where he slowly weakened until death ended his troubles. Brooks was penniless when he died, the expenses of the funeral being paid by his theatrical associates and by other friends about town. The Saturday matinee of the Raymond Teal company at the Novelty will be in the nature of a benefit, twenty-five per cent of the gross receipts being donated towards the funeral expenses by Managers Teal and Hotchkiss. The deceased was about 59 years of age.

Long Beach, March 3.—This is the last week in Long Beach, for this season, at least, of Marjorie Rambeau, Lillian Burnett and Charles King, who for nearly a year have been three of the leading members of the Bentley Grand stock company. This announcement was made yesterday afternoon by Judge L. H. Bentley, owner and manager of the theatre, who said that these three will go to Oakland next week to accept engagements, and that Al Dickinson will be director and leading man in the Bentley stock company hereafter. Mr. Dickinson will carry the title role in The Little Minister, next week's strong offering. The company next week will look like a new organization. There will be eight new faces in The Little Minister cast. Miss Rambeau, Lillian Burnett and Charles King have each attained a high degree of popularity by their work here. As director and leading man Mr. King has kept at a high standard the production of each number in the company's classy repertoire, and has shown great power and ability in his own work in the cast. Miss Rambeau has endeared herself to all theatre goers. She has a rare personality and ability of no uncertain degree. She has been enjoyed by every audience every week. Her gowns, as well as her girlish grace, have been the talk of the theatre loving public. Lillian Burnett has proved herself an able character woman. Mr. Dickinson quickly stepped into favor here and his hold on the people has grown stronger week by week.

Watsonville, March 8.—H. J. Lugg, erstwhile lessee of the local opera house, is now a much wanted man. After a month's tempestuous career in which he lost much money, Lugg packed up his belongings and left in the still of the night, leaving his many creditors behind him. Last Saturday night Lugg gave a moving picture show in the Gilroy Opera House to a packed house. After the show he and Chas. Parrott, his machine operator, together with Tom Allender of this city, went to the S. P. Hotel at Gilroy and retired for the night. In the morning when young Allender awoke he found that Lugg and Parrott had left early in the morning for parts unknown and that they had taken the moving picture machine with them. Allender returned yesterday to this city, where the creditors of the late theatrical magnate (?) are now considering ways and means to secure the return of Lugg. Following is a partial list of the anxious creditors of Lugg and the amounts that they represent: F. J. Chapman, $75; Register Publishing Co., $51; theatre orchestra, $44; Watsonville Light and Power Co., $45; Wm. Farrell, $16; Mansion House, $7; Constable Sandberg, $6; Tom Allender, $5; Geo. Hewston, $5.

Palo Alto, March 9.—After a long estrangement from his millionaire father, caused by his elopement with Leslie Preston, an actress at the Belasco Theatre in Los Angeles, James C. Ray, former Stanford student, has received the paternal blessing. Ray is traveling with the Joseph DeGrasse company, which produced The Merchant of Venice at Stanford Saturday night. His father, a copper king of Duluth, Minn., is spending the winter in Palo Alto. The elder Ray, unbeknown, attended the performance in which young Ray took the role of Gratiano. When the father heard the plaudits that his son's acting brought from the audience, his anger cooled, and when the curtain was down he visited his son in his dressing room. There he forgave all that had injured his parental feelings. Ray has had an eventful career since he left college more than a year ago. Much against the will of his father, who refused to contribute to his support, he went to Los Angeles and worked at the Auditorium Theatre as a super with the Lewis Stone company at 50 cents a night. While there he became enamored with Miss Preston, who was playing second lead. Shortly after the Stone company moved to the Belasco Theatre, Ray in an auto spirited Miss Preston off to Santa Ana in the small hours of the morning. They were married there by a justice of the peace. Ray afterward went on the road with the aggregation in which he is now playing. His wife accompanied him. Mrs. Ray comes of an aristocratic English family, her brother being a lieutenant in the British army.

Chico, Cal., Mar. 11.—An entertainment consisting of three vaudeville sketches was to have been given at the Majestic last night by local talent and under the auspices of the I. O. O. F., but owing to illness of one of the players, the production has been indefinitely postponed. Tonight, Harry Beresford, in Who's Your Friend, is the attraction, while tomorrow evening, 12th, Babes in Toyland will be seen. A team called Trixedia and Robinson, is producing a good laugh at the Gem this week, while the pictures are of the see-'em again order. C. H. CHACE.

Duffy Advanced

The Santa Fe Popular Passenger Agent Appointed to a Higher Sphere of Usefulness

The playfolk with whom James B. Duffy, the City Passenger Agent of the Santa Fe, stands very high, will learn with pleasure of his promotion to a higher dignity in the railway service as General Agent of the passenger department of the same company. Mr. Duffy has never let an opportunity go by to show every courtesy to the traveling members of the theatrical profession and assist them in their many tribulations of rates, routing and solving other mysteries involved in traveling by rail. As a consequence his fame is continental and his name is always coupled with the other good fellows of the railway world who are noted for helping the playfolks over annoyances that beset them. Mr. Duffy's rise in railway circles has been noteworthy. He entered the employ of the Santa Fe Railway in December, 1889, and previous to his advent here was stationed at Albuquerque, New Mexico, then transferred to Prescott, Arizona, and was promoted to the passenger agency of the company at San Jose. His next step was into the ticket office at the ferry depot, ten years ago, and after a short service he was appointed City Passenger Agent, from which position he has just been promoted to the higher dignity. In his new position Mr. Duffy will still continue to be the good Samaritan of the traveling players and will not lose sight of their interests.

The litigation over Arizona, which came near ending the tour of the company here, has resulted in the closing of that show in the middle of its tour. The production has gone to the warehouse and the company to New York. Augustus Thomas notified managers he owned the play.

Personals

ALTA PHIPPS has joined the Ed Redmond company and will open with it in Fresno March 29.

CHARLES WALCH is a new tenor Ferris Hartman has added to his opera company in Los Angeles.

E. W. R. BRACHT, a good actor and a fine looking chap, is in town from the North.

VIRGINIA BRISSAC is gaining an excellent name for herself as leading woman for Walter Sanford's players in Vancouver, B. C.

FRED C. CHARMAN, a juvenile and light comedy man, is in town open for an engagement. For the last twenty-six weeks Mr. Charman was with the Chester Bishop company.

FLORENCE BARKER is playing ingenue roles with the Cook stock company, under the management of Chas. Emerson Cook, at Hartford, Ct.

GUS WEINBURG has been selected by Manager W. P. Cullen to play the role of Strander in the reorganized Alaskan company. Cullen intends to bring the company to the Coast next season.

ON March 1st, at 10:30 p. m., a fine lusty boy baby was born to Mr. and Mrs. Nick Cogley (Moldon Marquand) in Long Beach. Congratulations to the happy father and the clever and beautiful mother.

MAXINE ELLIOTT will leave for England March 17, to fulfill an engagement with Louis Weller in the Lyric Theatre, London, when she will appear as the Duchess, in Constance Fletcher's play, 1801.

THE veteran Irish comedian, James M. Ward, assisted by Gertrude Morris, begin a week's engagement at the Central Theatre, St. Patrick's week, commencing Sunday, March 14, in their new Irish sketch, The Harrigans.

DICK JOSE left last Monday for a flying trip to New York in the interest of his forthcoming season on the road. Dick will bring back a new comedy that has a reputation and the scenario of a new play that will be written for his use next season.

MABEL BARDINE has returned recently to New York from Europe and will play the Eastern cities in Nell of the Halls. Miss Bardine is the ex-wife of Chris Brown, the New York booking representative of Sullivan & Considine, and also the "ex" of Carl Berch.

JOHN W. RANSONE was engaged last week by Liebler & Co. to play Jerry Fogarty, a district leader, in The Head of the House, the new comedy by Edward W. Townsend and Frank Ward O'Malley, in which Ada Lewis will begin her starring tour early in March.

PURCHASED in 1861 for $4,000 by Mrs. Ellen Nigro of Oakland, the northeast corner of Eddy and Mason streets was sold last Monday by her for $145,000, the buyers being R. L. Wolden of San Jose and W. W. Hollingberry, a capitalist and the chief Pooh Bah of Hollister.

KLAW & ERLANGER and Joseph Brooks have accepted a play by Mrs. Gertrude Andrews, entitled Through a Window, which they will produce early next fall, with a prominent actress in the leading role. Mrs. Andrews and her husband, Fred Andrews, are both well known here.

WILLIAM H. BISHOP, well known in theatrical circles as manager or owner of such old time stage successes as The Black Crook, What Happened to Jones, and The County Fair, died in New York, March 7, from injuries received three weeks ago when he was struck by an automobile. Bishop was 64 years old.

MERCEITA ESMONDE, who plays Mrs. Dennett in Girls, is Mrs. H. S. Northrup in private life. Miss Esmonde has been leading woman with Frederick Warde, William Hawtrey, The Round-Up and William Gillette's Lilly. Her father, the late William T. Esmonde, was the General Passenger Agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad for fifteen years.

FRED CUTLER, who directs the tour of Richard Jose in the season and then betakes himself to his farm at Watts, near Los Angeles, is back, getting into trim for the next long tour.

He is brown as a berry and as energetic as a two-year-old. Fred says Jose will have eleven weeks in California and a long season of the best Western time to follow.

GEO. M. COHAN, while playing in The Yankee Prince at Baltimore and Philadelphia, will be accompanied by the 100 members of Raymond Hitchcock's The Chorus Man company, which the author-composer will rehearse on the road. Sam H. Harris has arranged special hotel and train service to accommodate the two big companies. The Chorus Man will open in Atlantic City.

NELLIE STEWART, the Australian actress who was successful here four years ago, is outward bound for Australia from London to fulfil her engagement under the direction of J. C. Williamson. At Easter time she will open at the Melbourne Princess in Sweet Kitty Bellairs David Belasco's drama based on the Bath Comedy, by Agnes and Egerton Castle. Amongst the principals who will help fill a long cast will be Langhorne Burton, A. B. Tapping and others. The London members of the company will leave London a fortnight later than Miss Stewart.

GEORGE FOSTER PLATT, who has begun his work as stage director at the Valencia, was one of the original Belasco company on O'Farrell street. In a reminiscent mood the other evening Mr. Platt recalled the genesis of The First Born, Francis Powers' wonderful little play of Chinese life. He and Mr. Powers were in Chinatown one day when they saw a little Chinese boy in imminent peril of being run over. Instead of chastising the lad, as most fathers would have done, the Celestial took his boy on his knee and talked to him seriously and lovingly and evidently impressed him greatly. Mr. Powers was greatly impressed and from that moment The First Born was assured. Since leaving here Mr. Platt has made a name for himself as a producer in the East, both in a musical way and in the drama. He it was who first put on The Love Route and The Man on the Box, besides twenty or thirty other New York successes. His contract here is for twenty weeks.

Van Ness Theatre

Clyde Fitch is a stage writer of many superior qualities, and even though he is the most prolific writer for the American stage, he is also one of the greatest. The latest Fitch play to come to us, Girls, is by far the cleverest comedy we have had in the last two or three years. It is a straight comedy of continuous interest and builded with the skill of a master who knows the possibilities of the stage and a situation. The company presenting this play is an almost perfect one. The chief male part is taken with consummate skill by Harry Northrup, who has surprised all of his home friends by a great ability as a light comedian. His portrayal of Egar is so consistently clever and so thoroughly intelligent that it takes on a most unusual value. Bessie Toner, who plays the guardian angel of the other two girls, and tries to keep them impressed with the fact that there are no wedding bells for them, only to fall into the snare of Cupid at the end, does impressively good work and is a strong and vital part of the company. Miss Toner is well remembered for a good characterization of the athletic girl in The College Widow, and her triumph in this part shows another and most charming phase of her ability. The two pretty and attractive girls who play the remaining characters in the trinity of spinsterhood, are very clever. The best evidence of the class of the show was the unanimity of favorable comment from the audiences that left the playhouse. It was as refreshing as it was rare. The Messrs. Shubert can send more shows of the character of Girls and we will not complain.

Princess Theatre

The Rounders, which is ending its second week at the Princess, continues to be a drawing attraction. The performance is smooth and vivacious, and throughout the show there is never a dull moment; not only are the scenery and costumes brilliant and effective, but the favorites, both old and new, are continuing the favorable impressions they made on the opening night. Chief among these favorites are Zoe Barnett, May Boley, Helen Darling, Frank Moulan, Fred Mace, Budd Ross and James Stevens.

Valencia Theatre

Under the Red Robe is a fine example of the romantic drama and the way this stock company present it this week speaks highly for their capability in this line of play. The best work of the company is presented by Darrell Standing in the role of Richelieu. He wears his red robe with a stateliness befitting the great cardinal and his manner shows the iron hand beneath the silk glove. As Renee de Cocheforet, Blanche Stoddard gives a charming interpretation of a womanly part where there are opportunities both for comedy and tenderness; her scene of defiance, when she snaps her fingers at tyranny, is one of the cleverest scenes in the play. Mace Greenleaf is more in his element as a modern hero, than as a swashbuckling bravo, but as Gil de Berault he manages to hold the sympathies of the audience, even if he does not impress one as being a very desperate fellow. In this reading of the part he follows its American creator, Faversham, who made the bold, bad Gil a very likeable scapegrace. Gerald Harcourt is thoroughly in his element as the quarrelsome Captain Larollo, ready at any moment for a kiss or a brawl. As the Lieutenant, Robert Homans also gives a good character study. Beatrice Nichols as Mme. de Cocheforet is a pleasing feature of the performance, and good renderings of their respective parts are given by Thomas Lowell, Reginald Travers, Charles Dow Clark, who plays a dumb servant, Thomas McLarnie as Henry de Cocheforet. The costumes and scenery are appropriate and picturesque.

Alcazar Theatre

A local critic, speaking of The Darling of the Gods, at the Alcazar this week, feeling a fine impulse to give full credit, wrote "that strange as it may seem, the best production in town this week is at a stock house," or words to that effect. Now, that verdict showed a willing spirit, but it was not exact, for there are many weeks in San Francisco when the best productions are seen in stock, and at the Alcazar they have worked the idea up to a fine art. The Darling of the Gods is undoubtedly the finest production ever seen at this famous theatre, and in every accessory detail—acting, music, lighting, scenery and costuming—there is a tremendous achievement. It is certainly a lesson in knowing how to do things, and one that will stand the test in any city of our land. New triumphs are achieved by Bertram Lytell in the character of Kara, the outlaw—the grim, fierce warrior, the last of a fighting race of staunch adherents of the Emperor, who, rather than give up his sword, the badge of his race, and surrender to the new order of Japan's awakening to civilization, would rather yield up his life. Mr. Lytell impersonates the outlaw chief with consummate fidelity and is strongly impressive in his acting in every phase of the character. Evelyn Vaughan endows the faithful and lovelorn Yo-San with beautiful and sympathetic characteristics and must be credited with another positive triumph that goes to prove her one of the coming great actresses of the American stage. Burt Wesner is seen as Saizon, the Prince father of Yo-San, and this sterling artist's fine understanding is employed to good purpose. Will R. Walling presents a strong portrait of the scheming and heartless Zakkuri, minister of war. Howard Hickman depicts with vivid realism the small part of Kato, the fisherman. The long cast of minor characters is in most capable hands, and the performance is so happily and skillfully worked up that there is nothing but words of commendation for it. The play will be seen for another week.

American Theatre

Plump and pleasing Marie Cahill gave up her musical play, Marrying Mary in the zenith of its success, and the piece was secured by Flor Woodburn pleases as Kitty Kulpepper. As the much-married heroine, Miss Gear, who is playing at the American Theatre this week, does not attempt to tread in Miss Cahill's footsteps. She is an altogether different Mary from the one who endeared herself to local theatre-goers at the Novelty Theatre. She is not so plump and her way of pleasing is along different lines. It was Mrs. Malaprop who observed: "Caparisons are odorous," and those who have been trying to institute comparisons between the two Marys can only say that it is easy to understand how each Mary secured so many husbands. It may be added that Miss Gear not only has a good voice, but, what is more rare, she knows how to use it. Richard Karl gives a clever performance of Colonel Henry Clay Kulpepper, the prospective father-in-law, in Mary's last matrimonial venture; he has to compete with memories of Eugene Cowles, and the fact that he sustains the ordeal, as well as his part, speaks well for his acting. The rest of the performers all contribute to a smooth, well-rounded performance of Milton Royle's comedy with lyrics by Hapgood Burt and music by Silvio Hein. Hilliard Campbell is a good Senator David Bunchgrass, husband No. 1; Matt Hanley is unctuous as Bishop Brigham Smudge, husband No. 2; Harry B. Roche pleasingly sustains the part of Mary's third venture on the shifting sea of matrimony, and Harry Benham gives satisfaction as her final choice. Florine Murray and Minnie Woodburn pleases as Kitty Kulpepper and Daisy Calhoun, respectively, Bessie Graham is a vivacious Fleurette, and the rest of the cast is rounded out by Augustus Colette, Jules Cluzetti, George Dinis, Charles Gray and last, but not least, the long-skirted chorus, consisting of Helen Berkley, Dela Aubin, Ethyle Cook, Anne Rose, Audrey Munson, Helen Hillarde, Minnie Larned, Blanche Caen, May DeShutley, Alma Buel, Clara Palser, Sarah Bender.

16th Street Theatre

A four-act melodrama, interpolated with illustrated songs, motion pictures and polite vaudeville combines to pass an enjoyable evening's entertainment at the Sixteenth Street Theatre this week. If quantity and quality is an inducement to the public, the Malan-McGrath stock company should make a paying proposition of this house of many vicissitudes. The performance this week is that old veteran drama, Jerry, the Outcast, or The Convict. Mr. Malan as Jerry Weston the convict, captured the honors of the evening, his comedy being irresistible to the audience. Mr. McGrath also came in for his share as Cassius Tietourist Adams, as tramp. Florence Bell, as Nana Lee, handled her part in a very capable manner and made a favorable impression upon the audience. As Colonel Lee, Howard Nugent was extremely good. Miss Murella, the sourette, was very pleasing and put plenty of life in her work. Ivan Miller as James Blackburn handled his part in an excellent manner and earned the hearty dislike of the gallery gods. The balance of the cast was well up to the standard and the management deserves a liberal patronage. Next week the stirring melodrama, Jesse James, will be presented.

CHARLIE CLARY has closed with the Neill company and rejoined Jessie Shirley at Spokane.

Spotlights

Wright and Van Buskirk are the new managers of the Lodi Opera House.

Beginning on Monday, March 1, the Shuberts established a new rule by which no tickets for any of the New York theatres under their management are to be put on sale at any of the Tyson & Co. ticket agencies in hotels or elsewhere. This step was taken after having satisfactorily tried the experiment for two weeks immediately preceding at Daly's and at the Casino. The Shubert theatres for which no seats are to be had at the agencies are the Lyric, where The Blue Mouse is the offering; the Casino, where James T. Powers appears in Havana; Daly's, where Julia Marlowe is to be seen in The Goddess of Reason; the Herald Square, where Kathryn Kidder is appearing in A Woman of Impulse; Maxine Elliott's, where Carlotta Nillson is playing in This Woman and This Man; the Majestic, where Three Twins are still to be found; and the West End, where the bill changes weekly. Relative to the matter of cancelling arrangements with the agencies, Lee Shubert said: "Our purpose in refusing to deal longer with the Tyson Company is to give the public a fair deal. The hotel agencies expect to get certain blocks of seats with the privilege of returning the unsold tickets at 7:30 in the evening. Therefore, people who come to the box office during the day are unable to buy seats which are at the agencies, but which may be returned later unsold. This is an obvious injustice to those who come to the box office for accommodations and for whom the rule of 'first come first served' should strictly prevail."

That Lieutenant Daniel T. Ghent, commander of the torpedo boat destroyer Goldsborough, is to be transferred to the lonely station at Samoa because of his secret marriage to a member of the Blue Moon company is the persistent rumor in naval circles. Ghent has left for Vancouver and friends do not deny that the young officer is under orders to embark on a sailing vessel on March 26 for Samoa, where he will take up new duties at

New York, March 6.—Letters of a strange character from the exhibits attached to the complaint and affidavit of William Stuart, an actor, in his suit against Ethel Murtha Clarey, a woman of considerable fortune, who was arrested on an order signed by Justice Fitzgerald of the New York court last Saturday, as she and Mrs. Anna Hollinger Stuart were about to sail for London on the Minnehaha. Stuart demands $50,000 damages from Mrs. Clarey for alienation of his wife's affections. He got the order for arrest on learning that she had engaged passage for herself and Mrs. Stuart. A deputy sheriff had trouble in getting his prisoner ashore. She gave $2,000 bail in cash and was discharged, but the Minnehaha had sailed. Stuart says he married Anna Hollinger on August 26, 1903, and that they lived happily until they met Mrs. Clarey in April, 1907. Mrs. Stuart is an actress, and the couple played jointly and saved money until Mrs. Clarey came on the scene. He charges that Mrs. Clarey poisoned his wife's mind and prejudiced her against him.

Vaudeville

The Orpheum

This week's show is essentially a fun show. Two big acts are devoted to other purposes. These are Emma Rainey in A Modern Pocahontas, a little drama depicting the love of an Indian maid for a United States cavalry officer, and a splendid troupe of Japanese acrobats and balancers. The Indian playlet is presented by Miss Rainey, herself a full-blooded Indian, and a pretty little woman of some histrionic skill, two or three white men who do the heavy acting, and some Indians who make up the background and lend realism. The act is atmospheric, not beyond the bounds of belief, and is a very entertaining feature of the evening's show. The Japs have a striking setting to their act, and their work is thoroughly good. The fun is supplied in great big allopathic doses by Bowers, Walters and Crooker, "the three Rubes," who can dance and fool to hilarious results. They are the best in their line we have ever seen. Connelly and Webb have an unique act, composed of some burlesque singing, some very excellent singing by the young lady of the team and much very entertaining trick piano stunts and an hilarious electrical novelty finish by the man. Herbert Mitchell warbles a few ditties in an ordinary baritone voice, but warms up when he tells his stories. They are exceedingly good. Harry Foy and Florence Clarke present a travesty on the mineral water craze that is a scream and an intensely clever act. The Six Little Girls and the Teddy Bear show much good dancing, and Agnes Mahr, who is a familiar face, exhibits some well executed toe dances, assisted by another member of the Mahr family, who is young and shapely. An amusing moving picture concluded an evenings entertainment that is a great success.

Pantages-Empire

As usual a good bill holds the boards at this popular house this week. Melbourne MacDowell and Virginia Trescott Drew present the feature act of the week, A Man of the People is their playlet. It is of the melodramatic order, pertaining to Capital vs. Labor, but is refreshing as a departure from the Upton Sinclair strain. Mr. MacDowell as the foreman of the works, blunt and to the point, gives an artistic and convincing interpretation of the part. Miss Drew, as the owner of the works, with a strike on her hands, gives a sincere and capable portrayal of the character. The comedy is supplied by Percy Challenger, who, as the crusty old chief clerk, gives an excellent bit of character acting. The sketch is a vehicle for good acting and is far above the average sketch seen in vaudeville. Phil La Toska supplies a very clever comedy juggling turn. Clarence Oliver gives a rapid fire monologue which is well up to the standard. The Fanton Trio introduce some new and difficult features in their Roman ring act. Alsace and Lorraine have several new and interesting features in their musical act and give a delightful and pleasing performance. The Rish Duo billed as the Happy Pair, lived up to their sobriquet. The usual high class moving pictures complete the program. This theatre is furnishing some exceedingly strong bills and is pleasing its patrons most thoroughly.

The National

Manager Sid Grauman is presenting, as usual, a bill of exceptional merit and one that is very successful in pleasing. Prominent among the entertainers are Callan and Smith; Frank Wayne and company; Chifolo and Copretto; The Country Choir; Beatrice Bruce and company; Ralph Johnstone and Alice Lewis. The following good performers will be seen in next week's program: Borsini Troupe; Carroll and Cooke; Coin's Dogs; Truesdell and company; Onetta; and Tom Brantford.

The Wigwam

An exceptionally good bill holds the boards at this popular house this week, not a dull moment to be experienced during the whole performance. Knox Bros. and Helene, merry minglers of mirth and music, mingled some merry music with the usual comedy intermingled. Carlyle Moore and company present an exciting little playlet of "Ye olden times," which has a splendid comedy plot verging on to the tragic for the curtain, where some clever and realistic sword work is brought into play. Joe Valle, king of the accordion, gives a treat this week on the hoodlum's piano. Lewis McCord and company, Her Last Rehearsal. Carroll and Cook, The Men of the Hour, are the men for the time they are on the stage. They give a delightful and humorous turn with their jokes and parodies, and have the happy faculty of making friends with their audiences. The Three Van Diemens, European novelty act. Several reels of moving pictures complete the program.

Vaudeville Notes

A surprise is in store for the patrons of Pantage's Empire Theatre in the near future. Mr. Melvin Weinstock, manager of this popular play house is now busily engaged in completing the details of a condensed version of Oscar Wilde's book of Salome. Mr. Weinstock has been engaged for some time upon this act and has received many flattering compliments as to the certain success of his efforts. No expense is being spared to make the act a success and an innovation in the vaudeville field. Special scenery and electrical effects are now in preparation which will be a revelation to the public. Original costumes are also now being made for the cast. Besides five principals, at least ten extra people will be required for the act. A well known dancer has been secured for the part of Salome at great expense, and has been preparing for the production for the last three months. All honor to managers with new ideas.

Will J. Cook of Carroll and Cook, at the Wigwam this week, is traveling representative of the White Rats of America.

Orpheum Theatre's New Home Opens April 19

It will be three years almost to a day, after the disaster of April, 1906, when the Orpheum will again be down town. The management has settled on Monday, April 19, as the opening day. The new show will be given on Sunday, April 18, at the Orpheum near Fillmore street, and then on Monday night the vaudeville players will be transferred down town and start the new Orpheum on its career. The seating capacity of the theatre on the site of the old Orpheum in O'Farrell street will be larger than that of the present Orpheum, but already the house has been nearly sold out for the opening night. The new theatre is undoubtedly one of the very finest theatres in the West. The present Orpheum will be renamed the Garrick, and for four weeks following the transfer of the vaudeville show to the new quarters. Will Greenbaum will present concert attractions at the Ellis street house. The future of this house is not announced.

Vaudeville Notes

WASHINGTON SQUARE—Last Sunday's vaudeville bill was presented by the Great Fannellas; Dale and Dale; Billy Jones; Miriam Marr; Kate Kelly; John Lynch and Rose Carternis.

A summons was served Tuesday on James J. Jeffries, retired heavyweight champion pugilist, and another on James Solly, manager of the New York Theatre where Jeffries is appearing, directing them to appear in the Police Court Wednesday and explain why Jeffries indulges in a sparring act on the stage of the theatre in violation of the anti-prize fight law.

A letter from Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, in reference to the Moving Picture Operators' Union's application for a charter, sets forth that such union, if it does not affiliate with the San Francisco local of theatrical employees, will have to obtain a charter from that body, as the A. F. of L. will not grant it an independent one.

Another new vaudeville house, the Lyceum, opened last Monday in Seattle, at the corner of Second and University.

Al G. Flournoy writes from Globe, Arizona, that the James P. Lee comedy players are in their sixth week at the Majestic Theatre, and "packing 'em in." The company is headed by James P. Lee and Al Flournoy, with W. T. Tupper, Jess Sidney, Grace Vance, Marie Barbier and Miss Thel Thatcher in the support.

George Walker, the negro comedian, who, with Bert Williams, has been appearing in their recent success, Bandanna Land, went last week to his home in Lawrence, Kas., to receive medical treatment for nervous trouble. He is threatened with paresis.

A circuit of some six or eight towns, consisting of Grass Valley, Nevada City, Placerville, Jackson, Angels Camp and Sonora, in addition to running moving pictures, are using vaudeville and sketch teams. The bookings are done through Archie Levy and Bobby Burns of Pantages theatres.

After this week William Kolb will be on the assessment rolls, eligible for jury duty and other patriotic delights, for Monday he purchased the Antoinette apartments, at the southwest corner of Pine and Leavenworth streets, of Rousseau & Sons, the architects and contractors for $40,000.

Max L. Schrode, with Carlyle Moore in vaudeville, met with what came near being a serious accident last week while playing in Oakland. In trying to avoid Mr. Moore's blade he was precipitated into the audience, but fortunately fell into a stout lady's lap and after profuse apologies the scene was continued.

Mrs. Carmen Carroll, wife of Joe Carroll of Carroll and Cook, the popular team at the Wigwam this week, arrived from Chicago yesterday. Happy Joe.

The advent of Melbourne MacDowell and Virginia Drew Trescott is always an event, and this year the presence of these two fine actors takes on an added interest from the fact that they are presenting Mrs. Trescott's own play, A Man of the People, which is a great and positive hit.

Greater Norris & Rowe Circus

The Greater Norris & Rowe Circus, greatly enlarged and improved, will be the first circus, museum, menagerie, hippodrome and congress of nations to visit this section of the country the coming season. H. S. Rowe, general manager of the Greater Norris & Rowe Circus, which is really owned by the Donaldson Show Printing Co., recently acquired the entire circus, museum and menagerie of the well-known Myles Orton's New England circus and shipped the entire outfit, including animals, horses, cars, dens, etc., to the winter quarters of the Greater Norris & Rowe circus at Santa Cruz. It has been repainted, rebuilt and put in shape for the tour of "The Pride of the West," which is now in full blast. This gives Manager Rowe a forty-six car show, and the menagerie compares favorably with any on tour. A special feature this year is the parade, which out-rivals anything heretofore attempted in the way of street demonstration.

Correspondence

Sacramento, Cal., March 11th, 1909.—There is to be a new Clunie Theatre. As soon as the present theatrical season closes in June or July, work will be started on remodeling the show house from the orchestra to the gallery. The contracts for the work have practically been closed, and involve an outlay of between $70,000 and $100,000. Part of this expense will be for remodeling the Eighth street front of the Clunie Building, which will be made to conform with the K street side. The entrance to the theatre is to be placed on Eighth street, taking the rear of the store now occupied by the American Cash Store. The space occupied by the present entrance on K street will be utilized for store purposes. There will be several other changes in the ground floor plans of the building, including the removal of the office of the Turclu Hotel from the second floor to the street level. The entire lower floor will be fitted with leather upholstered chairs. The seats now in service there will be used in the family circle and gallery. The aisles will be reconstructed as natural inclines and the steps done away with. The present boxes will be torn out, and loges on the lower floor only will take their places. The gallery will be extended to the proscenium arch, forming a complete horseshoe. All of the lower floor and balcony are to be redecorated and furnished with new carpets and draperies. The upper floor is to be divided into two sections. The front will be the family circle and the rear the gallery. Entrance to the family circle will be through the main entrance and from the lobby. Both the family circle and gallery will be provided with broad stairways and ample exits.

Tacoma, Wash., March 6.—A Stubborn Cinderella made her first appearance at the Tacoma Theatre last Sunday and Monday and was well received, the consensus of opinion being that it was the best musical show so far this season, the leading roles well sustained, the chorus well trained and the show girls joys forever. The piece was beautifully staged and finely costumed. Homer B. Mason is genuinely funny and has a most pleasing personality. Grace Edmund has a splendid voice and besides is a captivating actress. Ethel Dovey, here last season in The District Leader, scored a hit with her songs. Clara Noelke danced well. Jack Raffael, Lincoln Plumer, Harry Paul and Frederick Truesdell, who have all appeared here before, add materially to the success of the production. The play did a fine business and will be warmly welcomed should it return. March 6, Uncle Tom's Cabin by the Stetson company, so well known here on the Coast, was visited by its usual crowd of admirers. March 7-8, Charles B. Hanford and company in A Winter's Tale and Othello. March 10, Paul Gilmore in The Boys of Company B. Star Theatre—No play given by the McRae players has caused more hilarious laughter than the ridiculous situations portrayed in Glittering Gloria, which was the week's bill. Although correct staging and realistic effects are the rule at this house, the jewelry store used in the first act overshadowed anything before attempted, being complete in the most minute detail. Miss Oswald made a captivating Gloria, giving a finished rendition of the part. Her gowns were beautiful and appropriate. Allen Holuber and Robert Lawrence, around whom the fun-making centered, kept matters going at a lively clip, while Edward Lawrence and John McCabe added to the fun and complications. Denton Vane as the rural attorney gave us one of the best characterizations seen here. A popular song well sung and acted by Mr. Vane was an added feature. Miss Van Tassell as the wife and Miss Cordray as the fiancée were fine in their parts. Miss Robeson played a small part, that of a maid, in a painstaking manner. Next week, Quo Vadis, with Mr. McRae as Marcus Vinicius, Mr. Holuber as Petronius and Miss Oswald as Lygia. John L. Sullivan and Jake Kilrain were the big drawing card at the Pantages this week, people being attracted by their personality as well as their act. The Stoddards offered a good musical act and Dave Williams and company appeared in a well-acted sketch. Jack Atkins, monologist, and Fortune Brothers in a farce, provide the comedy of the bill, and Gilbert and Katen, in parodies, were a real treat. March 8—Mme. Adelaide Hermann, magician; the Two Macks, Scottish entertainers; The Otts, in a farce, The Gibson Girl; the Four Haydens, in tight wire act; Joe Goodman, entertainer. At the Grand Theatre an unusual offering was the Three Australian Tree Fellers. Sawing and ax and hatchet throwing were interesting features of the act. Errac, violinist, was an entertaining musician, rendering well known selections in an excellent manner. Mareena, Navarro and Mareena were wonders at hand balancing and equilibrium. John Le Claire gave an interesting juggling act. Don Leon's Happy Youngsters, composed of ten lively young people, caused hearty laughter and were a real hit. March 8: Georgetown Family, acrobats; Lightning Hopper, in artistic sketches; Sarah Cogswell, vocalist; Elmer Tenley, comedian; Ellsworth and Lindon, in A Day Off.

A. H. Astoria, March 9.—Astoria Theatre, F. M. Hanlin, lessee and mgr.—Sunday, March 7, Paul Gilmore in The Boys of Company B, made quite a hit. The play proved to be a clean-cut military comedy, replete with fun and fine scenic investiture and clever situations. Every member of the company was excellent and the vein of humor throughout the performance was far above the average. Those who attended, although there was a small audience, spoke in the highest terms of the production and will welcome a return engagement of this popular actor and his refined company. The next attraction is Dan Sully next Sunday evening in The Matchmaker. A number of local are on the tapis this month. The Ladies of the G. A. R. will produce Alabama the 17th and Astoria Lodge of Elks will produce Tommy Getz's A Night in Bohemia, 30-31. Both performances are being actively rehearsed every evening until they come off. ## Harry S. Northrup

Harry S. Northrup, to whom San Francisco lays some claim, was here at the old Columbia just three years ago this week, with Florence Roberts in The Strength of the Weak. Since then Mr. Northrup has created the leading heavy roles on Broadway in The Love Route and The Round-Up, and now as leading man in Clyde Fitch's Girls he gives a performance that stamps him as one of the best light comedians on our stage. Not since the days of Henry Miller and Heartsease has Mr. Northrup done such excellent work. Several years ago, we believe it was Frank McKee who proclaimed Mr. Northrup to be the best heavy man on the American stage. Having acquired that distinction, he at once began to assiduously live it down and took up leads, and with characteristic success. It is a far cry from strong heavies to Edgar in Girls, but he has bridged the dangerous abyss with consummate skill.

Lillian Russell at the Van Ness Theatre Next Week

Lillian Russell will be the attraction at the Van Ness next week where she is to be seen for seven nights and two matinees, starting Monday, March 15 in her great racing comedy success, Wildfire. Miss Russell will strike San Francisco when the people are ripe for a pleasing comedy and the signs indicate that she will have an engagement here that will hang up a high-water mark. It seems almost superfluous to introduce Wildfire to our readers. The story of the play has been made more or less well known and its wonderful achievements in the way of business have been common gossip in theatrical circles since the season began. The story briefly concerns a widow who in settling up her husband's estate finds that about the only tangible property left is a stable of race horses. He had conducted the stable in secret and circumstances are such that the widow is forced to keep up this deception. The racing game is new to her, but her feminine intuitions come to her rescue and she eventually wins out in the face of all but overwhelming odds. Broadhurst and Hobart, who made the play for Miss Russell, hit upon a happy environment for their story and they were fortunate in getting Lillian Russell to play it. The action leads up to and around a big race track on the day a famous handicap is being run. It has been proclaimed the best comedy of the American turf yet to be staged, and this is due to the clever manner in which heretofore ordinary characters have been utilized for dramatic purposes and made into splendid types. The second act takes place in a stable at the track and depicts scenes leading up to and during the running of the all-important race. This gives the play a touch that is unique and the faithfulness of the scene and the adroit manner in which the climax is reached, lifts it out of the ordinary and lends to it a potent element of appeal. The comedy predominates but is cleverly utilized to develop the climax and then comes the beautiful third act, which is further out of the rut in that it reaches a denouement without being at all anti-climatic. The piece has been handsomely staged by Mr. Brooks and in sending his peerless star to the Pacific Coast he has used good judgment in keeping her original New York cast intact and sending her on tour with the exact production that figured in the metropolitan engagement. The gowns which Miss Russell will wear will also be a distinct feature of her performances. They are of the very latest Directoire models and calculated to make her feminine admirers sit up and notice. In the company that will support Miss Russell will be found Frank Sheridan, Will Archie, Thurston Hall, Sydney Booth, Gilbert Douglas, Joseph Tuohy, Adolphe Lestina, Franklyn Roberts, Ernest Truex, T. Hayes Hunter, Annie Buckley, Ellen Mortimer and Mary Elizabeth Forbes.

Wants Actors to Unionize

New York, March 7.—The bringing of all of the actors of the United States into a national association, which could affiliate with the American Federation of Labor, was urged here tonight by John Mitchell, former president of the United Mine Workers of America. He did this at a meeting of the members of the Actors' Society of America, the Actors' Church Alliance, the Actors' Union, the Vaudeville Comedy Club, the White Rats of America, and a number of other associations of actors, called to protest against alleged abuses at the hands of theatrical agents.

University Glee Club Will Tour

Berkeley, March 10.—The University Glee and Mandolin Clubs will leave, May 12th, for a tour, with Chicago as their ultimate destination. The trip will be made under the auspices of the Santa Fe Railroad for the edification of that company's employees throughout the system. L. H. Hibbard, president of the mandolin club, completed the arrangements today and announced that the clubs would visit Los Angeles, Albuquerque, the Grand Canyon of the Colorado and other places of interest. In Chicago the students will appear in concert at the University of Chicago and Northwestern University and return home without stop.

Personals

MYRTLE VANE will leave for Vancouver on the 20th to take the position of leading woman with the Walter Sanford company.

A CABLE from Paris says: Sarah Bernhardt has announced that she will appear in the title role of M. Rostrand's Cyrano de Bergerac. She was very much disappointed at not being selected by M. Rostrand to replace the late Coquelin Aine in the leading role of Chanticleer. This was impossible on account of her sex. By leaving the House of Moliere, M. Lebargy will forfeit several valuable privileges. There will be no pension of $1,200 for him when he is superannuated, and no gift of $30,000 when he gets too old to act. Also he may be fined $20,000 for summarily leaving the Francaise, of which for many years he had been a "societaire." But the actor is so anxious to play this part in Rostrand's drama, which the whole theatrical world has been waiting for and discussing for three years or more, that he really may leave the national theatre without the formality of resigning.

New Copyright Bill Is Passed

We have just heard from Hollis E. Cooley, the head of the Producing Managers' Association, in New York, which today is directing a campaign against play piracy. It is with great pleasure we observe that the National Association of Theatrical Producing Managers and its affiliations have accomplished in one year more than all the other numerous but unorganized interests that have been fighting for a just, comprehensive and satisfactory copyright law during the last ten years. The Currier Bill, which passed both houses of Congress recently, is a complete revision of all previous copyright acts—a compromise between all conflicting parties to which all have given their agreement. By the terms of the Currier Law play pirates may be summarily locked up and manuscript agencies who sell typewritten copies of plays without pretending to transfer the dramatic rights may be dealt with in like fashion. The beauty of the new law is that it shuts off the supply of piratical play scripts by hitting a blow squarely in the face of the piracy bureaus which have flourished in Chicago and some other cities. Under the provisions of the new act song writers and composers, for the first time since the invention of mechanical reproducing music devices, will receive a royalty on their work—2 cents on every record manufactured—and may enforce the collection of such royalties by injunction if necessary. Until the organization of the National Association of Producing Managers, principally for the purpose of obtaining the enactment of a copyright law that would protect managers, dramatists, composers and lyric writers, there had been no concerted action on behalf of these interests. True, now and then some committee from the American Dramatists' Society, or the Words and Music Association, or the Music Publishers' Association, would appear before the copyright sub-committee and make a statement of individual grievance, only to be told by the legislators, "We never heard of you before." More often than not the lawyers would be the only ones to show up. Saying, "Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I represent so and so," this lawyer and that one would have a his little wrangle, pack up his papers and go back to New York. After some years of this sort of thing it was seen that concerted action was the only hope of success. When the National Association of Theatrical Producing Managers was organized, Hollis E. Cooley was appointed secretary of that body, and as soon as the wheels were put in motion he became chairman of the allied committees appointed to take up the copyright matter. Ligon Johnson was retained as general counsel for the association. Nathan Burkan, as associate counsel, represented the musical side of the controversy. Congressman Sulzer of New York was the especial friend of managers, dramatists and composers, and his able services are represented in the new law by an amendment providing injunctive relief in cases of music record piracy. Mr. Cooley marshaled his forces, and, 140 strong, they went to Washington to present the case to the general copyright committee. Even then the committee replied to the delegation in the old set phrase: "Never heard of you before. Who is the National Association of Theatrical Producing Managers?" It was necessary for the resourceful Hollis to produce documents and letters showing that he represented just about $50,000,000. William A. Brady made a sensible and vigorous speech, in which he told the lawmakers that at that very minute his Way Down East company was waiting in the Baltimore & Potomac Depot for a train that would bring it back to New York, having been forced to close on account of the infringement of the Cinematograph Company. Lawyer Ligon Johnson personally presented his case to President Roosevelt. For the first time the general copyright committee was impressed and the new Currier Law is the net result.

Ethel Barrymore To Be Married To Millionaire's Son

BOSTON, March 9.—Ethel Barrymore is to be married here next Sunday to Russell Griswold Colt, eldest son of Colonel Samuel Pomeroy Colt, president of the United States Rubber Company and of the Industrial Trust Company of Providence, R. I. It is said that only one person has been let into the secret, the father of the intended bridegroom, who is so much pleased with the match that he has announced his intention of making a large settlement on his son. Colonel Colt is reputed to be worth several millions. Russell Griswold Colt is 26 years old. Miss Barrymore is now playing in the Hollis Theatre, and the ceremony is to be celebrated quietly in this city. It is the intention of the popular young actress to remain on the stage after her marriage.

New Amusement Company

The Sommers Amusement Company is the latest incorporation that is preparing to invade the local amusement field. They are to acquire and conduct theatres throughout the State, their initial movement being the Victory Theatre on Sutter Street, between Fillmore and Steiner Streets, on which they have acquired an extended lease. The artists and decorators are already busily engaged in the work of embellishment, and when completed the house will be the home office of the circuit. All the theatres will be devoted to artistic vaudeville and motion pictures and will be under the personal direction of Mr. B. Sommers, the general manager of the incorporation, who has an extensive experience in this particular line.

American Theatre

Musical and comic opera managers are constantly recruiting their companies from the ranks of the vaudevilles. McIntyre and Heath, Ward and Vokes, George Cohan, Mabel Hite, Richard Carle, Eddie Foy, George Primrose, De Wolf Hopper, Frank Daniels and many more stage celebrities were formerly vaudevillians. And now Manager William Cullen has induced the Lockhart Sisters, the clever singing and dancing duo, to leave the vaudeville stage and join The Burgomaster, that always popular musical comedy, which comes to the American Theatre for one week, beginning this Sunday afternoon. The company is headed by Harry Hermesen, who was associated with Kolb and Dill at Fischer's Theatre for several seasons in all the notable productions before the fire, and he numbers his friends in San Francisco by the hundreds. He will appear as Peter Stuyvesant, Governor of New Amsterdam, who sleeps for two hundred years and awakes to find himself in modern New York. The costumes for the revival are all new and are the handsomest, it is said, of any musical comedy company now touring.

Alcazar Theatre

That the Alcazar's greatest achievement has been scored with The Darling of the Gods is the opinion of every patron of the Sutter Street playhouse who has witnessed the Belasco-Long drama of old Japan. Pictorially, nothing equal to it has ever been presented in a stock theatre anywhere, and histrionically it leaves nothing to be desired, as every one of the players has a role that fits and had ample time in which to study and rehearse it. That it is even a finer production than the original, in which Blanche Bates and a selected company appeared here about eight years ago, is conceded by every person who is qualified to compare. And the verdict is not surprising when it is taken into consideration with the fact that David Belasco himself directed two full Alcazar rehearsals and that most of the Alcazar's costumes and properties are absolutely new, having been manufactured right here in San Francisco. Their historical accuracy is evidenced by the eulogistic comment they evoke from scholarly Japanese in the audience. Among the most enthusiastic admirers of the play and the way in which it is presented are the sons and daughters of Nippon. Another week of The Darling of the Gods commences next Monday evening, and if box-office indications are reliable, another series of crowded houses is assured, for the advance demand for seats is unprecedentedly strong. This agreeable state of things finds explanation in the widespread appeal of the play. Its scenic effects charm those who relish having their vision pleased at the theatre, and the work of the people in the cast gratifies all admirers of impressive acting. More than 125 people are employed in the production, and in the five acts there are eleven distinct pictures.

The Orpheum

A particularly novel and entertaining program is announced for next week. It will be headed by the Eight Palace Girls, who for several seasons were a great sensation at the Palace Theatre, London. They excel as singers and dancers and created quite a furore recently in New York. Associated with them is James Clemmons, an agile and original eccentric dancer. Ray L. Royce, who is well and favorably remembered as the splendid character delineator, will offer an amusing monologue in which he impersonates quite a variety of types of rural folk. James McDonald and Valerie Huntington, who excel in the rendition of English and American songs and are also proficient dancers, are expected to be a particularly interesting and entertaining incident of the new program. Their repertoire varies from American ragtime to Killarney love ditties, and one of their greatest hits is an American character song, with McDonald as a newsboy and Miss Huntington as his best girl. The Blessings, who bring with them the reputation of being the cleverest equilibrists and head and hand balancers on the German stage, will make their first appearance. Next week concludes the engagement of Six Little Girls and a Teddy Bear, the Kitabanzai Troupe. G. Herbert Mitchell and Emma Rainey and the full-blooded Indians from the Shoshone Reservation in A Modern Pocahontas. A new and interesting series of motion pictures will be a pleasant finale to the entertainment.

The Baker Stock of Portland Is Still On the Crest of Popularity

PORTLAND, March 8.—HEILIG THEATRE (Cal. Heilig, mgr.; Wm. Pangle, res. mgr.)—This house has been dark for more than a week with the exception of a concert given by the local Symphony Orchestra, which was a hit in every meaning of the word. The soloists of the evening were Rose Bloch-Bauer and Waldemar Lind, and it must be admitted that their work was of the highest artistic order. It looks like that the orchestra has come to stay, and success seems to be written for any event they undertake in the future. There is a heavy advance sale for The Red Mill, which comes the latter part of this week. The house is again dark after that engagement for quite a while.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—The production offered yesterday by Managers Baker and Seaman was Paul Armstrong's Society and the Bulldog, the first time it has ever been done here, and I might add I believe the first time anywhere in stock. The play reminds one of Armstrong's other play, The Heir to the Hoorah, dealing as it does with miners. The story is an interesting one, bearing upon the difficulties of a millionaire mine owner of Nevada in introducing his daughter into the four hundred of New York. A pretty love story is entwined in the play. Izetta Jewel gave us another one of those parts in which she seems to be the strongest, along the lines of The Girl of the Golden West. William Gleason, as her father, gave us one of those fine Gleason performances we are sure to receive, and his acting as the miner was par excellent. Mrs. Mina Gleason, as the leader of society, was also right in her element, and it can be said truthfully that it is another Gleason week, because Jimmy Gleason in the character role of a Swede added to the lustre of the Gleasonites. Sydney Ayers in the lead did not have much to do but was equal to the demands made upon him. Words of praise should also be given to Louise Kent and Maribel Seymour for fine performances. Tonight and the next succeeding three nights The College Widow will be repeated, then comes Faust.

BAKER THATRE (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—Daniel Sully is back with us again, and his Irish humor is as welcome as of yore. He opened yesterday at this theatre to a good house, in his new play, The Matchmaker, and in which he is again found playing a priest, one of those parts in which he has no superiors. Time has been good to Sully, and in this piece he plays with all the ease of youth that has made him famous. The play deals with Western life in Idaho, and went well with the audience. The support is good, including Margaret Manning in the lead and Julius Wright in the heavy. The play is well put on. This house is dark next week.

ORPHEUM THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—The past week was as entertaining from a vaudeville standpoint as we have had for quite a while. James Clemons and his dancing girls was a good headliner, and the work of Clemons was high class. Jeanette Adler and her picks were as good as we have had in that line, and the sketch of Ward-Klare and company was very entertaining. This week's bill, commencing tonight, includes Violet Black and company in The Subway; Four Pucherrys; James H. Cullen; Sibon's novelty circus; Vernon; Sisters DeFaye; Griswold and Padden.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—Marie Corelli's story, Wormwood, is the bill for this week at this house. As most everyone knows, the story of the play is founded on the drink absinthe, and it is interesting in every way. Ralph Belmont is playing the lead and does well, and Virginia Duncan is playing opposite to him in her usual faultless manner. Rupert Drum and Mrs. Lillian Griffiths are also well cast and give enjoyable portrayals of their respective roles.

GRAND THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—Adolph Zink is the headliner for this week; the others on the bill include John LeClaire; Mareens, Neverro and Mareens; Fougere and Emerson; Australian Tree Fellers; and Harry McDuffee.

PANTAGES has John L. Sullivan and Jake Kilrain in a friendly sparring match for their feature act.

Nickelodeon Managers Protest

Representatives of the nickelodeons made a hard fight before the Supervisors' Public Building Committee Tuesday to obtain a modification of the proposed ordinance prescribing regulations for the building and conduct of the structures in which their shows are to be housed, and were to a certain extent successful. The most important concession made to them was that the ordinance should only apply to buildings to be hereafter constructed. Another concession made to the nickelodeon men was that 400 instead of 350 be the seating capacity division line between buildings to be governed by "nickelodeon law."

Florence Roberts On Verge of Breakdown

A wire from Kansas City last Monday said: Florence Roberts is confined to her room at the Baltimore Hotel upon the advice of a physician. The actress, who is on the verge of a nervous breakdown, left her company at Cheyenne last Friday, coming directly to Kansas City. "Absolute rest and quiet is necessary for Miss Roberts' recovery," said an attendant Monday evening. "We hope that she will be able to rejoin her company in the course of a week or so."

Paul M. Potter Sues for Royalties

Paul M. Potter, author of The Girl from Rector's, now being produced at Weber's Theatre, New York, got an order last week from Judge Ward of the United States Circuit Court requiring Albert H. Woods and Joseph M. Weber to appear in court and show cause why they should not be enjoined from producing The Girl from Rector's pending the action in equity brought by Potter to recover royalties. The playwright declares in his complaint that he has received no money whatever from the play, and that the statements of the box-office receipts have not been shown to him. The Girl from Rector's came to Weber's Theatre on February 1.

Sissieretta Jones, known all over the world as the Black Patti, and a great favorite in this city, will appear with her Troubadours at the American Theatre early next month. Her voice is said to be improving with years and her supporting company is described as being better than ever.

Strauss' New Opera, Elektra

Critics are unable to agree upon the merits of Richard Strauss' Elektra, which undoubtedly may be considered the greatest musical achievement since Wagner's Parsifal. All seem to be utterly at sea, since its premiere in Dresden on Monday, January 25th. One critic calls it a "prodigious orchestral orgy." Another agrees with this statement, and expresses himself thus: "Strauss got 125 musicians to form tonight's orchestra; and to this was added the efforts of a great chorus, until at times, the sound culminated in a cyclonic roar of deafening intensity." The opinion of Strauss, perhaps, is of greater importance than the others, for without doubt, his music is far in advance of the time, and will be understood and appreciated more fully in the future. At least a second hearing will present it more clearly. The score is said to be wonderfully complicated, and full of new effects. Just before the performance, the composer said: "I am full of hope, for I believe I have created a great work, in which I have obtained orchestral colors never hitherto produced. I believe my fame will stand or fall with Elektra. Everything of art I possess is in it. I am amazed myself at the effects. Perhaps Elektra is in advance of the age. Time will tell. But men whose opinion I value are deeply impressed. The Dresden orchestra has done wonders. It furnishes an example for the world." Great successes were scored by Mme. Schumann-Heink as Clytemnestra and Frau Krull as Elektra. It is reported, but not confirmed, that Oscar Hammerstein has paid for the American rights to the opera, $5000 cash, and has guaranteed royalties of $18,000 for thirty performances, and beyond this has paid $6000 for the right for reproducing the music. Strauss' local publisher has already paid $27,500 for the music.

The plot of the opera closely follows the libretto of Hugo von Hofmannsthal's hideous tragedy, and is based on the passion of revenge. The story deals with the Trojan war. Elektra was the daughter of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra. During the king's absence in the war against Troy his wife, Clytemnestra, bestowed her favors on Aegisthus, and with her paramour murdered Agamemnon on his return from the Trojan war. Elektra and her brother Orestes in return killed both their mother and Aegisthus. Although Strauss was recalled fifteen times by the audience of 2000 persons, from many parts of the world, and which also contained scores of noted persons, the success of the opera is regarded by some as problematic, by others as a "success d'estime."

The Itinerant Showmen of England

As among the gypsies, there is caste to be considered in the show world. The "toffs" are circus, menagerie and waxworks proprietors like Lord George Sanger of immortal memory; Barnum & Bailey, with a hundred cars to carry "The Greatest Show on Earth;" Philip Astley, who owned nineteen amphitheatres in succession; Wombwell, too, and Manders, Ginnett and Fossett; and still the earlier names of Cook, Ord, Swallow and Polos. These wonderful people, with their wild beasts, equestriennes, acrobats, conjurers and human freaks, have moved through the countryside with the display of capital and splendid organization. But the humbler proprietors of lighter "jags," or solitary side-shows, gregariously club together to observe the almanac's list of Martinmas hirings, horse fairs and village feasts, whither for years on end they have returned, without ever mixing up with the big menagerie folk of a higher caste who go their own way independently of calendar fixtures. Some do say the period of decadence of the traveling show set in twenty years ago. Up to that time the showman did most business in agricultural market towns where there were no municipal authorities to take extortionate tolls, as in these days of heavy rates. However, for some reason not explained Nottingham Goose Fair bears today the very highest reputation as a money-taking event for the showman, and Hull Fair comes easily second; but, as a rule, the potentialities for business do not lie in industrial places touched by the electric tram and the "two houses a night" music hall. The worst of summer fair times in large centers is that thousands of people are taken off to the seaside and inland places by cheap railway trips just when the showman used to reap his harvest of pence. Weather and trade have a great deal to do with the showman's takings in both town and country. In most agricultural market towns the farm servants are thriftier than they used to be, hesitating to spend the few coppers they fumble and jingle in their trousers pockets. In such good cities for showmen as York, where they congregate periodically in the open-air market place, a stand measuring sixty feet in diameter lets for $125 for four days, or $250 per week. Many electric gondola, ostrich, and motor car roundabouts belong to limited liability companies, while those set off with the name Tuby belong to a Doncaster town councillor. For the most part, old stock attractions have lost their magic. Shows, both big and little, have to be kept well up to date at very great expense, especially where mechanical inventions are favored; and such a speculator will have to use all his wits to avoid financial disaster.

The Orpheum

Violet Black, a clever and attractive light comedienne, who made a great success in the comedietta, A West Point Regulation, will head the Orpheum bill next week. Her contribution will consist of an amusing sketch, entitled In the Subway, by Edgar Allen Woolf, the action of which takes place in New York's underground tunnel of traffic, "the tube." Miss Black's little play does not depend for its success on the novelty or oddity of its scene, but abounds in amusing situations, witty dialogue and surprising complications. As Betty Trimble she has a capital ingenue role, which she plays for its full value. She will be supported by Cameron Clemons, Eugene Keith, Herbert Morris and E. W. Brown. The Four Poncherrys, who will appear in this city for the first time, consist of one lady and three gentlemen who are famous in Europe as aerial acrobats and daring and expert wire walkers. An old friend with a new monologue will be James H. Cullen, generally known on this Coast as "the man from the West." Silbon's Novelty Circus should make a strong appeal to the Orpheum patrons for it is a splendid instance of what may be accomplished by skill, patience and kindness in the training of cats. The performance of these feline beauties is most remarkable and one of them successfully loops the human loop. Next week will conclude the engagement of Ray L. Royce; The Blessings; James McDonald and Valerie Huntington and of the Eight Palace Girls and James Clemons. A novel series of motion pictures will be a fitting finale to a program of extraordinary excellence, novelty and variety.

Alcazar Theatre

Of all the plays built around a horse race, Blue Grass, which is to be the Alcazar's offering next Monday night and throughout the week, is pronounced the peer by the New York critics. It had a long run on Broadway last year, and Frederic Belasco was the first stock theatre manager to secure the right to present it. Paul Armstrong, author of Salomy Jane and The Heir to the Hoorah, wrote it, and it is a more finished product than either of those two successes. Blue Grass is redolent of Kentucky and of the gentleman breeders of the region where the best thoroughbreds are developed. A major love story runs through the five scenes of the three acts, and there is a minor love story, too. But perhaps even more interesting is the atmosphere of horseflesh at its best and the feel of pounding hoofs and flying dust and cheering crowds in a grand stand. The play appeals to big elemental emotions, and therein lies its popularity. When much of the sentiment has to do with the simple affection of a gray-haired darkey, Old Folks, for the glistening old mare, My Lady. When he says, "Ah reckon yo' don't know yo' baby boy is racin' in Looeyville," and, a bit later, when he describes the great day when My Lady herself stepped out on a track like paper, "Like she wah 'fraid she's break it," and then told of the race that she won—her last race it was—a stoic would find the inclination to applaud irresistible. There is a genuine pathos in the situation brought about at the end of the first act by old Melissa announcing what the visitors to Colonel Taylor's home will have for "suppah," and in the big scene in the paddock, when the winning horse is brought in, the audience involuntarily swells the cheer set up by the folk on the stage.

American Theatre

The last performances of Luters & Pixley's always pleasing The Burgomaster will be given this Saturday afternoon and evening, and at the Sunday matinee The Gingerbread Man, Rankin & Sloane's tuneful comic opera, or musical fantasy, as it is termed by them, will pay this city a return visit for one week only, and with matinees Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday. The Gingerbread Man is said to have lost none of its charm since it was rendered here last season and when it broke all records, past and present, for big business at the American. The cast contains many names that have been connected with it since its inception, and Ross Snow and Fred Nice, the two principal fun-makers of last year, are still with the company, with a barrel of new comedy to unload. Many important improvements have been made in the book, and, with the aid of the composer, some interpolations have been added that are described as being immensely amusing and not tending to disturb the continuity of the story in any way. Sloane's pretty and catchy music, with which the fantasy abounds, created a distinct vogue in San Francisco among music lovers in general last season, and the pretty melodies, including John Dough, The Beautiful Land of Bon Bon, Mazie, Moon, Moon, Moon, Every Little Something, Old Rameses and many others are still hummed and whistled by those who were fortunate enough to hear them. There are sixty-two people in the production, and the costumes and scenic effects are described as being singularly striking and beautiful. Dan Sully, in his latest success, The Matchmaker, will follow The Gingerbread Man at the American.

A. G. Delamater, who was for several years identified with and largely responsible for the success of Fred C. Whitney's attractions, has formed a partnership with William Norris, for the purpose of making first-class theatrical productions. Mr. Norris is well remembered as the creator of King Dodo; The Burgomaster; Alan in Babes in Toyland; and The Jester with Viola Allen in The Palace of the King. He is at present the featured comedian with Hattie Williams in Fluffy Ruffles. The first production to be made by the firm is a dramatization of Geo. Barr McCutcheon's most popular story, Beverly of Graustark, dramatized by Robert M. Baker of Boston. A spring tour in the first-class theatres is contemplated.

The Right of Way

GUY STANDING

THEODORE ROBERTS

No one having read the delightfully strong story of Sir Gilbert Parker's, The Right of Way, can afford to miss the dramatization of it which will be the attraction at the Van Ness Theatre next week, beginning Monday night, and including matinees Wednesday and Saturday. The play has been most adequately handled and all the thrilling features have been preserved, though presented in living form far more vividly than could be the case in the printed page. The play has proved a strong drawing card everywhere it has been presented. Interest for the most part centers around two male characters, Charley Steele and Joe Portugais, and these two parts are played splendidly by Guy Standing and Theodore Roberts. These two excellent actors keep very much in the scene during the course of the play. Both roles are difficult to handle with any semblance of realism, but both have the characters well in hand and make all that is possible out of them. These two actors are given capital support and the several acts are set in most becoming pictures.

Campanini Splits With Hammerstein

Cleofonte Campanini, who has been the leading conductor at Hammerstein's Manhattan Opera House since it opened in New York, and who is a brother-in-law of Mme. Tetrassini, sent to the newspapers last week this statement: "It has been announced by the newspapers that my contract with Mr. Hammerstein has been renewed for five years. This is not the case. We were unable to agree on terms, and in consequence my contract with Mr. Hammerstein ends with this season. I take this occasion to thank the press and public of New York, who have shown themselves so courteous to me during the three seasons at the Manhattan.

"CLEOFONTE CAMPANINI.
"NEW YORK, March 8."

Mr. Hammerstein followed this with a statement saying that his five-year engagement of Campanini was only verbal and declaring that they had not differed over a matter of salary. Mr. Hammerstein said: "It is true that the verbal agreement between Mr. Campanini and myself has not been confirmed by a written contract. It is not due to any disagreement as to financial terms or any personal difference between him and me. Our personal relations are as cordial as ever and will always remain so. I fully appreciate Mr. Campanini's services and have for him the very highest regard. The fact is that when Miss Garden objected to Mlle. Cavallieri singing any of her roles she made some remarks to which the Italian members of my company took exception as reflecting upon them. Since then the entente cordiale between the French artists and the Italian artists has been strained. When it came to a matter of signing a contract with Mr. Campanini I found it necessary, with a view to restoring amicable relations between the rival camps of artists, to insist upon certain added conditions, and upon this negotiations fell through. I have but one object to consider, and that is the best interests of my operatic institutions. I must be master or otherwise I cannot continue giving opera. That is all there is to it. I can add again that personal relations between Mr. Campanini and myself have never been more cordial and will never be otherwise. The differences are entirely regarding matters of policy in the conduct of my opera, in which I must be master. As the preponderance of the repertoire next season will be French I shall have no less than six musical conductors next season—two of them for French operas, two for Italian opera and two for opera comique. Among them will be one of the greatest living conductors, who has already been selected." Mr. Hammerstein declined to say to whom he referred as "one of the greatest living conductors." The Italian wing, he said, had declined to have anything to do with the French wing since the Garden-Cavallieri disturbance. Mr. Hammerstein remarked also that from his experience with singers he has got in the habit of "allowing 10 per cent off" for uncertainty when he makes contracts.

Julia Marlowe To Tour South America

The Shuberts announce that, beginning about the 1st of September, Julia Marlowe will make her first tour of South America under their direction. This is not only the first time that Miss Marlowe has toured South America, but it is also the first time that any of the great New York managers have booked an entire South American route for a star. The few Americans who have played in South American cities have heretofore done so under the auspices of various Spanish-American impresarios. Miss Marlowe will go first to New Orleans, and after playing for one week there will open her tour in Havana, where she has never yet been seen. From Havana, where she will remain for one week, she will go to the City of Mexico for a longer engagement. Her tour will then follow the Atlantic coast line south, including Vera Cruz, Mexico; Colon, Panama; Caracas, Venezuela; Georgetown, British Guiana; Parambina, Dutch Guiana; Cayenne, French Guiana, Para, Natal, Porto Alegre and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil; Montevideo, Uruguay, Buenos Ayres and La Plata, Argentine Republic. Then returning north by the Pacific coast line, Miss Marlowe will be seen at Santiago and Valparaiso, Chili; Lima, Peru; Quito, Ecuador;

Panama, Panama; San Jose, Costa Rica; Managua and Leon, Nicaragua; San Salvador, Salvador, and the City of Guatemala, Guatemala. Miss Marlowe will then return to the United States, playing San Francisco and the other principal cities on the Pacific Coast. Miss Marlowe's repertoire during the tour will include several of the Shakespearean dramas; The Goddess of Reason, which is expected to have a distinct appeal because of the French Revolutionary episodes in the drama, and Don Quixote, the rights of which are loaned her by Mr. Sothorn for this tour. In Don Quixote, the play founded on perhaps the one classic most familiar to all Spanish-Americans Miss Marlowe will appear as Dulcinea. Miss Marlowe will travel with her own English-speaking company and scenic equipment.

One of the promising attractions coming to the American Theatre is Daniel Sully's new play, The Matchmaker, in which the distinguished actor and comedian is winning the greatest success of his long and brilliant career. The Matchmaker is a comedy-drama in three acts by Jerrold Shepard, a rising young author, and for dramatic force, richness of comedy, cleverness of construction and for general excellence is by far the best play Mr. Sully has ever produced.

The Black Patti Troubadours, headed by Sissieretta Jones, the famous Black Patti, will follow Dan Sully at the American Theatre, in their new two-act musical comedy, The Blackville Strollers, one of the biggest singing and comedy shows on the road. Among the catchy numbers with which the piece abounds are Shooting Time, Silas Green from New Orleans, Texarkana Anna, Oh My Miss Mandy, Mandy Lane, Move On, Mr. Moon, Farewell, Brother Silas, and ten other whistling numbers.

ROSE MURRAY, the soubrette with the dainty pedal extremities, is the Margery Daw of this season's Gingerbread Man.

Plays and the Public Standard

Maybe if those who shout so loudly for the uplift of the stage would turn their attention to enlarging the public understanding of what makes a good play, the results would be much more effective. Of all the powerful influences for culture and refinement—for education, if you prefer—the stage receives the least serious consideration. Most of us are profoundly ignorant as to what makes a good play or why a bad play occasionally succeeds. We merely accept the record made upon our emotions without any discrimination. We don't take the trouble to think the matter out, to attempt to explain the whys and wherefores. The Public That Pays is satisfied with its own taste and judgment, without any particular desire to take the initiative in raising the standard. And the manager is no altruist. He believes it is his business to conform to the public standard. That is why there are so many foolish plays. Yet the truth is that the public standard is steadily, if unconsciously improving, and that plays are growing better and better because playwrights study these questions much more carefully and more deeply than the managers. There are familiar reversion to the old order of things, just as there are waves of indecency that manifest themselves now and then, but these do not last long. — From The Players, in the March Everybody's.

New Stock for Santa Barbara

Charley King, Jack McDonald, Franklyn Hall, Chet Stevens, Marjorie Rambeau and Lillian Burnett have arrived in Santa Barbara from Long Beach to play a season of stock at the old theatre. They will be joined this week by Frank Bonner, who closed last Wednesday with the Girton stock of Eureka.

Lenore Butler

Another San Francisco artist has scored artistic triumphs away from home. Lenore Butler, prima donna of the Olympic Opera Company, which was organized in Springfield, Mo., and gives regular operatic repertoires in the more prominent interior cities of the East and Middle West, is now visiting her mother and her husband, Joseph Greven of this city. Miss Butler scored quite a brilliant success and her impressions upon the people may be gathered from the following extracts of leading papers:

"Lenore Butler as Bettina in The Mascotte was decidedly the favorite. She scored a great hit."

"The rendition of the Moon Song in the second act of The Mikado by Miss Butler was very beautiful indeed, and the appreciation of the audience was shown by repeated storms of applause."

"Miss Lenore Butler as Serpolette in The Chimes of Normandie captured the audience."

"Miss Lenore Butler as Giroffe Giroffa was simply great, and her drinking song in the second act received two encores."

"Lenore Butler as Zerline in Fra Diavolo displays extraordinary versatility."

"Lenore Butler as the general's daughter in Pirates of Penzance, impressed the audience by the beautiful rendition of the waltz song."

"Lenore Butler (Serena) in Said Pasha was encored to the echo."

Miss Butler studied with Joseph Greven the following grand opera roles: Marguerite, Aida, Lucia, Martha, Agnes and Agathe (Freischütz), Zerlina (Fra Diavolo), Arline (Bohemian Girl), Elsa (Lohengrin), Elizabeth (Tannhauser), Queen of the Night (Magic Flute), Gilda (Rigoletto), and Violetta (Traviata). In addition to these complete grand operatic roles, Miss Butler studied the principal arias of a great many additional grand and comic operas.

Miss Butler is the recipient of a number of theatrical engagement offers from Chicago and New York agents for next season and is also considering two offers to appear in California.

Time To Hoote

A frisky young man in Butte, Played the Merry Widow waltz on a lute;

He played night and day
Till the neighbors did say
"Cut out that blamed lute or we'll shoote."

Florence Stone a Daring Balloonist

The first balloon ascensions on the Pacific Coast by women were made in Los Angeles last Tuesday, Mrs. Dick Ferris, Florence Stone and Mrs. Roy Knabenshue, accompanying their husbands in the balloon United States from Pasadena. After ascending 12,000 feet the party made a landing 19 miles east. The balloon American also ascended, with Captain A. E. Mueller as pilot, taking up four Pasadena society men—E. R. Sorver, C. M. Myers, R. C. Halstead and Charles Martin.

The Dollar Mark for New York

W. A. Brady telegraphed to George Broadhurst last week in Los Angeles that The Dollar Mark would have its first New York presentation at the Savoy Theatre the first Monday in September.

Dustin Farnum To Wed

Dustin Farnum is in possession of a marriage license to wed Mary B. Conwell of Cadiz, O., who was his leading lady two years ago. Farnum refuses to reveal when or where the wedding will take place.

The Summer At the American Theatre

Manager Abe Cohn, of the American Theatre, and Ed Homan, are in New York selecting summer attractions. Mr. Cohn has some big surprises to spring upon his return. THE DRAMATIC REVIEW is in receipt of information of a startling character regarding these, but is not at liberty to disclose the particulars.

Dixey to Tour in Mary Jane's Pa

Henry E. Dixey, in Mary Jane's Pa is now nearing the one hundredth performance in New York. Over eighty people are utilized in the company, and nearly every player contributes at least one laugh during the three acts of the amusing drama. It has been years since Henry Dixey has had a part that inspired him to such a charming display of his graceful art or made him so lovable to his audience. Only a few more weeks remain of his New York engagement, after which Henry W. Savage will send the big company on a brief spring tour. Next season Mr. Dixey and Mary Jane's Pa will be seen in all the principal cities during a tour that will include his first visit to the Pacific Coast in a number of years.

Los Angeles Is Still Turning Out and Packing the Burbank to Witness Peter Pan

LOS ANGELES, March 8.—MASON—The Mason Opera House is dark this week. It opens next week with Richard Carle in Mary's Little Lamb.

AUDITORIUM—Uncle Tom's Cabin is the offering at the Auditorium this week. It is given in form of a dramatic and musical pantomime, but there is close adherence to the strictly dramatic form, with all the old characters in evidence. Roscoe Arbuckle is a very serious and ponderous Uncle Tom, but gets by nicely with the pathetic business. Dee Loretta appears as Eliza. Olga Stech, as Topsy, Olive Dumond, as Eva, and Ben Selar, as George Harris. The staging and the costumes are very good and the performance as a whole is most satisfactory.

BURBANK—They continue to stand them up at the Burbank this, the third week of Peter Pan. It has been a tremendous success and Mr. Morosco has every reason to feel very proud of the work of his stock company. This is announced as positively the last week of Peter Pan, but you never can tell, and personally I'm inclined to doubt it—business is too good.

BELASCO—The Belasco theatre company has entered upon its second week of The Dollar Mark. The work of David H. Hartford is worthy of particular notice. He carefully avoids the pitfalls into which a less clever actor would find himself precipitated by the temptations of the part. The work of the other members of the cast continues to call forth much praise from every one that witnesses the performance.

MAJESTIC—The Black Patti Troubadours presenting The Blackville Strollers, is the attraction at the Majestic Theatre this week. The show is very good for its kind. Black Patti (Mme. Sisteretta Jones) has a very powerful voice and her company consists of some excellent comedians and singers. The song numbers are bright and there is not a slow minute in the performance. Among the song hits are Texarkana Ann; The Shouting Time; Fare You Well; My New Orleans and Move On, Mr. Moon. The comedians, while hardly Williams-Walker stars, yet do the performance credit.

GRAND—The Fortune Teller is a good musical play. Miss Nielson has some fine opportunities in this piece and she is not slow to grasp them. She does not merely emit songs; she sings them, coloring them with the piquant charm of voice and personality. Edgar Walsh, the new tenor, makes the most of his part and shows the master of a good voice. Charles Arling and Walter De Leon do good work in their respective parts. Ferris Hartman, as one of the gypsies, is of course most acceptable, even if some of the audience do not discover his identity at first. The chorus is unusually radiant and the costuming is exceptionally good.

ORPHEUM—Tom Wilson's prize fight sketch, At the Sound of the Gong, shares the honors with Israel Zangwill's psychological playlet, The Never, Never Land, at the Orpheum this week. The two skits afford an interesting opportunity to study the taste of local audiences. Imro Fox is one of the cleverest illusionists ever seen in Los Angeles. Mr. Fox does his mystifying with a pleasing patter of light talk, doubtless useful in diverting the attention of the audience, but none the less entertaining on that account. The bill also includes two good gymnastic teams, the Amoros Sisters and Tony Wilson and Mlle. Heloise. The two latter are foreign performers, considerably better in their line than the average. Holding over from last week are the Farrel-Taylor trio and Leon T. Bogee, the musical wonder.

LOS ANGELES—The Los Angeles Theatre offers an unusually good bill this week, six new acts making up the program. Watson and Little in A Matrimonial Bargain, have an unusually clever sketch, particularly good in its dialogue, which sparkles with laughs throughout. Lewis McCord and company offer Her Last Rehearsal, a farcical sketch. Cotter and Boulden do a good song and dance specialty, the child song of the woman being a most taking feature while the man's dancing is excellent. Marjorie Barrett sings acceptably, but should not try imitations. Les Theodors, aerialists, and Lukens' trained ponies, six in number, complete the bill. The ponies go through their tricks nicely and prove a popular feature of the program.

The summer season at the Grand Opera House gives every indication of being an interesting and lively period. Upon the termination of the engagement of the Ferris Hartman company—the first week in May—Murray and Mack will be at the Grand for a season of eight or ten weeks. Included in the company is Bobby Harrington, who for three years played George M. Cohan's part in Little Johnny Jones. Besides Harrington the Murray and Mack company will include a score or more of singing and dancing comedians as well as pretty girls who will lend their talents to that department of the drama usually known as the merry-merry. After the Murray and Mack engagement, Manager Blackwood has arranged for a season of twelve weeks of musical comedy, during which all the Rogers Brothers' successful pieces will be used with a team of well known and popular German comedians in the Rogers brothers original parts. The Rogers brothers' shows include In Wall Street, At Harvard, In Washington, The Reign of Error, In Panama, In London, In Ireland, In Paris, and In Congress. These plays are all from the pen of John J. McNally and were originally produced under the management of Klaw & Erlanger. In addition to the Rogers brothers' offerings, Mr. Blackwood has secured for the summer season 6560—GAL. 14 Dramatic son at the Grand such successes as The Widow Jones and Courtied Into Court, two of May Irwin's greatest hits; A Country Sport; A Straight Tip and The Press Agent, a trio of successes that made Peter F. Dailey famous; The Good Mr. Best, The Star and Garter, Boys and Girls, Me, Him and I, Busy Issy, A Hot Old Time.

EMPIRE—The bill for the week at the Empire includes Harry Walton, Chinese dialect comedian; Mr. and Mrs. Bob Miller, comedians; Annie Beauman, vocalist; and the Empire stock company in a one-act farce comedy by Al Franks, entitled Turn Him Out. Business continues to increase and the audiences seem pleased.

FISCHER'S—Her Husband is the title of the musical comedy which Producer Chas. Alphin is putting on at Fischer's this week. This is an amusing comedy garnished liberally with taking musical numbers which are well worth hearing. Ben T. Dillon in the role of the dope fiend has a clever bit of monologue, while in a team with Nellie Montgomery he offers some original clogging and fancy dancing. Miss Montgomery in the part of the blackface Topsy is the feature of a minstrel number. Max Bloom as an eccentric comedian makes good as a bashful schoolboy, while Pearl Jardinere also scores as the stage struck widow. Two of the song hits of the play are When You Steal a Kiss or Two, by Dot Raymond, and Love is Like a Cigarette, by Tracy McDermott.

UNIQUE—Sixty Minutes in Panama is the title of Frank Blair's musical comedy at the Unique this week. The piece has many laughable situations besides pleasing songs and chorus numbers. The members of the old stock company who are retained include Lillian Sutherland, Mabel Darragh, Jack Curtis and Will Armstrong. The new members are Morey Long, John J. Martin and Laurel Atkins (Mrs. Blair). Mr. Blair plans the presentation of a number of snappy new musical comedies, well sprinkled with new songs.

WALKER'S—Manager Pieper is showing good judgment in his selections at the Walker Theatre. The bill opens with Elma Elwood in pleasing songs and costumes. The Three Fraynes, which comprise Mr. and Mrs. Frayne and Master Frankie, present a one-act sketch entitled A Chinaman's Troubles, and causes mirth and merriment. Charles Lyndon is a blackface comedian with new jokes and songs. Berry, Nelson and Berry do some remarkable acrobatic feats. Alice Lewis is decidedly a live wire in her impersonations of prominent actors. Miss Lewis is a Los Angeles young woman, and this is her first appearance for several years before a Los Angeles audience. Morrison, Favara and company present a one-act sketch, entitled Roses and Orange Blossoms.

Ferris Hartman and company are rehearsing The Tales of Hoffman, which will have its first production in Los Angeles next week. Charles Farwell Edson, president of the Gamut Club, yesterday purchased a block of 180 orchestra seats for Monday night's performance. Violet Rand, a contralto, will make her first appearance with the company in The Tales of Hoffman. This show will be followed by The Sultan of Sulu.

NOTES ABOUT TOWN—Florence Reed, the new leading woman for the Belasco will soon be among us. Her initial appearance will be made in Henry Arthur Jones' play, The Dancing Girl. The Dollar Mark will have its first New York presentation at the Savoy Theatre the first Monday in September. C. M. EMERY.

LANSING ROWAN, who has been playing leads with the Girton stock in Eureka, will retire from the company next week.

Caruso Faces Complete Loss of Voice

New York, March 16.—It was announced tonight that Enrico Caruso would not appear in any of the operas at the Metropolitan this week. It is thought advisable to let the great tenor have a complete rest. Friends of Caruso declare he is suffering from relaxed vocal chords, and that it is doubtful if he will sing in public again this season.

Personals

THE three Walker children, Florence, Allie and Irene, will be brought to San Francisco to play the Darling children, Tootles, Michael and John, in Peter Pan, which will be produced at the Valencia Theatre, commencing at the Easter Sunday matinee.

WM. J. STOERMER, manager for Joseph De Grasse, is the new lessee of the Lodi Theatre.

ED JACOBSON is doing advance for the Ellefords, coming up from Southern California on the way to Honolulu.

HARRY BELMOUR and wife have joined The Players, under the management of Terry McKean.

C. T. WIPPERN is a proud father, for on March 14 Mrs. Wipern (Kate Carlson) presented him with a bouncing 12-pound boy. Congratulations.

THURLOW WHITE, who has been playing leads with the Girton stock in Eureka, closed with the company last Thursday and is now in San Francisco.

COL. J. E. CAVEN, manager of the Lee Willard company, left the city on Friday for Marshfield, Oregon, where the company commences an engagement for two weeks, starting Wednesday night, March 24.

COL. BILLY THOMPSON arrived in town Wednesday ahead of the Burns-Johnson fight pictures, which Wm. A. Brady will exhibit on the Coast. Col. Billy was accompanied by his wife and two small children, who will spend the summer in San Francisco.

ONE of the things about Madame Nazimova around which discussion rages everywhere at her first appearance, is her name. Many people insist that it is to be pronounced as if spelled "Nazzi-mo-va," but the player herself is authority for the statement that her name should be spoken as "Nah-zoom-ovah," with the accent on the "zoom."

CECILIA RHODA, who is quite a big favorite here, comes as one of the principal members of the company appearing in support of Richard Carle in Mary's Lamb. Others to appear with the star are Julia Ralph, Violet Seaton, Rita Stanwood, Mina Davis, Winifred Gilrairie, Joseph Phillips, Sylvain Langlois, Harry (Scamp) Montgomery, George Bogues and Abbott Adams. The author-comedian will also bring a large and active chorus.

MARY L. GARDEN, the prima donna, in speaking to friends at the Philadelphia opera house, said: "I shall sail for Europe April 13 and when I reach Paris about a week later I will give my answer to Prince Mavcordato, who has been in love with me." Prince Mavcordato is a well known figure on the continent, and comes from an old and honorable Russian family. He has been a persistent wooer of the singer for two or three years.

Correspondence

New York, March 14.—Shakespeare came back to New York last week when, at the New Amsterdam Theatre, Robert Mantell appeared in the title role of the tragedy, King John. The company was a very good one, the scenic background was most effective, and the big audience applauded liberally. King John is one of Shakespeare's plays that has long been neglected here. Historians will tell us when it was last done and by whom, but it is safe to assert that it came as a novelty to most of the audience. And whether it is one of the greater or lesser plays of Shakespeare may remain a topic for debating clubs to discuss on some rainy Tuesday. It sounded interesting enough to listeners, and there is no doubt that the performance itself was admirable. Mr. Mantell has earned high praise for his seriousness in his art before now. This time he proved this anew, for his portrayal of King John gave ample evidences of careful and conscientious study and of most laudable ability as an actor of Shakespeare. And for this he received a lot of applause, which he amply deserved. His company gave excellent support, too. Leila Frost, as Arthur, was charming, and Marie Russell, as Constance, voiced an appealing note of sentiment. As Hubert, Ethelbert Hales acted finely, and Fritz Leibert, as Philip, was convincing. Everybody, seemed in the serious mood and spirit of her and his respective parts; the handling of the crowds was picturesque, the mob scene was well done, and the whole production commanded interest and serious consideration. At the end of the play there was continued applause which brought forth Mr. Mantell to make a speech. His prefaced his brief remarks by disclaiming all credit for being a speechmaker, but he admitted that he wished to express his thanks on behalf of his company and himself for the manner in which the play had been received. * * * Mme. Mimi Aguglia, emotional specialist, who, it is announced, is to play here in English next season, appeared in the title role of Zaza last week in the Criterion Theatre. It was the first of a series of matinees given by the Sicilian players, who were seen at the Broadway Theatre early this season. At that time, in such plays as Malia, Mme. Aguglia, the star, exhibited a wealth of emotional force. She was impetuous, and she dwelt at length and in detail upon the first act dressing room scene. The impression seemed to be that she was more effective in the peasant roles she portrayed here previously. She was applauded quite liberally. Toto Majorana was an acceptable Dufresne, while R. Bongini played Cascard. The other roles were pretty well filled, and the familiar play went smoothly. * * * Laurence Irving and Mabel Hackney returned to New York last week for the first time since they appeared here with Sir Henry Irving, since dead, and began an engagement in vaudeville in the American Music Hall. They presented The King and the Vagabond, a playlet written by Mr. Irving, and it was accepted with enthusiasm. Mr. Irving as Louis XI of France and Miss Hackney as Gringoire, a youthful vagabond and street singer, took advantage of everything in their roles to give a finished performance. At the end of the playlet Mr. Irving made a little speech, after the company had been called before the curtain several times. He thanked the audience for its reception of them and said the only regret he had was caused by the fact that when they were here last they had been in the company of a great actor, my father. * * * Charles Frohman announces that his principal production next season will be Henri Bernstein's Israel, the cast of which is now completed so far as its principal members are concerned. Mr. Frohman will present Israel without a star. The three principal members of the company will be Constance Collier, James O'Neill and Holbrook Blinn of California, who is undoubtedly the coming American actor, playing respectively the mother, the father and the son—the chief characters in the play. * * * Charles Dillingham has completed the cast for a new musical comedy by George V. Hobart, The Candy Shop, which is to be produced in Atlantic City early in April. Among the players who are to appear are Louise Dresser and Maude Fulton; William Rock, Bliss Milford, Frank Lawler, Misses Annie Vennans, Florence Morrison and Eva Francis; Charles Angelle, Estelle Brunette, Ida Adams and Elba Kenny. * * * The Shuberts have announced the three productions to supplant three plays which recently opened at their theatres. E. H. Sothern will come to Daly's for a limited engagement following Julia Marlowe's engagement there in The Goddess of Reason on March 27. Her season, which was to have ended on March 20, was extended for the second time. Mr. Sothern will inaugurate his season on March 29, appearing in repertoire, including Hamlet, If I Were King, Richelieu and Lord Dunsany. The first New York production of Clyde Fitch's latest comedy, The Bachelor, will be at the Maxine Elliott Theatre next Monday evening, March 15. The play deals with the love affairs of George Goddard, the title role played by Charles Cherry, and his little stenographer played by Ruth Maycliffe. This is the first original play by Mr. Fitch that the Shuberts have produced. The opening performance of Bertha Galloway in The Return of Eve, by Lee Wilson Dodd, has been postponed two days in order to avoid conflict with other premieres. The first New York performance will, therefore, take place at the Herald Square Theatre on Wednesday evening, March 17.

New Orleans, La., March 13.—Tulane Theatre Society, and particularly the feminine representatives, was out in full force this week to greet John Drew and his excellent company in his new play, Jack Straw. How the ladies do adore Drew, and indeed they were doubly rewarded: first, by splendid play, and secondly by a veritable feast over the handsome gowns worn by the ladies of the company. Jack Straw is most clever; the lines are bright and entertaining, and the whole atmosphere is one of culture and refinement. The star is, as usual, brilliant, the role carrying many deft comedy phases, in which Drew is quite unctuous. His support is faultless, and particularly noticeable is the prominent part given to Rose Coghlan, who at times shares stellar honors. Her many friends were pleased to welcome her in such a fat part as Mrs. Parker Jennings, and doubly gratified over her consummate skill and art in carrying it. Some disappointment was felt over the inconspicuous role intrusted to Mary Boland, the leading woman. She is both beautiful and graceful, but the role gave only slight impressions of her talents. Adelaide Price was admirably charming and stately as Mrs. Warley, and Grace Henderson was likewise impressive as Miss Withers. The men were all good, particularly E. L. Davenport, Frank Goldsmith, E. S. Powell and Edw. Nicauder. Jack Straw will play Frisco in June. Next week, Paid in Full. Crescent Theatre: Once more do we give hearty welcome to Rose Melville and her imperishable play, Sis Hopkins, supported by an excellent company, of whom J. T. Ray, Lewis McElroy, Frank Minzey are the principals. Miss Melville has delighted large audiences by her clever impersonation of the role of the quaint Indiana character. Next week, Texas. W. L. McCONNELL.

Carson City, March 12.—Carson Opera House (Charles Peters, mgr.)—One night only, March 17, Babes in Toyland.

El Paso, Texas, March 16.—El Paso Theatre (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—Coming, Norman Hackett, in Classmates, March 20; Richard Carle, in Mary's Lamb, 22. Crawford (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—This is the last week of the Glass Players in repertoire. They have played to good business during their ten weeks in this city and given good satisfaction. Majestic (Frank Rich, mgr.)—Majestic Musical Comedy Company to capacity business nightly. The bill is changed twice a week at this house. The new summer theatre, corner of Texas and Stanton Streets, is being completed very rapidly. Mr. E. M. Skinner is backing this enterprise. There is talk of putting in vaudeville at the Crawford next season. GEO. A. MANSFIELD.

Salt Lake City, Utah, March 19.—Salt Lake Theatre—Following the engagement of Lillian Russell comes a week of "local talent." The Elks of this city will present The Elk's Tooth. The company is composed of 125 people, and promises to make good. Willard Mack will play for an additional week at the Colonial Theatre, presenting The Rose of the Rancho. Both Mr. Mack and Miss Hall have won their way into the hearts of the public by their excellent acting. The Orpheum presents its accustomed bill, which is fully up to the Orpheum standard. The Bungalow will remain dark until next week, when Willard Mack and company will again appear. McEwan remains another week at the Grand, where he continues to mystify all comers. In hypnotism McEwan has no peer and has made lock-picking such a science that he is master of all kinds.

San Diego.—Garrick (Morosco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.): March 14-15, Theodore Roberts and Guy Standing in The Right of Way. This production proved to be one of the strongest dramatic offerings of the year and did good business. The scenery, costumes, etc., were up to the Klaw & Erlanger standard, which means complete in every little detail. 21-25, A Trip to Africa. 26-27, Norman H. Hackett in Classmates; April 2-3, Lillian Russell in Wildfire. Remarks: Wm. Grey, in advance of Classmates, and Johnny Williams, of A Trip to Africa, have been looking over the city the past few days, and Johnny has become so impressed with it that he has announced his intention of remaining for a while; so long, in fact, that Manager Dodge has ordered a coffin and a tombstone to present to him when he does leave San Diego on his long trip and where he can play no one-night stands. Johnny says he has a great show. Pickwick (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.): Week March 15, Armstrong Musical Comedy Company, in The Gibson Girl. This company is now giving a very clever little performance and is doing deservedly big business. The performance as given this week is about the best the company has put on here, and every member handles his or her part in an inimitable manner, but the bright particular star is Miss Davis as the Gibson girl. Good work is also done by Miss Bayard, Miss Bondell and the two comedians, Messrs. Armstrong and Barney Williams. Queen (Swartz & Urban, mgrs.): Week March 15, Sullivan & Considine vaudeville. Connelly, Wenwick and Connelly in a melange of mirth and melody have a very clever little act. Hazel Salmon, soubrette, pleases; Carson Brothers, marvels of grace and strength, have one of the prettiest hand-balancing acts ever seen here and are making a big hit. Rose Stevens, prima donna soprano, sings three songs in an inimitable manner. Earl Girdeller and his wonderful acrobatic dogs, has a good act and more than pleases. Moving pictures conclude an excellent show. Very good business. Grand (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.): Week March 15, Walter Perry, monologue artist, has a real funny act and pleases. Renfrow and Jansen, in sketch, have a good act. Fay Carranza has a very good voice and makes quite a hit. Latest moving pictures and illustrated songs conclude a good show. Good business. Empire, Bijou, Union offer moving pictures and illustrated songs to good business. C. E. LUNDQUIST.

DAN KELLY RELIEVES HIS FEELINGS. Los Angeles, Mar. 17.—My Dear Editor: Am angry again. After "Jeems," my valet had placed the shamrock where it belongs—over an Irishman's heart—I exuded from my apartments, prepared to salute and return salutations. Walked two blocks. Not a "Mick" in sight. Stuck on the job; finally found a Swede manager from Goldfield looking for chorus girls for a musical comedy company. Told me he had heard Irish girls had blue eyes and looked well in the spotlight. Moved on; went into Flanagan's and ordered a creme de menthe. Now we start! Met Billy Elleford there, dressed in a green suit and distributing photos of Frank Wyman as Shamus O'Brien. Bundles of glee for mine! Another creme de menthe! (Billy took buttermilk.) Recapitulation: "Bet you a dollar, Dan, you can't find a 'Native Son' in the block." Took the bet. Lost! Tackled everything in pants, 65 in all. Result: 49 from Iowa, 10 from Kansas and 6 scattering. Bet Billy 30 cents he couldn't find a pint of the milk of human kindness in the orange belt. Billy thinking it over. So is DAN KELLY.

Sacramento, Mar. 18.—Melbourne Macdowell and Virginia Drew-Frescott in Capital vs. Labor, are at Pantages Theatre this week. Clyde Granter played Strongheart in place of D. S. Lawrence for a few performances last week at the Grand. He gave a fine performance. Jane Kelton is playing Leah Kleschna at the Grand. Girls is here tonight at the Clunie. The Gingerbread Man, 19-20; Lillian Russell in Wildfire, 22.

Salinas, March 13.—The Bell Boy played here last Friday night and gave satisfaction.

Oroville, March 13.—Frank Cooley at the Opera House four nights to good business. At the Pavilion Theatre Donald Blanchard and Blanche Marlin in three changes of sketches, songs and dances, also illustrated songs and moving pictures; business first class. Oro and Novelty Theatres have vaudeville and moving pictures to fair houses. Town good now, but business is very much cut up among too many cheap houses.

Marysville, March 17.—Mr. Frank Atkins of the Marysville Theatre gave his patrons Florence Gear and company in Marrying Mary as the week's attraction.

H. MARCUSE. Petaluma, March 17.—Hill Opera House—On March 7, Babes in Toyland was the attraction, and the house was packed. The production was fine in every respect and one of the best musical extravaganzas ever seen here. On Saturday, March 13, the University of California Glee Club gave a concert, which was good, but poorly attended. The Hulbert stock company plays in repertoire every Wednesday and Thursday nights. J. R. BOOTHIE.

Redlands, March 13.—The deal has just been completed whereby R. J. Dunn becomes the possessor of a lot on West State Street at the corner of Fourth, and the purchase means a new theatre for Redlands. Mr. Dunn purchased the lot knowing that a theatre building would interest the local Empire company, now owned and managed by R. E. G. Scott and was successful in signing a good lease. Work will begin shortly and the building will be ready by the first of September. The lot is 40x122 feet, and the building will occupy the entire space. Plans are about completed for the theatre. It will be built with a regulation stage; the floor will have a drop of five feet and the building will be two stories and entirely fireproof and have four exits on the sides. The seating capacity will be about 700. Two small storerooms will occupy the front on either side of the theatre entrance. The Empire will occupy the same location as last year, with the Air-dome, and occupy the new building some time in September.

Napa, March 10.—Napa Opera House (E. F. Hogan, mgr.)—March 9, Babes in Toyland played to big business. Eddie Redway as Alan and Gene Ormond as Jane were splendid in the leading roles, while Gus Pixley made a decided hit with his comedy. Monday, March 15, Girls, direct from the Van Ness Theatre, will certainly be greeted by a good crowd, and it ought to be "the lightful" (with apologies to Waldo Emerson Young). Hayes Theatre (Miss Alva Fisher, mgr.)—Good shows to good business. The Unique is being built for Miss Fisher and will open about the 1st of April. S. M. KYSER.

En Route, Portland, March 14.—To the Review Readers: Being booked in this northern country, where two bills a week are required, I have just written another sketch to go with my Eastern success. I am undecided as to the name for it Lost in the Siskiyous or Stranded, either would be appropriate. Will submit my plot to the readers of the Review for suggestions. Address Interstate Vaudeville Association, Portland, Ore. My idea for this sketch came from my last experience with a road show. (Slow music until curtain, please.) On the 26th of last January I was the most proud mortal in Oregon, for was I not leaving Portland as an advance representative of the Camille Kearns company? And in the baggage car was my private hotel trunk (the company not having a bill

Correspondence

(trunk) filled with paper-printed with the wonderful words: Bunnell & Gibrett present Miss Camille Kearns and company of Eastern players in the Eastern success, A Husband on Salary. My manager, Mr. Orville Bunnell, gave me the appalling sum of five dollars for expense money, cautioning me not to squander it. How high pride can climb before toppling over! I started out with a chest expansion of sixty-two inches; but when I returned to Portland, oh, angels weep! my chest was a deep, dark cavity. By standing off hotel-keepers and raising a few dollars on a ring, stick-pin, watch and an electric iron, I managed with the few dollars sent me to ride (inside) the coaches as far south as Sisson, the most discouragingly bleak "berg" on the Kearns circuit. Arriving there broke and finding "play troupes" credit rather poor, I wired back for more tainted money. The wire came back undelivered. Then came some Sherlock Holmes work. I began wiring to each town until I got to Cottage Grove, where I was informed the company had stranded and had returned to Portland. "Stung!" The manager had disbanded without notifying me, and there I had billed three towns after they had returned. There I was, surrounded by six feet of snow, without a cent. The landlord became suddenly attached to my trunk in lieu of payment for sundry treatments of pork and beans and near coffee, etc. My journey back to Portland would cause even my worst enemy to shed tears of pity. Well, I did manage to get back, and now I have woven the above tale into one of the best little comedy sketches on the road. Scene, hotel office. Cast, advance agent and soubrette (stranded), soubrette working for board as waitress. Plot consists of the scheming on their part to get out of town. Agent wishing a headline act, please write for time. Yours without a struggle, EUGENE B. GEAR.

SACRAMENTO, March 17, 1909.—With an audience of chorus girls and stage hands spurring them on to battle, Walter Flack, manager of the Babes in Toyland Company, and his stage manager, George Fields, had a fist fight after the curtain on the last act of the show at the Clunie Theatre last Monday night. Fields is minus his job, and Flack is carrying a black eye. Eddie Redway, comedian, represented the by-play of the chorus girls during the last act. Fields took Redway to task. Flack stepped in to defend Redway. He knocked Fields across a trunk, and the latter, striking on the back of his head, was unconscious for fifteen minutes. Redway left the company on Tuesday and returned to New York.

Harrington Wheeler Writes: Chehalis, Wash., March 10.—Have taken a plunge into the moving picture business. Purchased the Orpheum Theatre here a week ago today. Am remodeling the house and going to play some vaudeville. Have the only house in town—6,000 population—and think I can hear a noise that sounds like money, which you all know we like to have and to hold occasionally. Was thinking of taking out another company this summer, but this looks better and is certainly easier—just taking in money. Expect to be here for some time, and would be pleased to hear from all my friends. My wife, (Metta Chamberlain) says she would, too, so drop us a line. We get the "Old Reliable" every week, so we know where you all are and what's going on. Regards to all friends and others. Yours for success.

Reveries of a Grass Bachelor—Verdi on the Road—Nevada, Carl Berch's Last Stand

Verdi, Nev., March 11.—Dear Dramatic Reviewer: Please note I am in Verdi. Verdi is a hamlet ten miles from Reno, inhabited by people who are not allowed to live in Reno. Verdi, as you know, means green. Neither the place, nor the human odds and ends who infest Verdi, give any evidence of verdancy. The chief of the tribe who runs the potlatch here is called O'Connaught—pronounced Oke-not. He is four feet eleven by four feet two, and skinned and dressed in a cannibal butcher's shop would scale about 390 pounds 8 ounces—prime cuts—30 cents in shell money. The two-story woodshed they call a hall has a seating capacity of forty-seven and two children. They have eight wooden benches—called front seats; in the back seats you stand up. Prices vary as to the patrons' capacity for making a bargain. Large lots of two must have a discount or nothing doing—2 for a dollar, some; some 2½ for a dollar; some 2¾—that is, a child at foot and one in arms for a simoleon, etc., etc., and as it's bad luck to refuse real money, you vary as you judge their bleeding capacity and take their shekels with a stillborn sign. Seventeen children, cut on the imp pattern—howls, whistles, screams and all—came first. They all said their parents would come along presently and settle for them. They rushed the box-office—a wooden dry goods case and candle—and got in, occupying the entire two front rows of hard-boiled benches. As fragmentary admirers of the drama came along, I inquired for the parent or parents of the seventeen-imp gang. Nobody claimed them except one mud-faced shoemaker, whose name was Dennis, who demanded admittance so that he could pick out his truant offspring. I stopped him, and demanded 25 cents for the privilege of going inside and picking out his particular imp—glad to get rid of the noisy anarchist. He went, and returned with the leader of the noise-fest. He lifted him by the ear and carried him about four inches above the floor, while Dennis, Junior made noises resembling the Judgment Day hullabaloo predicted by the sky-phatifeurs on Sundays. Twenty-five cents I got, and smiled, as outside the door the father, with a full-grown shoe last, beat that urchin into a pulp and carried his remains home in his leather apron. "Allah il Allah," I cried, "the Great Ruler is ruling." An elderly female climbed the narrow, ladder-like approach and bought a ticket. I asked her did she own any kid or kids in the front rows' assortment of howling idiots in embryo. She said she was a spinster. I said it wasn't my fault, and did she claim any of the outlaws as hers. She withered me with a glance and flew the bungalow. I asked the Swede janitor had the hall ever been filled—really full—since it was built? He said yes, once—fifty-eight people, the entire population, had turned out years ago to hear a lecture by David Belasco or some other shining professor, on the art of "writing a drama without pen, ink or paper and merely the aid of an author," but that was away back in the rear end of his memory and he couldn't positively say who it was who perpetrated the crowded house. Our performance smote them from all points of the histrionic compass, and in one of their unawakened moments they asked us to play another night and sure everybody would come. I said I thought they were all here. They said, no; there were three men working on a water sluice who would surely be there tomorrow night if we stayed. We stayed. The three men came, that was all. The hotels in Verdi are somewhat scattered. We could only find one. None of your fried boxing-glove, humid bread and nearly coffee for your dejeuner. No, sir; everything real! Meat with beef in it, bread with flour in it, milk with nothing in it and hot cakes and attention—all for 35 per chance, C. O. D. The other hotels are in Reno. We closed the season here for repairs and to give us a chance to get some rosin on our feet so that we can get a fresh grip, also to not offend the Irish who nowadays want a talk-fest on St. Patrick's doubtful day, instead of a shindy in a show shop over Boucicault's delightful Shaughraun. Chin chin, au revoir, shule a malacham, shule shule agraah, says the Shan van Vocht. Truly yours, CHARLES E. VERNER.

L'Envoi

Carl Berch's last stand, like the last stand of Custer, Was a fight to a finish, and they knocked him a twister.

P. S.—The company, that is, the ladies and the handbag carriers, seemed when not eating thoroughly enraptured with one another. 'Twas a real lovers' club and when on the train looked like a traveling honey-bird menagerie. Alas, that it should ever be dispersed. May their tribe increase. They may. Allah il Allah—effendi! Selah. Marysville, March 15.—Thursday evening, March 11, Babes in Toyland to packed house at the Marysville Theatre. Monday evening, March 15, Florence Gear and company will appear in Marrying Mary. MARCUSE.

Personals

JULIA MARLOWE never acted a more heroic part with more courage and spirit than she did in saving the life of her secretary, Miss Elizabeth McCracken, in the actress' apartments on the sixteenth floor of the Hotel Plaza last week. Miss McCracken's arm overturned a lamp and ignited her gown and the flimsy draperies of the apartment. The cries of her secretary and the brilliant illumination brought Miss Marlowe. When she reached the drawing room Miss McCracken's gown was ablaze. Miss Marlowe snatched up bed clothing and sought to stifle the flames. She threw off her own burning kimono and seizing Miss McCracken, carried her from the room.

RUMOR of a pending divorce suit between Mrs. Grace Travers and Dr. Harry Travers, a former dentist of Oakland, are emphatically denied. "I can not deny this report too strongly. It is absolutely untrue," said Mrs. Travers. "I am not suing nor am I thinking of such a step." Before her marriage to Dr. Travers several years ago Mrs. Travers was Miss Grace Breslin. She essayed theatricals, beginning in a vaudeville sketch with Frank Bacon about a year and a half ago. Subsequently she went into the Idora Park company and then into stock and is now a member of the Valencia Theatre stock company of San Francisco. She is playing in Oakland at Ye Liberty Playhouse in The College Widow this week by special arrangement. Dr. Travers gave up regular practice several years ago. He is now an attache at the State legislature in Sacramento.

Mrs. JOHN SROUFE MERRILL has arrived in San Francisco, and is at the home of her mother-in-law, Mrs. John Merrill. The shock of her husband's death, which occurred last week at Highland Springs, has completely prostrated her, and as her own health has been far from robust, her people are naturally anxious about her. She went East, at the urgent pleading of her mother-in-law, who felt that she needed the rest and complete change of scene. Before she finally made up her mind to go, she took a flying trip back to the springs to say "au revoir" again to her husband. Her family and friends are naturally indignant at a newspaper report that Mrs. Merrill's absence in the East was significant of contemplated divorce proceedings. Mrs. Merrill will be remembered as the beautiful Olive Snyder who made her debut at the old Bush Street Theatre with Harry Corson Clarke in What Happened to Jones, under the stage name of Charlotte Beckwith. Later she starred at the Tivoli and was a beautiful and shapely member of the Tivoli principals. She retired from that company to marry Mr. Merrill, a millionaire and himself a clever and important business man.

Edmund W. Bracht

The subject of this week's front page illustration is one of the clever actors of the younger generation, who is as chuck full of ambition and enthusiasm as he is of ability. Mr. Bracht has held responsible positions in several well known stocks and has played leads on the road. He has played with Ye Liberty stock in Oakland, and the Alcazar and Valencia stocks in this city. He is now appearing at the latter theatre and played Lord George Hartopp in The Great Ruby on the opening night. He plays with great intelligence and has strong, virile methods that find pleasing expression in heavy parts.

Another Theatre

There is much activity in real estate circles over the visit of a mysterious visitor who wants a theatre built here. He says he is from the north and immediately rumor says the new house is for John Cort.

Menzel Stock for Santa Cruz

The Leo Bell Stock, having been unable to succeed at Swain's Theatre, will close tomorrow night, and will be succeeded by the Menzel Stock Company, under the management of Charley Menzel. The new company is a particularly strong organization and is composed of Kernan Cripps and Charlotte Mundorf, in leads; Chas. J. LeMayne, Harry Hallen, Wallie Howe, Harry Stuart, Florence Young, Felice Griffin, Bebe Daniels and Evelyn Maxwell. The opening bill will be The Heart of the Blue Ridge.

New Play for American Theatre

On April 18 Jacob Gleason, the local baseball magnate, and Frank McGlynn, the well known actor, will present a new play, written by themselves, which they have named Might's Right. The play has a political atmosphere and carries with it a strong love interest. A first-class company will be engaged to present it. If successful here the piece will be presented on the road.

The Pirate Breaker

Arthur Aiston has been in town this week, the first time in five years. While here Mr. Aiston placed a number of his plays and left orders with his attorneys to pursue a relentless course in the future with any body found pirating his plays. Just now Mr. Aiston is particularly interested in the Eureka case. Manager Van

The present suit is a civil one, but Mr. Aiston may follow with a criminal action. In the past Mr. Aiston has passed by several piracies of his plays, but now he announces he is going to the task of prosecuting every case he learns of. He means business.

Bert Lytell to be Actor-Manager

Bertram Lytell, leading man at the Alcazar Theatre, is planning to leave the Sutter street playhouse at the conclusion of the season, in June, and will go to Rochester, N. Y., where he will be the manager of his own company and will be a star as well. "I played in Rochester about three years ago," said Lytell, "and had a fair share of success. I am to assume a part ownership in the new venture and will, if I am successful, be a sharer in the profits of the theatre. If the venture fails, then I hope to come back to San Francisco again, and that's the reason why I don't care whether I am a successful 'magnate' of Rochester or not. The theatre is under Klaw & Erlanger's control, but the offer made me is flattering and I can not afford to pass it up, even though I should like to remain in California."

Van Ness Theatre

The fair Lillian Russell is with us and crowded houses demonstrate most conclusively the great hold that this beautiful woman has on our theatre goers. In addition to the star, the management have supplied a cast of fine actors and a play that has many pleasing elements. Frank Sheridan, one of the most capable of our character men, who has risen to the dignity and expensiveness of a Broadway originator, is seen in the part of the trainer. Mr. Sheridan keeps well within the limits of probability and keeps away from many opportunities to overact. This is one of the best characteristics of a good actor. Franklyn Roberts gave a striking and most excellent impersonation of the bookmaker, and Thurston Hall was manly and wholesome as the successful suitor for the fair widow. Gilbert Douglas played an English chappie with positively fine humor that was enjoyable. Will Archie, as the stable boy, was really the hit of the show, and his recognition from the delighted audience was frequent and enthusiastic. So great has been the success of this diminutive actor that he will be starred next season in Wildfire. Anne Buckley was immensely clever as the old maid. Two very pretty girls—Ellen Mortimer and May Elizabeth Forbes—play the young girls, but their enunciation is so poor that it mars their work. Some one ought to take them in hand and give them a series of lessons in speaking. The scenery was thoroughly appropriate and very little accessory was there to complete a most interesting performance.

Alcazar Theatre

The wonderfully beautiful and magnificent production of The Darling of the Gods is in its last week. A high water mark of artistic excellence has been achieved with this production and theatre goers will have for years to come something to recall with the greatest pleasure, for few theatres in the country have ever presented such a thoroughly fine and well executed production. The musical chances offered by the text have been taken full advantage of by Edward Lada and his orchestra and this has been deservedly appreciated as one of the biggest features of the performance. Next week, the stock company will present Blue Grass, a Kentucky racing play that will offer the actors many fine opportunities to do good work.

Valencia Theatre

Out of the Fold was probably conceived in a proper vein, but in the writing of it the author has on the whole not lived up to the promise of his theme. But with that handicap, the piece as played this week is pleasing the Valencia clientele, for the idea of the story seems to have reached out over the footlights and struck home—all of which is a tribute to the conscientious work of the company. Once more Darrell Standing shows his artistry by achieving an indisputable triumph with the part of Big Jim, a sheep herder. This clever actor has grasped all the possibilities of the part, which is rampant with quiet humor, a pathetic loyalty and an intensity of human understanding. Blanche Stoddard has seldom appeared to better advantage than as Helen Gray, the stranger who is striving to live down a mistake of the past, she puts a wealth of womanly feeling and a sincerity into her depiction and the result is most effective and convincing. Beatrice Nichols, as a romping, irrepressible country girl, was immensely attractive and a clever bit was contributed by Peggy Monroe, in the part of Lucy. This young woman is giving striking evidences of talent right along. Karra Kenwyn, who is well known and liked here, was a charming Aunt Jane Larkin. Thomas MacLarnie had the thankless part of John Lathrop. Gerald Harcourt was good in the part of Toby Tompkins, and Lillian Andrews did the village gossip most convincingly. Mace Greenleaf as the young schoolmaster, played with discretion and pleasing earnestness. The scenery was beautiful and a decided feature of the show.

American Theatre

Our old friend, The Burgomaster, he of the wooden leg, big nose, good natured face and twisted German-English has stopped off for a week of San Francisco hospitality. Manager Cullen keeps the old show up to a pleasing standard, and although two old favorites, Gus Weinberg, the Burgomaster, and Ruth White, who was long the charming Willie Astorbilt, are missing, still the show is more than a pleasing entertainment. Harry Hermesen is all right as the Burgomaster, and Phemie Lockhart is a dainty and attractive Willie. The choruses contain much fine singing material and there is a perennial charm in Gustave Luders' music. Leo Kendall is still giving satisfaction as Doodle Van Kull, and Robert W. Allright contributes musically to the show with pleasing effect. Marie Grandpre, as Katherine, was exceedingly attractive and Etta Lockhart was a captivating roof garden favorite.

Princess Theatre

His original highness, The Sultan of Sulu, in the person of Frank Moulan, is the entertaining specimen of royalty in our midst this week. This comic opera, modeled in the style of some years ago, is a very worthy and superior article and the stock company at this theatre fits very nicely into the requirements of the piece. Frank Moulan, as Ki-Ram, the Sultan of Sulu, is both a musical and humorous performer. Mr. Moulan is blessed with a splendid singing voice and a decidedly splendid idea of humor, and he proves the claim made for him that he is one of our best light opera comedians. Fred Mace, who has already developed into a big favorite, gives a very good performance in the character of Col. Jefferson Budd. James F. Stevens is seen as Lieutenant Hardy, and he sings some of his best and most pleasing songs. Budd Ross is good in the small part of Hadji, private secretary to the Sultan. Helen Darling is attractive as Henrietta Budd, and May Boley, as the Judge Advocate, gives one of her characteristic performances. Zoe Barnett was seen in the part of Chiquita, the Sultan's favorite wife. The part offered very little opportunity. Dude Kelly and Will Brown, two gentlemen of real color, are cast for the two waiters, and they perform some agile dancing acrobatics that are immensely pleasing. The singing of the chorus and the ensemble work shown are distinctly good and of the best class.

16th Street Theatre

Melodrama in every sense of the word holds full sway at this house this week, and from the attendance in evidence it looks as though the Malan-McGrath Stock Company has come to stay. Jesse James is the offering for this week and is very satisfactory regarding both the company and scenic effects. Mr. Malan handles the heroic role of Jesse James in his usual capable and conscientious manner. Mr. McGrath carries off the comedy honors this week as the darkey, Lige Pumpkin, and provokes genuine merriment every moment he is on the stage. He is ably supported by Miss Murella as Eliza Jane, his affinity; the two of them make a good comedy combination. Florence Bell makes a sweet and winsome Jennie Summers. Ivan Miller is again cast in a villainish role and is brutally realistic. Eddie Hall, as his accomplice, gives good support. Bert Porter as Frank James looked handsome and was always on deck when needed. A clever and conscientious piece of character acting is contributed by Howard Nugent. He deserves special mention for his efforts. As the sheriff, Ross Birchett also contributes a good piece of work. Nellie May Howard comes in for her share of applause, and Blanche Trelease, the specialty artist, is a clever little dancer and singer and wins approval for her clever work. Illustrated songs, specialties and moving pictures complete an enjoyable evening's entertainment. The policy of the house has been changed, and beginning this week and hereafter only one performance will be given nightly instead of two as heretofore. Next week the Southern comedy-melodrama, Shadows of Life.

Mme. Helena Modjeska is Seriously Ill

Los Angeles, March 18.—Mme. Helena Modjeska, the famous Polish-American actress, is seriously ill at her home on Bay Island, near Newport, Orange County. Mme. Modjeska's husband, Count Bozenta, is in constant attention at his wife's bedside. The veteran actress has been suffering for a long time from chronic kidney trouble, but her ailment has been newly complicated by an affection of the heart and lungs. Mme. Modjeska was born near Cracaw, Poland, in 1844, and was married to Count Charles Bozenta Chlapowski in 1868. She made her first public appearance in Poland in 1861.

Chicago, March 18.—Ralph Modjeska of Chicago, son of Madame Modjeska, who is reported seriously ill at Newport Beach, Cal., is expected here today in a race across the continent. He received word of his mother's illness at Montreal last night and immediately boarded a train for Chicago. He is expected here soon, and will immediately take another train west.

KATHRYN WAYNE and Graham Earle were married recently and are now in the East.

Will Eleanor Robson Marry Millionaire

NEW YORK, March 18.—About ten days ago both Eleanor Robson and August Belmont entered positive and emphatic denials of a story to the effect that they were engaged to be married, and tonight Miss Robson, at the Lyceum Theatre, where she is playing in The Dawn of Tomorrow, repeated her denial. "Mr. Belmont is a very dear friend of mine, that's all," said she. Despite her denial, however, Miss Robson's best friends declare that the engagement is a fact and that she will marry Mr. Belmont in the spring or early summer. She has been in poor health lately and, like Margaret Illington, is willing to give up the stage forever. Last year and the year before Miss Robson starred in Merely Mary Ann, under the management of the Lieblers, and made a tremendous success of it. She is now playing to crowded houses at the Lyceum here in The Dawn of Tomorrow, one of the greatest of Broadway successes. Mr. Belmont is frequently seen at the theatre, and on these nights a big bunch of red roses is invariably handed over the footlights. The two are frequently seen together in the restaurants after the play.

Spotlights

Ferris Hartman is to open in Seattle at the Grand Opera House on June 6 for a long season of comic opera.

Nat Goodwin expects to do a repertoire of five plays during his coming engagement at the Van Ness Theatre.

Following Theodore Roberts and Guy Standing at the Van Ness, will appear in succession, Richard Carle, Otis Skinner and Madame Nazimova.

On April 12th, at the Auditorium, Baltimore, Will A. Page will present Willette Kershaw in a series of plays to last as long as the weather man permits. He got as far ahead as August last year. In this connection, Mr. Page announces a company in Washington at the Belasco, and says he will try out several new plays for the Shuberts.

Take all the laughs in The Red Mill and all the attempts at laughter in Babes in Toyland and multiply them by ten and you have a fair estimate of the fun in A Trip to Africa. A troupe of colored people in musical comedy at 50 cents for the best seats is not expected to measure up to the New York success which plays at $2 a seat, but the dismal failures of the last two "successes" (?) are still fresh in many people's minds, and good fun at 50 cents is highly preferable to sad fun at $2 per.—San Jose "Mercury."

The Pollard Opera Company play Honolulu next month.

The Burgomaster leaves tonight for Los Angeles by special train.

The Western States Comedy Company leave today for the Southern mines. In the company are Ben Reynolds, Norman Phillips, Eleanor Wright, Olivette Welliston and Claude Hutchison.

The Central Comedy Company, under the management of Harry J. Kennedy, will go out today. In the company are Harry J. Kennedy, Maria Anson, Pearl McFarland, Reed Clark, Walter Walsh and Donald Blanchard and Blanche Marlin. L. R. Mitchell will do the advance.

Vaudeville

The Orpheum

Several new and most entertaining turns added to the holdovers that constituted the best of last week's program are seen this week and there is general satisfaction with the offering. Ray L. Royce, whose chief fame was acquired from a sympathetic character part he played in York State Folks, is one of the most prominent of the new comers in an impersonation monologue in which he takes off a variety of rural characters. James McDonald and Valerie Huntington, who are acceptable singers and clever dancers, exhibit a wide range in their singing, and their newsboy and best girl impersonation is well done. The Blessings, the man being a nimble little acrobat and the woman being a statuesque beauty and strong woman, contribute a very pleasing turn. The Eight Palace Girls have one of the regulation girl dancing and singing acts, which is pleasing. James Clemmons, agile and eccentrically capable as a dancer, is featured in the turn. The holdovers consist of the Six Little Girls and the Teddy Bear; the Kito-banzai Troupe of Japanese acrobats and balancers; G. Herbert Mitchell and Emma Rainey and her white and Indian actors. New moving pictures conclude the entertainment.

Pantages-Empire

A full and varied program rules at this house this week. The Two Johnsons in a song and dance turn; Perrin Sommers and Lillie Storke present their sketch, Jackson's Honey-moon, with singing and musical specialties. Some exceedingly clever and eccentric dancing is contributed by Ladell and Brown, and they well deserve the applause they receive. Kid Gabriel and company introduce some interesting poses of Life on the Cow Range, taken from Remington's famous paintings. J. Bernard Dyllin, the original "Horseshoe" man, made a decided hit with his parodies and witty sayings. Just Phor Phun is a vehicle for some very clever pantomimic acting on the part of the Hanlons, and introduces some new and clever features. The usual interesting moving pictures concludes a good program. Next week will be added

The National

In the National Road Show, Manager Sid Grauman has a programme of exceptional merit at his popular house this week. Onetta, the Der-vish whirlwind dancer, an European artist, surprises with some sensational dancing. Rosa Roma renders some delightful and artistic selections on the violin. Howard Truesdell, in his latest comedy success, Two Men and a Bottle, supplies an enjoyable feature of the programme. Tom Brantford, the mythical Monohan, is an entertainment by himself. Carroll and Cook have the audience from the start with their tuneful and clever parodies and foolish talk. The big feature of the bill is Coin's dogs. This act has been seen here before, but will bear repeating at any time. The canines perform a little playlet all by themselves with almost human intelligence and would put many a company of professionals to shame

JOSE, 'San Jose—Melbourne Mac—with studious attention with which they go through their various parts. The customary high-class pictures are in evidence and conclude a programme of exceptional quality and quantity.

The Wigwam

One of the best bills of the season is the offering at the Wigwam Theatre this week. Kirsten's Marietta Troupe introduce some sensational equilibristic features. Frank Mayne & Co. present The Tipster, a playlet of racing slang, with plenty of good comedy. Joe Edmonds, monologist, is a departure from the average and delivers the goods. The Sexton's Dream is one of the prettiest acts to be seen in vaudeville. Mr. Youngman's beautiful voice holds the audience throughout. His rendering My Rosary is deserving of especial mention. The Piccola Midgets are comedians of no mean calibre, and they evoke much amusement. Newhoff and Phelps do a clever singing and dancing turn. The big sensational feature of the bill is Lukens' Lions, who go through their various stunts at the command of their trainer with great alacrity, as though they were the meekest of kittens. Esco Ives, the popular baritone, handles the illustrated songs and is heard to advantage. High-class moving pictures concluded a long and varied programme.

Vaudeville Notes

HARRY-CORSON-CLARKE—Week of March 8—Theatre Royal, Nottingham, England; week of March 15—Court Theatre, Liverpool; week of March 22—Theatre Royal, Newcastle; week of March 29—Prince's Theatre, Bristol; week of April 5—Grand Theatre, Blackpool; week of April 12—Prince of Wales' Theatre, Birmingham; week of April 19—Theatre Royal, Bradford.

J. Bernard Dyllin, at the Empire this week, is one of the old-timers, having been one of the original members of the Adelphi Theatre when it was opened by Cogill and Cooper in '78. Frank Lavaroni was stage manager and other members included such well known names as Billy White, Jeff De Angeles, Charlie Reed—now dead, Charlie Mestayer—now dead, Lew Spencer, now well known East, and Boyd Wade.

Alex Kaiser, the Stockton vaudeville manager, is keen for a house in San Francisco. He may have a surprise to spring in a few weeks.

Press Eldridge, the blackface monologist, has by no means got over the amusing habit of interspersing gags between the verses of his songs. The other night he stopped suddenly while he was singing his latest comic ditty, All I Want is a Girl, and told the following story: "While I was in London last year," he remarked in that peculiar half chuckle which has made him famous, "a hansom cab driver who had just picked up a fare was driving furiously along a crowded street, when the wheel of his cab just managed to graze a wagon which a very thin young man was driving. 'Now, then, can't yer see me?' bawled out the youth angrily. 'Very sorry,' was the reply, 'but yer whip was in front of yer!'"

Paul Stanley, comedian and composer, author of the song, Ta Ra Ba Boom De Ay, is dead after a lingering illness. Stanley, whose real name was Sonnenberg, had lived in Denver with his wife since the San Francisco earthquake. He was reduced to straitened circumstances and his health was much impaired by the shock.

The Mendils at the Star, and Vivian and Wayne at the Bell, are Grass Valley attractions. The MacDonald Sisters are seen at the Auditorium.

The Washington Square Theatre will close Saturday night before Easter as a moving picture house, then it will open as a vaudeville house again.

Newhoff and Phelps are booked for united time next season.

Mr. Jake Glass, the trainer appearing with Lukens' lions at the Wigwam Theatre this week, succeeded in taming these beasts of the jungle in one year, a hard task since not one of them was born in captivity. It may be interesting to note that Mr. Glass is the executioner of Topsy, the elephant of Central Park, N. Y., which was electrocuted about seven years ago. She was pronounced unmanageable and after having a number of killings to her credit it was decided to kill her. Mr. Glass undertook the job, after eighteen hours fighting with her he succeeded in having her lowered on to a barge from Brooklyn Bridge, being unable to drive her aboard—so that she could not get away. There plates were attached to her by Mr. Glass himself and the beast succumbed to 2,800 volts of electricity.

Carl and Robert Schenck, sons of Professor John Schenck of the Sacramento Turn-Verein, accompanied by William Wolters, left Sunday morning for Santa Cruz, where they will sign up with the Norris & Rowe Circus for the coming season. The boys are well known and are classed as all-around athletes, having taken part in many stunts on Sacramento vaudeville stages.

Onetta, the Dervish whirlwind dancer at the National this week, will make her re-appearance in London at the conclusion of her present tour.

An interesting feature at the National Theatre in the near future will be the appearance of the great English tragedian, V. L. Granville, in 'Twixt Daylight and Dawn, an act of impersonation. The tour will be under the management of Thomas Brantford. Howard Truesdell will open at the Fifth Avenue Theatre in New York City the third week in May in a new comedy sketch, written for him by Una Clayton.

The rumor that William Morris will have a San Francisco theatre will not down. It is certain that Morris or some other big Eastern vaudeville interests have a representative in town looking about for a site.

Carroll and Cook, the popular team at the National this week, took occasion to criticize Archie Levy's wearing apparel, and for doing same were sentenced to Vallejo for one week. Their appeal for suspension of the sentence was denied, and they will start in to serve out their punishment next week. Performers take notice: Do not take liberties or you may be sentenced to Stockton. Mr. Levy was very wrought up at the time, and when leaving the room was requested by Mr. Cook not to slam the door. What's the answer? Sam Mendelsohn, please answer.

Sid Grauman, the popular and genial manager of the National Theatre, was the recipient of a beautiful floral tribute from his many friends, attaches and performers playing his house this week, in the shape of a beautiful harp. Mr. Grauman was taken completely by surprise, not knowing what was in store for him when he was taken before the audience by Will J. Cook, who made the presentation address. In part he said: "This day commemorates the epoch of two memorial occasions, that of the birth of the patron saint of Ireland—St. Patrick, who drove the snakes from the Emerald Isle—and the birth of Sidney Patrick Grauman, who has always given his aid and generous support to elevate vaudeville of San Francisco to a higher sphere, and it is the sincere wish of myself and your many friends and admirers that you may live to enjoy a happy and prosperous birthday for every flower contained in this humble tribute of the great esteem in which you are held by your many friends and associates." Mr. Grauman, though greatly overcome, with modest embarrassment, was equal to the occasion and in reply said: "As Mr. Cook has said my name in full is Sidney Patrick Grauman, the name of Patrick had been given me through the earnest solicitation of my father's many Hiberian friends upon the occasion of my birth in Indianapolis, March 17th, and I am proud of it. In conclusion, I greatly appreciate the kind and flattering remarks of Mr. Cook. Since assuming the management of this theatre I have always tried to give the public the best to be had in the amusement line, and if at any time I have made a mistake, I assure you it was not the fault of the heart, but of the head." The generous applause which greeted his closing remarks was a flattering testimonial of the success of his efforts.

The Nickelodeon Tangle

The nickelodeon ordinance, after an hour's bitter contest between the representatives of the moving picture shows and the theatres, was Monday passed to print by the board of supervisors, Hocks alone voting "no." The bill providing restrictions to reduce the fire and panic hazard in the small show places restricts them to a seating capacity of 400, requires side and rear additional exits, and directs the width of aisles and exits. As amended yesterday it is to become effective 30 days after final adoption, presumably next Monday. Attorney F. V. Meyers for 60 odd nickelodeon owners stated that $1,000,000 was invested in the picture show places and made a vain plea for more latitude in the way of exits. Henry Davis for the theatrical managers urged with just as little result that all the provisions of the bill be made applicable to existing as to contemplated places. The clause requiring immediate enforcement was modified to give 30 day's grace to the nickelodeon owners, but the board refused to reduce the penalty of $100 minimum fine with a discretionary jail sentence in addition.

International Attraction Syndicate

The International Attraction Syndicate have opened offices at 537 Pacific Building, with W. Maurice Tobin, general manager. Mr. Tobin says that the plans of the company cover a wide range in the amusement field. The booking of circus acts and all manner of out door attractions at the parks and fairs will be a feature. Vaudeville acts of all kinds, musicians and vocalists on a hotel and cafe circuit, and entertainers for clubs, lodges, socials and banquets will be attended to. The promoting of expositions, carnivals, fairs and city celebrations will be entered into on a large scale, and the building and equipping of parks and the latest Coney Island successes will be installed in prominent coast resorts.

Russell & Drew's New Seattle Theatre

The details of the coming of the International Opera company, scheduled as the first attraction at Russell & Drew's Majestic Theatre, now building at Pine and Westlake, Seattle, are just coming to light. Domenico Russo, well remembered here from his engagement with Collamari at the Tivoli, is to be the leading tenor of the organization. Frank Priesch will be cast for prominent parts. Aida Hemmi will sing leading soprano roles. The opening opera will be Verdi's Il Trovatore. This will be followed by Faust, Flotow's Martha, and a revival of Balfe's Bohemian Girl, which will be unusually pretentious from a scenic standpoint. The engagement will cover a period of ten weeks, and the present plan contemplates the staging of a different opera each week. Manager Russell rather figures that Sunday, July 4, will be an opportune time for the opening of the new house. It will cost the contractors $10,000 if every detail of the house is not completed by midnight of June 30.

Spotlights

After an absence of several years, Mme. Sisseretta Jones, The Black Patti, returned to Los Angeles yesterday and with her troubadours pleased a large audience at the Majestic Theatre last night. No longer a young woman, Mme. Jones' voice still retains its freshness, its richness of tone and the finely sympathetic quality which have done so much to make her famous. She is not cast in the comedy, except as she appears upon the stage to interpolate her songs. The piece itself was constructed merely for laughing purposes, though it is marked neither by much originality nor much ingenuity. Tim Owsley is the best of the comedians, though he is by no means alone in funmaking ability. Most of the songs are new and there is some very good eccentric dancing, contributed by several of the troubadours. The company remains at the Majestic through the week.—Los Angeles "Examiner."

Each season that passes finds new plays and new actors bidding for favor. The one permanency in the theatre is the Shakespearean drama, and the actor is fortunate who gains recognition from his generation as its interpreter. The winter of 1908-09 has added new assurances, if any were needed, that Charles B. Hanford has won the confidence of the sincere lovers of the drama who are too honest in their affection for the greatest plays in the English language to see them done by any save tried and trusted interpreters.

The Hotchkiss company, that up to three weeks ago were playing in stock at the Novelty in Fresno, and then went on the road, closed in Merced last Wednesday night, owing to poor business. Manager Hotchkiss is now playing the Raymond Teal company for a last week, after which will appear A Trip to Africa company, to be followed by Jim Post and company for a season.

The Shuberts announce that E. H. Sothern will go to Daly's Theatre, N. Y., for a limited engagement, following the conclusion of Julia Marlowe's season there in The Goddess of Reason.

Manager Harry Bishop Is Pleasing Oaklanders With Fine Performance of the College Widow

The Kolb and Dill regime is in full sway at the Macdonough, and the expectations of the management are being more than realized. This week's attraction, Wiener and Schnitzel, is meeting with good patronage, but not as large as that accorded the opening production. Some catchy songs are introduced, notably The Feege Man and That's the Reason, Too, I Want a Kilt. The same play will continue for another week. At Ye Liberty, Geo. Ade's College Widow is playing to packed houses and is giving the very best of satisfaction. The popular college comedy is given a presentation that would reflect credit on any kind of a company, and the manner in which it was handled by our local stock shows what a really strong aggregation of players Manager Bishop has on his pay-roll; in fact, it is the consensus of opinion that as it is constituted at present the company has better and stronger people than at any time since its formation. The two new ladies of the company, Grace Travers and Helen Lackaye, showed to excellent advantage. Not only have they a fine and attractive personality, but they also display a good share of ability. Isabelle Fletcher, in the title role, is up to all requirements and looked beautiful in some fetching costumes. As Flora Wiggins, the waitress, Georgia Cooper is the hit of the show. Her style and make-up created a laugh every time she made her appearance. As Billy Bolton, the half-back, Landers Stevens made a typical college student and gave a performance that was finished in every detail. John Thorn, a recent addition to the company, was suffering from a severe cold and consequently could not do himself justice. E. L. Bennison and Geo. Webster created many a laugh by their grotesque comedy work, and Geo. Friend as Stubby Talmadge, the undergraduate, was the busy student to perfection. Merely Mary Ann will follow. At the Orpheum, the same old story—capacity houses, attractive programme and everybody satisfied with the performance given. This week's bill comprises: Foy and Clark, in The Spring of Youth; Bowers, Walters and Crooker, Agnes Mahr, Connely and Webb; Frank Nelson, Nonette, Charles Wayne & Co., and Jwan Tschernoff's unique circus troupe. James Post and his Buty Korus are in their last week at the Novelty and are presenting a funny musical comedy entitled The Man from Tonopah. Business pretty fair. Another prominent actress has been added to the staff of Bishop's players. Her name is Katherine Mulkins and she hails from New York. LOUIS SCHEELINE.

Farewell to Novelty

The once-popular and money-making Novelty Theatre in Oakland, which has of late fallen into evil days, will on April 5th be turned into a stock house. For the past year the house has been struggling on with vaudeville, and Manager Tony Lubelski, who has tried every way to make a go of it, was compelled to relinquish control last Monday. There is $29,000 owing one of the Oakland banks; the rent is $3,000 behind, and other debts will bring the amount owed close to $40,000. The theatre lease will be sold at auction next Monday, and it looks as though the owner of the property, Mr. Salinger, a wealthy dry goods man, will bid it in. The plan is to put Guy Smith in charge as manager, and run a stock show, with plays mostly of a melodramatic character. Al Hallett will be the stage director, and he has selected The Fatal Wedding for the opening bill. A strong company will be engaged. So far Georgia Woodthorpe and Ollie Cooper are the only ones engaged.

Annette Kellerman, the beautiful young Australian girl, whose swimming and diving feats have been the star feature of a number of vaudeville theatres in New York and Brooklyn of late, went on the stage of the Alhambra Theatre in New York, Monday night, with a forced smile, for she had just been crying her eyes out in her dressing-room. Miss Kellerman had read in the newspapers that she had been mentioned in the complaint of Mrs. Herbert Pattee of Boston in Mrs. Pattee's suit for divorce in the superior court of Boston. Mrs. Pattee's complaint alleged that Pattee used to sit for hours in the kitchen of their home at Revere Beach, drinking beer and eating crackers with Miss Kellerman, and alleged further that her husband had insisted that Miss Kellerman should live in the same house with them in Boston. "This is shameful and wicked to say such things about me," said Miss Kellerman, and as she said it tears coursed down her face. "I hardly knew Mr. Pattee. I never liked him even as a passing acquaintance. Mrs. Pattee was very friendly to me, but I hardly saw Mr. Pattee. I would meet him occasionally, but only exchanged the most ordinary greetings. I never sat in the kitchen with him. I never drank beer with him. I have not tasted a glass of beer since I have been in this country."

The Mining Country Is Very Much To the Bad for Theatrical Shows

To those who imagine that a mining country is a Golconda for the theatrical business, and hear of the halcyon times enjoyed by the traveling companies that visit the country where twenty-dollar pieces originate, a word from one who has very lately visited the entirety of California mining districts and knows every rut of the roads that lead from one Italian city to another along the Mother Lode—for the district made so famous by the writings of Bret Harte are no more American, for the Italian and the Slavonian have taken possession of the mining districts, and Tuolumne, Angels, Jackson are all now towns where the red, white and green flag of Italy predominates. Every town and hamlet in this district has from one to three moving picture houses, and that seems to, in every sense of the word, fill the required wants." Grass Valley, a prosperous, busy little city, is in a very peculiar condition, for it is at the present time infested by Pinkerton men, who keep watch and tab of every miner who spends a few dollars, for the reason that what is known as "high grading" is going on amongst the miners. To those who are not familiar with the term an explanation might be in order. The vein or lode carrying the values are intersected by other veins, forming what is termed a contact, and at these junctures invariably exceedingly rich ore is struck. The wily miner, if possible, conveys this ore in his dinner bucket, pipe or in some way gets away with it. Therefore the Pinkerton men are to watch any lavish expenditure, and a report is immediately made and the suspected one fired. So the miners of Grass Valley find it behooves them to spend nothing, and religiously keep away from the more expensive attractions. Nevada City, where you are immediately apprised of the fact that Mr. Edwin Booth went stranded, and where they got up a benefit to get him and his company out of town, is in a condition calculated to strand anything or anybody at the present, for the reason that there is practically no work going on there; and the town now boasts of having some twenty-nine men working. These are the conditions of the mining country of California, and I heartily advise companies from going through these sections. Angels Camp is exceedingly dull at the present time, for the reason many miners are out of work, and those who are working are Slavs, for the Americans will not work underground on account of the dangers of caving, and only very recently three were killed outright and some wounded. Sonora, having been afflicted with an epidemic of typhoid and measles, business there is very slow. The town of Tuolumne, depending on the Grizzly Mine, is dead broke, for the miners are now more than three months behind on their pay, and everyone is living on credit.

"COURIER."

Paul Gilmore Is a Great Favorite This Week in Seattle

The Moore Theatre: Last week's attraction of Stubborn Cinderella packed the house at every performance, the music being catchy, the costumes pretty and the setting beautiful. This week's attraction, The Red Mill, opened to a packed house last night, and from the hit made at last night's performance, will prove a successful drawing card. Marguerite Frye, a former Seattle girl, takes the leading part and received a very warm welcome. The company as a whole are very good, and Mr. McGee in the men's leading part made a decided hit, and has a splendid voice. There is a gratifying combination of mirth and music, and the show bristles with song hits. Grand Opera House: Paul Gilmore is presenting this week the Boys of Company B, opening last night with a splendid house. Mr. Gilmore plays his part with a youthful dash. Jean Aubrey, the leading woman, has been here several times and is rapidly making strides toward the front. The balance of the company are all up to their requirements. The play is well staged, the second act showing the regimental encampment in an attractive manner. Third Ave. Theatre: The return of the Seattle Theatre Stock Company was yesterday endorsed with two packed houses at the production of When London Sleeps. This Theatre: The Pantages Stock Company is this week presenting the Irish comedy, The Jilt, and handle the play in their usual good style. Mr. Frawley plays Myles O'Hara in a thoroughly likable manner. Miss May deserves special credit for her work. The balance of the company are up to their usual standard. Orpheum Theatre: This week's bill promises to be a big one at the Orpheum, with the headliner of Zelig de Lussan, the Metropolitan opera singer; S. Miller Kent and his player will present Marriage in a Motor Car; Will Rogers, the Oklahoma cowboy; Joly Violetta, the Parisian dancer; Caron and Far-num, originators of tumbling laughter; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Clark, banjoists; Surazell and Razall, presenting the Music Publisher; and the usual set of new motion pictures. At the Star Theatre, the extraordinary headline act of the week is George Wilson, the minstrel comedian. There are also Iva Donnette and her canine pickaninny; Delmore and Oneida, European equilibrists; Ann Carew & Co., in My Lady Raffles; Ad Carlisle's Dogville Pantomime Company; Eddie Roesch, with a ballad, and two sets of comic motion pictures. At Pantages, The Five Armanis, in a beautiful and spectacular scene entitled A Night in Naples, open as one of the big features of the Pantages show. Another headliner of the new bill is Mysterious Sa-Heras, in thought-reading and transfer.

Anna Lichter Gets Her Divorce

Anna Schuster last week changed her name to Anna Lichter, as she was known in the old Tivoli Theatre days, when she was one of the greatest favorites of the thousands who crowded the playhouse. On the ground of willful neglect she secured a divorce from William Schuster, and Judge Cabaniss granted her permission to resume her maiden name. Mrs. Schuster returned recently to San Francisco, her home, after successful seasons in the big Eastern cities. William Schuster, who is an operatic basso, did not accompany her. It developed that for years he had failed to support his wife. Mrs. Schuster simply testified at the proceedings, that for more than a year her husband had contributed nothing to her maintenance. This being corroborated, it constituted "willful neglect" within the meaning of the law and the judge signed the decree. Mr. Schuster filed a formal answer denying the allegations of the complaint. He is in the East.

Jeffries Makes a Hit In New York

When James J. Jeffries, undefeated fistic champion of the world, stepped on the stage at Blaney's Lincoln Square Theatre last Monday, the house rose and the cheers and applause seemed to loosen the frescoes. The theatre was packed, everybody was in good humor, as there had been a lively performance from the beginning. Jeffries, of course, was the attraction of the list. The galleries roared, boys whistled and big men yelled, and the applause continued for several minutes, with everybody on the stage smiling and pleased. First the champion skipped the rope to warm his blood, while the orchestra played Yankee Doodle. Then followed gymnastic exercises of the regulation kind, which put the house in still better humor, and, finally, his sparring partner, Sam Berger, appeared with a smile that dimmed the footlights and explained that he was not Jeffries. Still there were some who did not know the difference. The audience was of miscellaneous people. The gymnastic exercises were followed by a few rounds with the medicine ball, and then Jeffries and Berger began to spar, and all cheered again as Jeffries illustrated some of his famous blows and ring generalship. From the outset a stage reporter in a big Omaha coat, suggesting thirty degrees below zero, asked questions and the answers explained what was going on to novices in prize fighting, which added to the interest of the act. Jeffries, made a good impression, he was modest and retiring and reluctantly responded to repeated calls for a speech. "I suppose I'll have to do it," he said, and then, assuming one of Bryan's poses for a twenty minute oration, he said: "Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you one and all from the bottom of my heart." Then more applause and prolonged uproar, while an immense bouquet of American Beauty roses was handed over the footlights, which Jeffries received blushing and retired. Three cheers followed, and the prizefighter had made a hit. His first vaudeville appearance was at the afternoon performance in the same theatre, when similar scenes were enacted. The theatre was crowded both afternoon and night.

Personals

LITTLE BEBE DANIELS, who made such a hit as Claudia in The Prince Chap at the Valencia Theatre, will reappear as the nurse in the forthcoming production of Peter Pan at that playhouse.

GARRICK MAJOR, the splendid baritone who played Machievallian Fudge last season in The Gingerbread Man, is still with the company and singing Queen of My Dreams in his own inimitable way.

JESSIE MAE HALL, well and favorably known here, will be brought to the Valencia Theatre especially to play the part of Wendy in Peter Pan. She is now making a great hit in the role in the production at the Burbank Theatre, Los Angeles.

Sydney Ayres Is a Devil of a Good Actor In Faust, a Portland Show This Week

PORTLAND, March 15.—HEILIG THEATRE (Cal Heilig, mgr.; Wm. Pangle, res. mgr.)—Well, we have at last had The Red Mill, the musical comedy that has been so much talked about. It played at this theatre the latter part of last week, and the business it enjoyed was satisfactory in every respect. It deserved it though, for it was one of the best shows of its class that has come this way, and a few more of that calibre would be gladly welcomed. The leading parts were all well taken care of, and while we would like to have seen Montgomery and Stone in their roles, their substitutes gave satisfaction. The supporting company was large and the production was first-class. The latter part of this week Girls is the attraction. Lehigh in concert March 16.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—Time and again words of praise have been uttered as to the productions made by Managers Baker and Seaman by their stock company, and I can assure every one that when it was done they well deserved the kind words spoken, for some of the productions have excelled road companies that previously have been seen in this city in the same plays, but it was not until yesterday that they outdone themselves, if that was possible, when they produced Goethe's Faust. We all remember dear old Louis Morrison in the play, and we used to look forward to his appearance, well knowing that he was going to play Old Nick right up to the handle, and further that we were going to see a fine scenic production of the drama, and we were not disappointed, but, I dare say without fear of contradiction that never in this city have we had as fine a production from a scenic standpoint of the immortal morality play as was offered at this theatre yesterday. It would be impossible to excel the Brocken scene. And as for the company, I must take off my hat to Sydney Ayres for his fine impersonation of his Satanic majesty. True, it was hard for the matinee girls to swallow him in that line of work, but from a critical standpoint, it was really the finest piece of acting since his coming to this city. Following closely on the heels of Ayres comes Donald Bowles, who played Faust. All who have seen Bowles play juvenile roles know of his ability, and can easily imagine how fine a portrayal he would give of the name part of the play. Izzetta Jewel was good in all respects as Marguerite and Mina Gleason as Dame Martha was right in her element, and gave a perfect performance. James Gleason, Howard Russell and William Dills in the minor roles were equal to all demands made upon them. No doubt Faust will do a big week's business. Next week—There and Back.

BAKER THEATRE (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—This house is dark this week, and remains so until Harry Beresford opens.

ORPHEUM THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—Last week's bill was a capital one in every respect, there were four acts on the bill that were above the average, and the balance of the acts were good. Violet Black in

The Subway; Four Puncherries; Jas. Cullen; and Sibon's novelty circus were the acts that more than made good and which went to make up one of the most entertaining weeks of vaudeville. Commencing tonight the bill includes Tom Nawn and company; Eight Melanis; Four Dunbars; Faye, Miller and Weston; the playlet Wireless; W. E. Whittle; and Charles Mathews.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—The Charity Ball is this week's offering at this theatre. It was presented yesterday to packed houses. The production is first-class in every particular and the management is to be congratulated for the same. Herbert Ashton and Lillian Branscomb rejoined the company yesterday, and each were given an ovation on their appearance. Mr. Ashton will again direct the stage. Ralph Belmont gave another good performance of his role yesterday, as did Mrs. Lillian Griffiths and Rupert Drum.

GRAND THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—Don. Leno's Youngsters is the feature act this week, and the balance of the bill includes Ellsworth and Lindon; Les Georgettys; Errac; Sarah Cogswell; and Harry McDuffee.

PANTAGES has Adelaide Hermann for their headline act for this week. A. W. W.

Daniel Sully In The Matchmaker

A welcome announcement for theatre goers of San Francisco is that of the return of Daniel Sully in his Western comedy-drama, The Matchmaker, next Sunday, March 28. In these days of the "hurry-up" drama, when plays are hastily thrown together and put on the boards on a few days' notice, it is refreshing indeed to witness a performance which bears the marks of care and study, evidences attention to minor details and the intelligent application of those fundamental dramatic rules which make all the difference between a good performance and the kind universally described as "rotten." When a play receives the unanimous endorsement of the press, the pulpit and the public, it is safe to conclude that there is something out of the ordinary either in the play itself, the manner of its presentation, or the actors who appear in it. In The Matchmaker each of these three elements of interest may be said to contribute to the success of the play, but the great drawing power of this comedy-drama comes from its faithful portrayal of the characteristics of widely diverging types of human nature. Each character in the cast is a study in itself, from the degenerate halfbreed "Injun" to the Reverend Father Daly himself. Mr. Sully's conception of the role of the frontier priest appeals most strongly to clergymen, without regard to denomination or creed; the brethren of the cloth recognize in Father Daly a type of the missionary who is fighting the good fight not alone in the outlying districts of this country but in every land and clime. Their sympathy goes out to the Idaho pastor in his trials and tribulations and, better than anyone else, the clergyman appreciates the realism of his cares and perplexities. Fortunately the serious element of the play is not allowed to predominate, as under the rich humor and delicious vein of comedy may be seen the stern, unalterable laws of every day life, and while the average theatre goer will carry away with him only the memory of a delightful comedy, the observant student of human nature will note how closely the comedy is allied to tragedy, and how often in the humor the smile mingles with the tear.

Ragtime Dead, Says Sousa

"Ragtime has had its funeral," said John Philip Sousa, the bandmaster, discussing popular music. "It had the gout or dyspepsia long before it died. It was overfed by poor nurses. Good ragtime came and then half a million imitators sprung up and as a result the people were sickened with their stuff. I have not played a piece of ragtime this season," continued the march king, "and it's simply because the people do not want it. I used to play it. I do not discriminate between ragtime and grand opera, or anything else that possesses merit. Some of the best of the old ragtime will bear as clever manipulation as Dvorak bestowed on the old Slavonic dance tunes."

Geo. D. Baker, who for the past two seasons appeared in the stellar role of Brady & Grismer's production of As Ye Sow, and is at present featured in the part of Grenfall Lorry in Graustark, will star next season in a new romantic play as yet unnamed, under the management of The Graustark Co., Inc.

Clyde Fitch has named the central character in his new comedy, The Bachelor, in which Charles Cherry is to be seen for the first time as a star, George Goodale, in honor of the oldest dramatic critic in America. Mr. Goodale is still occupying that post on the Detroit Free Press.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bernard

Richard Carle, who presents himself in his new musical gambol, Mary's Lamb, at the Van Ness Theatre next week.

Something About Richard Carle

He is 37 years old.

He was born in Somerville, a suburb of Boston.

He has worn glasses since early childhood, and never has played a part on the stage without his transoms.

At 17 he was giving lyceum entertainments throughout New England.

His first stage work was in A Mad Bargain, of which James T. Powers was the star.

He played in California in the companies of James T. Powers and Peter F. Dailey fifteen years ago. He has never been to the Pacific since.

He played for several years in the New York Casino company, in its palmy days. During the London engagement of this company he rose to be leading man.

Returning to America ten years ago, he was engaged by the Dearborn Theatre company, Chicago, to revamp several musical plays, especially The Storks and The Explorers.

His first play was Mam'selle 'Awkins, which is still a favorite in some sections.

His first big musical comedy was The Tenderfoot.

He is the author of The Tenderfoot, The Mayor of Tokio, The Maid and the Mummy, The Spring Chicken, The Boy and the Girl and The Hurdy Gurdy Girl, all musical comedies.

He writes not only book and lyrics for his musical plays, but he composes the music as well.

He acts as his own manager, thus drawing salary and royalty and participating in the profits of his plays as well.

The Boy and the Girl, one of his musical plays, was produced in Chicago last Saturday night, March 20.

His present long tour in Mary's Lamb will end in Duluth on May 15. Two weeks later, at the Colonial Theatre in Chicago, he will appear in The Hurdy Gurdy Girl, his own musical comedy.

He has never smoked cigar, pipe or cigarette.

His baptismal name is Charles Nicholas Carleton.

Spotlights

Klaw & Erlanger and Joseph Brooks have accepted a play by Mrs. Gertrude Andrews, entitled Through a Window, which they will produce early next fall.

The Black Patti Troubadours, which follow Daniel Sully at the American Theatre, are now making their thirteenth annual Trans-American and California tour, and this season the vocal equipment of the organization is said to be better than ever before. Sissirietta Jones, known as the "Black Patti," and who has often sung with great success in this city, is said to be in better voice than ever and Managers Voelckel and Nolan have surrounded her with the strongest support in years. The two-act musical comedy, The Blackville Strollers, is this year's offering and it is loaded with clever comedians, nimble dancers, a comely chorus and a score of song surprises.

Notwithstanding the tremendous success of The Halfbreed the last performances of that stirring comedy drama will be given this Saturday and Sunday afternoons and evenings, and on Monday night Pretty Peggy, the romantic and beautiful play, will be presented on a most elaborate scale. In the titular role Blanche Stoddard will have a splendid opportunity to shine. Thomas MacLarnie will be the David Garrick, Gerald Harcourt will play Sir Charles Hanbury, and Charles Dow Clark will be the Earl of Cholmondeley. Thomas Lowell will be the younger Cholmondeley and Robert Homans will play Cavendish, the fortune teller. Lillian Andrews will be Peg's mother and pretty Beatrice Nichols her sister Polly, a part she played with great success at the Bush Temple, Chicago.

tion of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, in which Guy Standing and Theodore Roberts are starring, is one of the successes of the season on the Pacific Coast, despite the fact that the play was not received with the cordiality it deserved in the East. Messrs. Standing and Roberts remain together next season, appearing in an American play in which there are two big roles.

The Round Up, Klaw & Erlanger's big play of the Arizona desert, by Edmund Day, has captured the West. Next season it will be sent through the South and out to the Pacific Coast, with a strong cast. Maclyn Arbuckle, however, will not play the role of the sheriff, as he has been called upon to create the leading role in Eugene Presbrey's new play, The Circus Man, which will be produced by Klaw & Erlanger and Joseph Brooks in Chicago next August. The Circus Man will be one of those big productions for which Klaw & Erlanger have become famous.

Architectural Item From Los Angeles

Architecture is the craze at the Belasco Theatre at present. It was only a few days ago that Richard Vivian added an $8,000 house to his possessions, and now Georgie Clayton, treasurer, has just completed a chicken house for the accommodation of five bantam hens, and for the benefit of the "eggzercise" he will obtain in gathering the eggs. And now Gil Williams is constructing a kennel for imported cats.

A Real Parisian

William Collier was about fifteen years old when he went abroad as a member of the Augustin Daly Company—that extraordinary organization including such names as Drew, Skinner, Rehan, May Irwin, Edith Kingdon, James Lewis and Mrs. Gilbert—that Daly brought to London and to Paris with a repertoire of eleven pieces, and that finally scored its greatest success, the old comedy, Love on Crutches. It was the golden age for little "Willie" Collier, who acted as prompter, call boy, and generally beck and call individual for Mr. Daly. "Willie" was particularly taken with Paris. He found the language a little difficult—in fact, he was greatly amazed on discovering that to order a meal in dialect, or by giving an imitation of a Frenchman using English, was not understood by the ordinary French waiter. "If it hadn't been for John Drew," the comedian now says, "I should have starved to death." Paris, its boulevards, its cafes, its theatres, its life, seemed so many Elysian fields to young Collier. Every cent of the fifteen dollars a week that was his salary he spent left and right drinking to the dregs the best that Paris had to give him. But finally he found himself at a standstill against the insurmountable obstacle of an empty pocket; so he went to Mr. Daly, and, pulling a long face, said: "Mr. Daly, I can't go to London with the company unless I have fifty dollars right off!" "Fifty dollars," repeated the manager, "H'm, let me see; well, I believe you say you like Paris very well? All right, you shall stay in Paris!"

Mme. Tetrassini Applauds Herself

Mme. Luisa Tetrassini of the Manhattan Opera Company was the guest at a beefsteak dinner given in the "Garret" at Reisenweber's, New York, last week by Mrs. Jacob Litt. Four negro singers entertained the diners, and later they were photographed with Mme. Tetrassini standing in front of them. When the dinner was over Mrs. Litt's guests were treated to a novelty when records of Mme. Tetrassini's voice were ground out. The singer seemed to enjoy them immensely. While the machine was rolling out the high, top note she made all the appropriate gestures as if she were really singing her favorite arias. When the machine started to rasp every one laughed, but the prima donna motioned them to remain quiet. As soon as the song was ended Mme. Tetrassini led the applause. The dinner was given after the opera performance at the Manhattan, and several other singers of Mr. Hammerstein's company were guests of Mrs. Litt.

American Theatre

The last performances of the greatest musical comedy success of the season, The Gingerbread Man, will take place this Saturday afternoon and evening, and at the Sunday matinee Daniel Sully, "the natural actor," and a great favorite here, will begin a week's engagement in The Matchmaker. The role of Father Daly, which Mr. Sully portrays, is said to give the popular actor great opportunities for the display of that rich Celtic humor which is his peculiar characteristic. In The Matchmaker he has another Parish Priest, in which he starred so successfully for several seasons, but the present play is much stronger dramatically. The scenes are laid in a little frontier town in Idaho, where Father Daly, pastor of the local church, has great trouble in controlling and governing a wayward flock. There is a wealthy, domineering ranchman in love with his pretty ward, a young mining engineer who proves a formidable rival, a very disreputable half-breed "Injun," a rollicking, lovable, slangy hoyden who is the chief torment of Father Daly's life, a pompous army colonel, a fascinating widow from New York, a callow young artist and a number of interesting minor characters. Mr. Sully has a supporting company that is good and the production identical in every respect with the one he gave in New York. The Black Patti Troubadours will follow The Matchmaker.

Alcazar Theatre

With the entire strength of the Alcazar company in When We Were Twenty-One, an adequate presentation of Henry V. Esmond's charming play is assured, commencing next Monday evening. When We Were Twenty-One was the finest vehicle in which Nat C. Goodwin and Maxine Elliott ever jointly appeared, and it served them as a starring medium for three seasons. It deals with an escapade of The Imp, a youth who has just attained man's estate. He is an orphan, but no parents could treat him better than does his guardian, Dick Carew, and three former friends of his father, bachelors all and self-styled The Trinity. They assist Carew in looking out for the youngster's scholastic and worldly training, but despite their espionage and counsel he secretly becomes infatuated with The Firefly, a woman of the music halls. When the alliance is discovered by The Trinity they are appropriately shocked, for they had settled it that he would marry Phyllis Ericson, a young lady who covertly admires and is admired by Carew, the latter, however, being willing to subdue his heart yearning to promote the boy's happiness. He is kept in ignorance of the lad's entanglement by The Trinity, who endeavor to bribe The Firefly to relinquish her claim when the lad learns of their scheme and dismays them all by asserting she is his wife. The rather complicated situation this evolved is relieved by The Firefly disowning The Imp, who goes abroad, leaving Phyllis and Carew to realize the dream they had both been secretly nurturing. From beginning to end the play is prolific of interest, and the character-drawing is excellent. Evelyn Vaughan will be cast as Phyllis, Bertram Lytell as Carew, Ernest Glendinning as The Imp, Messrs. Walling, Hickman and Wesner as The Trinity, Louise Brownell as The Firefly, Bessie Barriscale as a piquant daughter of Erin, and Adele Belgarde as Mrs. Ericson, mother of Phyllis, while all the minor parts will be well taken care of.

The Orpheum

A capital program is announced for next week. It will be headed by the Eight Melanis, Italian vocalists, who will contribute a highly artistic and ambitious singing number. This elaborated offering is the evolution of a smaller act known as the Melani Trio which for years has been popular in vaudeville. To the original trio have been added two prima donnas and three male vocalists. Tom Nawn, delineator of Irish roles, will appear in a mythical comedy entitled Pat and the Genii. He will be assisted by Mrs. Nawn and Charlotte Appelle. The Four Casting Dunbars, American athletes, will introduce an aerial novelty of intrepid and sensational character. Charles Matthews, known in the English dominion as "the human kangaroo," and who has held against all comers in open competition the title of champion jumper of the world, will be a particularly interesting incident of the coming program. He will be assisted by Doris Reece. Next week will be the last of the Four Poncherries; Silbon's Novelty Circus; James H. Cullen; and of Violet Black and company.

A. L. Erlanger Abroad

A. L. Erlanger is abroad. Friends write that he is like a boy out of school away from the responsibilities and trials of the American Theatrical Syndicate. In a London interview he said: "We have had a big season in America and I believe the theatrical interests generally weathered the panic last year better than any other branch of business. The years of compact organization which began with the formation of our syndicate in 1896 had evidently equipped managers to weather a little financial storm, and we had fewer failures in proportion than in any other line of investment. I have come over here to confer with Charles Frohman about an English production of Little Nemo, which as you know is the biggest musical comedy success that has even been made in America or any other country. We would like to produce the play here on the same lines and with the same people that we have presented it in America, bringing over the scenic equipment and organization of 200 people intact. An American spectacle has never been produced in London, and we believe we may say without egotism that we can show the people here in two and a half hours more quick entertainment than they ever saw in their lives in the same length of time. There is nothing local about Nemo except the Independence scene, which, after all, is as familiar to intelligent Englishmen as it is to Americans. As to when Little Nemo will be presented here, that is a question of securing a large theatre and unlimited time. We have an option on the Gaiety play, Miss Gibbs, and also on the pantomime at the Drury Lane, which has been held over for two days so as to give me a chance to see it." When asked about the rumors of a theatrical war in America, Mr. Erlanger said: "There isn't going to be any theatrical war. There never was any theatrical war. Any powder or ammunition that has been used has been wasted. We do not fear Gatling guns or cannon or the newest invention of noiseless powder. Our organization is complete and has grown stronger every year in the fourteen of its existence. There is one thing which the yellow journals which are constantly trying to bring about strife (I suppose for the purpose of increasing their advertising) always forget, and that is, that since the beginning of the world the figure 'I' has always come first. Every city has one biggest building, every country has one biggest city; America has only one national capital. Every city has its one leading newspaper, its one greatest lawyer and its one biggest business concern. There is only one Standard Oil Company, only one United States Steel Corporation. No matter how many railroads are operated in America, the public generally select one as their favorite for their personal transportation. No matter how many great insurance companies there are there is always one that is bigger than the others. No matter how many universities and colleges there are, there is always one that is best. Some one ship that crosses the ocean is quicker than the others. There is only one Pacific Ocean; only one Amazon River. The newspapers might as well recognize the law of dominance in the theatrical business. Notwithstanding all the yelping and barking of these yellow boys, there is only one theatrical syndicate worthy of the name; there never has been but one." Mr. Erlanger expects to remain in London only a few days to finish up his business with Mr. Frohman, when he will depart for the Continent, visiting Paris, Brussels, Berlin, Vienna, Buda-Pest and such other points of interest as may attract his attention.

New Leading Woman for the Valencia

Harriet Worthington, who will follow Blanche Stoddard as leading lady of the Valencia stock company, arrived from New York on Friday and is busy preparing for her initial appearance in this city as Peter Pan. She is possessed of singular beauty and a most magnetic personality and is a great favorite on Broadway, where she has just concluded a most successful engagement in the leading role of The Gentleman from Mississippi. She has had an extended experience with stock companies, brings twenty-two trunks of costumes with her, and if her Eastern success is any criterion, will undoubtedly become a warm favorite in San Francisco.

Spotlights

Peggy Machree closes its season in the East in May. John O'Hara, who was in the original cast of Wildfire with Lillian Russell, rejoins the company next season.

Harvey B. Day is putting out The Belle of Japan, which was launched some years ago under the title of The Belle of Manila. Harvey's address is 231 Seventh Street, Milwaukee.

An elaborate revival of The Mascot will be the Spring attraction at Klaw & Erlanger's New Amsterdam Theatre, New York. Audran's comic opera will be given in its entirety, a performance which New York theatre-goers have never seen or heard. Raymond Hitchcock as Lorenzo will head the cast. Associated with him will be Flora Zabelle as Bettina, Estelle Wentworth as Fiametta, Edward Favor as Rocco, Henry Coote as Pippo, Edgar Atchison Ely as Frederic, Bruce Smith as Matheo, and a strong chorus. The Mascot is the opera in which Fay Templeton made her first hit at the Bijou Theatre, New York City.

Fannie Ward carried off the honors at the benefit given for Mrs. Lester Wallack at Wallack's Theatre by the theatre managers of New York by her performance in Eugene Walter's playlet, The Flag Station. Mr. Walter has expressed the wish to write a play for her. An incident that surprised him in the production was the change made in the names of the railroad stations. Miss Ward used the play in London last season. On the morning after its first production a top-hatted, frock-coated solicitor of a Canadian railroad called on Miss Ward and in the best legal terms carefully and fully explained that the railroad company which he represented had changed its system of signals since the play was written. Although under the method as represented by the playwright not a life had been lost in a wreck, nevertheless it might give a prospective passenger a wrong conception of the road and its management. Therefore, much as he regretted the proceedings unless the names of the railroad stations were altered and the railroad remained unnamed in the play of necessity he would have to begin an action for $100,000 for damages. The changes were made at once. No one thought of the matter when the American production was rehearsed and that is why Mr. Walter got the impression that the players were taking liberties with his manuscript.

Ollie Morosco Produces Arizona in Los Angeles, Despite Legal Tangle Over Play Ownership in the East

Los Angeles, Mar. 25.—We are all sort of sitting up and taking notice here this week, over the Burbank production of Arizona, and wondering just what is due to happen, because of it. Why? Well, because. The creditors of Melville B. Raymond are having a lot of troubles about the ownership of Arizona, and there have been warnings and counter-warnings against its production anywhere in the country pending the settlement of matters. Then, here a week or ten days ago, Augustus Thomas, no more important a personage in the disputed matter than the author of the play, shield his castor into the ring, and claimed that the play had reverted to him. Following which, he also issued a warning against the production of the play, in stock or otherwise. Now, somewhere along the line, Manager Morosco unquestionably made arrangements for the production of the play, but just as unquestionably, he's disobeying "somebody's" mandate in having gone ahead with the piece. Whose? Heaven-only knows, but it's a cinch that somebody's going to claim he has disobeyed, and we are wondering from just what point of the heavens the lightning will come. That man Lewis S. Stone is surely it, both as an all-round stock actor and as a creator of new roles in try-outs. There are three brand new plays in my recollection in each of which he made such a hit that the authors wanted to take him to New York to head the Metropolitan casts. When The Test was put on here, Jules Eckert Goodman not only wanted him for the Eastern production, but tried hard to get him because of his excellent work as Tretman, the ex-convict. Now George Broadhurst wants him for Gresham in The Dollar Mark, which is just closing a most successful three weeks' run. But there's nothing stirring, right now anyhow, "for we've 'im an' we an't a gwine to let 'im go" until we can't help ourselves. Florence Reed, the talented daughter of Roland Reed (rest his soul!), has arrived in the city to assume her duties as leading woman of the Belasco company, vice Florence Oakley, resigned. Miss Reed is a young woman who is preceded by a most excellent reputation for ability and charm, and from whom we expect much. She makes her first appearance in Jerome K. Jerome's comedy, Miss Hobbs, next week.

AUDITORIUM—Uncle Tom's Cabin continues to crowd the Auditorium for the second week of the production. The play contains many excellent musical numbers, well sung, and it is well staged and deserves success.

BELASCO—The Dollar Mark continues to pack the Belasco. If crowded houses are any indications of the success of the play, then George Broadhurst's new play will make a hit in the East. The cast has improved in the last two weeks, and in its third week is running with all the smoothness of the old-timers.

BURBANK—Arizona, Augustus Thomas' drama, is being given for the first time in stock by the Burbank Company this week. It is a great play and the Morosco Company gives a well-acted and well-staged version of

it. William Desmond as Lieutenant Denton is at his best and deserves particular mention for his excellent work. A. Byron Beasley gives a most pleasing and convincing characterization of Henry Canby, the ranchman. Harry Mestayer, as Tony, the Mexican, gives a studied and finished portrayal of the part. Blanche Hall is most happily cast as Bonita, the fascinating ranch girl with Broadway gowns. Charles Giblyn has his first real opportunity in this play and he does some very excellent work as Hodgman the villain. Margo Duffett is cast as Lena; Lovell Alice Taylor as the indiscreet Mrs. Bonham, and William Yerance as Colonel Bonham. The minor parts are all well taken and every scene is admirably staged.

MAJESTIC—The Burgomaster, Pixley and Luder's musical comedy, is with us again. The same old jokes, the same tuneful music and a lot of pretty girls please the audience at the Majestic this week. Marie Granpre, as Ruth, the summer girl, is the most pleasing feature of the performance, and she uses her sweet and powerful voice with delightful effect. Harry Hermesen makes an excellent burgo-master, and Leo Kendal as "Doodle" and Fred Bailey as A. Booth Talking-ton contribute much of the comedy. The chorus is pretty and well drilled, the staging good, and the costumes new.

GRAND—The Tales of Hoffman at the Grand this week is probably the most ambitious thing ever presented by a musical stock company. Mr. Blackwood has had this production in mind for several months, but it was not until the arrival of Edgar Walsh that the project was possible. Mr. Walsh as Horman is introduced to us in a line of operatic work in which he is at his very best, and Christine Nielson astonished even her most ardent admirers by her singing. Ferris Hartman does some very clever character acting as Coppelius, a Jew. Jos. Fogerty as Dr. Miracle wins well-deserved praise. The opera is full of bewitching music, and the settings and costumes are unusually beautiful. There is an enlarged orchestra. Mr. Blackwood is to be congratulated on the success of his undertaking.

MASON—Richard Carle, the accomplished comedian, makes his first appearance in Los Angeles at the Mason Opera House this week. He presents his own musical comedy, Mary's Lamb. The central character is Leander Lamb, hen-pecked husband of Mary Miranda Lamb, who has been held under close scrutiny for a score of years, while everyone venerates Mary Miranda as the personification of all that is good. Mr. Carle plays the lamb; Julia Ralph is the wife, and Cecilia Rhoda appears as an actress. The cast is large and the chorus is agile, pretty and graceful. Some of the most popular songs include: Betsy's the Belle of the Bathers, My Madagascari Maid, If No. 1 Met No. 2, I Idolize Ida, The Modest Little Model, and Love is Elusive. Mr. Carle sings A Lemon in the Garden of Love. One of the excellent features is a series of shadow pictures.

ORPHEUM—The present bill at the Orpheum is as varied as it is entertaining. It includes two gymnastic acts, two sketches, two musical acts, a magician and a troupe of dogs and ponies, besides orchestral numbers and pictures. Frank Nelson, in the sketch, Thirty Dollars, heads the bill. It is a very clever thing, well done. Tony Wilson and Mlle. Heloise are gymnasts who make difficult things look easy. Nonette plays the violin and sings, and Guy Hoppe and Sol Goldsmith give an admirable comedy and musical skit. Jwan Tschernoff's dogs, ponies and pigeons are a well-trained troupe, and one pony possesses remarkable intelligence. The bill is most satisfactory.

LOS ANGELES—Luken's lions are the feature of the programme at the Los Angeles this week. These lions are well trained, and the man in the cage displays a large amount of courage which to my mind is akin to foolhardiness in his handling of them. Howard Truesdell and his company of four present an amusing playlet, Two Men and a Bottle. Harry Deaves' manikin actors are exhibited in a travesty on Uncle Tom's Cabin. Joe Edmonds is a monologist, and the three Van Diemens are aerial gymnasts. Motion pictures complete the bill.

EMPIRE—The bill for the week at the Empire includes Clara Dagneau and her dancing boys in a singing and dancing act; J. Bernard Dyllin, The Original Horseshoe Man, with new jokes and songs; Kawana, Japanese juggler, and the stock company in Duffy's Daughter Kate.

FISCHER'S—"More laughs than ever" is the verdict after seeing The Pawnbroker, which is Producer Chas. Alphin's new bill at Fischer's. Max Bloom as the loan shark and Ben T. Dillon as his Irish wife furnish the fun because of marital infelicity. Nellie Montgomery portrays the Bowery After Dark, Frank Vack is the Jew's brother-in-law, Pearl Jardinere is a merry widow, and Tracy McDermott the rent collector. Among the musical numbers interpolated in the piece are a burlesque on The Merry Widow, by Tracy McDermott; Choo, Choo Cars, by Ben T. Dillon, and I Wish I Had a Pal, by Miss Montgomery and chorus. Miss Raymond has a solo number that is very good. The usual motion pictures complete the bill.

UNIQUE—The Astronomer is the title of the burlesque which Frank B. Blair is putting on at the Unique this week. It is a very pleasing piece, and the climaxes come fast and the audience is kept guessing. Will Armstrong sings My Irish Canary; May Parker is heard to advantage in Carmena. Miss Parker is the new soprano of the company. Jack Curtis does a walking part, his appearance creating a laugh on each entrance. Miss Sutherland is cast as the daughter of Laurel Atkins and sings a catchy song entitled, Uncle Remus. John J. Martin makes his first appearance this week and is proving himself a comedian of much ability, and his number is entitled I'm Glad I'm Married.

WALKER'S—The bill at the Walker Theatre contains a number of high-class acts. At the head of the bill is Mysterious Roberta, in The Milk-Can Mystery. Other features include Will Tompkins, with some of his live-wire monology; Loftin and Stuart in a one-act playlet; La Nole Brothers, in good work on the horizontal bars and Roman rings; Luella Davis, soprano; Belle Barron, character comedieme, and Joseph Manley in illustrated songs.

San Jose Playwright Scores Success With New Play

On Sunday, March 21st, Sacramento saw the initial production of The Wall Between, in four acts, written principally by Ray W. Harden and incidentally by D. S. Lawrence. An exceptionally large crowd greeted the opening matinee at the Grand, despite threatening weather, and at the evening performance every seat was sold, including boxes and galleries, and several standing. Each performance during the week has been to full houses, the audience voicing an enthusiastic approval by prolonged applause and curtain calls. The Wall Between has met with the decisive support of the people, who pay to see it, which is, after all, the all-important question. Despite the fact that the Sacramento press have been unfavorable to past productions at the Grand, they have been compelled, by the exceptional success of The Wall Between and its widespread popularity among theatregoers to give to it considerable credit. They describe it as novel and interesting and full of surprises, with a compelling interest which makes the unraveling of its twin stories a fascinating sight. "It is so eternally different, for one thing," says the Bee, and later adds: "Bernard Shaw himself never wrote anything crazier." After a week of continued success at the Grand Theatre, during which The Wall Between has created a mild sensation, and become the talk of the Capital, it is certain to see a great and prosperous future. Inquiries have already been received from several managers, and it is now certain that The Wall Between will be seen in a high-class road production next season. It is rumored that it may be presented at the American for a brief run, and later at the Victory, San Jose—the home of Author Harden, where the new play has created considerable interest.

Princess Theatre

Frederick Ranken and Henry K. Hadley's musical comedy, Nancy Brown, in which Marie Cahill captured New York, will receive a superb production next Monday night. The scene of this delightful play is laid in an imaginary Oriental city, which, for want of a more appropriate title, is dubbed Ballyhoo. There Nancy Brown conducts an international matrimonial bureau with extraordinary and diverting results. Frank Moulan as Muley Mustapha Bey of Ballyhoo will have a congenial role that is brimful of opportunities. May Boley will have Marie Cahill's part of Nancy Brown. She is delighted with it and recognizes that its many possibilities will afford her a splendid chance to distinguish herself. The Princess Beauty chorus will be in pleasant evidence in new and magnificent costumes, and a thoroughly perfect ensemble will gratify those who attend. The Sultan of Sulu will be played for the last times this Sunday afternoon and evening.

ISABELLE FLETCHER closes at Ye Liberty playhouse in Oakland next week.

Correspondence

Philadelphia, March 20.—The Happy Marriage, a comedy by Clyde Fitch, and the musical play, The Boys and Betty, in which Marie Cahill appears at the Garrick, are the only absolutely new presentations of the week. To the Forrest returns George M. Cohan's lively concoction, The Yankee Prince, while the attractions which remain over from last week are A Grand Army Man, with David Warfield in a sympathetic character study of the old Grand Army man, Wes' Bigelow, at the Lyric; Annie Russell, who has scored another success in the interesting drama of English life, The Stronger Sex, at the Chestnut Street Opera House; and the musical comedy hit, The Newlyweds and Their Baby, at the Adelphi. Vaudeville Notes.—Lucy Weston, the clever English comedienne, is still working heavily. She is featuring A Little Bit's a Whole Lot Better Than Nothing at All. Irene Franklin has been captured by William Morris. She will be assisted by Bert Green on the Morris circuit for thirty weeks. Nance O'Neil will return to vaudeville, opening March 22 at Keith's, Boston. In One Thousand Dollars Reward, Alice Lloyd has purchased a five hundred acre ranch with over a thousand head of cattle at Rushville, Neb. Between the Twins is the title of a new production announced for early presentation by May Tully. Belle Gordon, the athletic girl, is now playing vaudeville under the direction of Jack Levy. Mrs. James Brown Potter has retired from the stage. Bessie McCoy is said to be a vaudeville probability when The Three Twins closes its season. Despite liberal offers from William Morris, Eva Tanguay, it is said, will remain with the United. Passaic, N. J., has a brand new vaudeville theatre in the New Montauk. Jules Delmar books. The Shuberts are notifying vaudeville interests that they hold a contract with Eddie Foy for his services to next June, and they will fight any effort to capture him. The Reporter's Nosegay—Robert Hilliard will shortly be seen in a new play, entitled A Fool There Was, under Frederick Thompson's management. Henry B. Harris is at Monte Carlo. Klaw & Erlanger have obtained from Channing Pollock the rights of a new play to be finished for early production next season, entitled The Right to Happiness. Helen Ware, who has scored an enormous success at the Hudson Theatre, New York, in Charles Klein's play, The Third Degree, is the daughter of John Remer, architect of Baldwin's Theatre, San Francisco, which was destroyed during the earthquake. In St. Louis and Kansas City Olga Nethersole is doing a great business in N. J. Hurlbut's The Writing on the Wall. George M. Cohan expects to celebrate his next birthday, the Fourth of July, among the Alps. It is a certainty that the stars and stripes will be unfurled atop of Mount Blanc on that occasion. Many persons prominent in New York and other large cities are interested in a movement to raise a fund for the purchase of a bronze statue of the late Richard Mansfield to be placed in the foyer of the New Theatre. A committee of New York men has been formed to further the project, with Mr. Paul D. Cravath as treasurer. Marie Cahill is so well pleased with the success of The Boys and Betty that a tour is now being booked which will extend to the Pacific Coast. Rose Stahl, of The Chorus Lady fame, holds a medal for cooking that she won attending the Convent of the Sacred Heart of Montreal. Helen F. Cohan, the charming mother of The Yankee Prince comedian, and who appears with him in The Yankee Prince, is conceded to be one of the most handsomely gowned women on the American stage. Percy Haswell, who is now traveling with Otis Skinner, will have the leading part in the new Tarkington play called Foreign Exchanges. Rose Stahl will present The Chorus Girl in London on April 19. Press Eldridge is Harry's minstrel. George Cohan has promised to write a play for Carter De Haven. Burr McIntosh is to be manager hereafter by N. A. Brady and Joseph Grismer. He is to go on a lecture tour. Annie Russell's tour in The Stronger Sex will end in Philadelphia on March 20, and shortly afterwards she will sail for England to spend the summer abroad. Miss Russell will have a new play next season and will continue under Wagenhals and Kemper's.

CALVIN M. FRANKLIN.

Laramie, Wyo., March 21.—Nothing doing here the past week at Opera House. Nothing definite in sight.

El Paso, Texas, March 20.—El Paso Theatre (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—Norman Hackett, who appears at this house March 20-21, is a staunch Elk, as well as a matinee idol. Mr. Hackett belongs to the San Diego lodge, and his initiation into this lodge was most unique. The San Diego bunch, desiring to have a little fun on the side and to do something extra, as befitted the initiation of so important a member, arranged to have Mr. Hackett arrested. Immediately after the curtain was rung down at the matinee performance, two burly policemen arrested Mr. Hackett. And Mr. Hackett's protests were to no avail. They marched him out in front of the house just as the audience were leaving, and all kinds of stories were started about his arrest. At the police station the charge was entered of theft. Mr. Hackett was accused of robbing one of the guests of several diamonds at the hotel where he was stopping. Finally after a very heated argument and a few words were used that would not look good in the Sunday school weekly, Mr. Hackett was bailed out. He was then taken to the Elks' Club and initiated according to the Elk ritual, after which Mr. Hackett was told that his arrest was only a joke. Coming, March 22, Richard Carle in Mary's Lamb. Majestic (Frank Rich, mgr.)—The Majestic Musical Company have played to capacity business all week. The chorus is well drilled and good to look upon. Those deserving special mention are Blanche Hayes, Willella Redmon, Grace Wolf, Edna Donnelly and Messrs. Joe Haggerty, Bert L. Russell and Geo. A. Burton. Crawford (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—The Glass players will close their engagement at this house March 24. They go to Shreveport, where they open in stock at the Majestic. They will remain in Shreveport until the middle of May and will open in Dallas at Cycle Park, May 17. They have played to good business during their stay here and have given satisfaction. Manager Frank Rich's face is wreathed with smiles of the brand which will not rub off. The Park Association has just voted an appropriation of $10,000 to be spent on improvements, work to start at once.

GEO. A. MANSFIELD.

San Diego, March 22.—Garrick Theatre (Morosco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—March 21-22, A Trip to Africa. This is a colored aggregation and they give a very fair performance. The company is composed of some excellent singers and dancers, and the chorus, while not a large one, is well drilled. George Taylor, the comedian, is very funny and has a very good voice which he uses to advantage. He can be classed among the best of his race on the contemporary stage today. On account of the inclement weather they are doing only fair business. 26-27, Norman K. Hackett in Classmates. 28-29, The Burgomaster. April 2-3, Lillian Russell in Wildfire. Remarks—Manager Dodge returned yesterday from San Francisco where he closed a contract with Jim Post to bring a musical comedy company to the Garrick for the summer, commencing May 5th, and it is the writer's personal opinion that he couldn't have signed up a better company. There is no doubt but that the S. R. O. sign will be displayed quite frequently. Pickwick Theatre (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—Week 21, Armstrong Musical Comedy Company in A Trip to Coney Island. This is a good comedy, and Edward Armstrong has some good opportunities to show his worth as a comedian in the part of Zeke Hayrake, and he is not slow in grasping them. Libby Blondell sings two songs, Monkeyland and Down by the Seashore and scores a big hit. Inez Bayard also scores a hit when she sings My Idaho Gal. Barney Williams makes good as a Grafter and sings some good parodies. One of the song hits is Julia, sung by Armstrong, Williams, Rhen, Davis, Blondell and Baird. Ethel Davis sings Roses in a pleasing manner. The chorus as usual sing and dance well. Good business continues to rule. Queen Theatre (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.)—Week 21, Sullivan & Considine vaudeville. The bill opens with Walter Berlin, clever change artist, who has a pleasing act. Watson and Little in their vocal comedietta, A Matrimonial Bargain, have a neat little act. Alice Lewis, comedian, pleases. Les Theodors, gymnasts, who display strength and agility, have a good act. Cotter and Boulden in singing and dancing sketch entitled Whips in Bits, have a clever act and score a big hit. The show which is really a good one, concludes with the latest moving pictures. Good business. Grand Theatre (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.)—Manager Fulkerson is showing good judgment in his selection for the Grand this week. The bill is composed of the following artists: Harry Walton, king of Chinese dialect comedians, who has one of the best acts of its kind on the vaudeville stage today, scores a big hit. Reed and Reed in Finnigan's Home, have an act that is a scream from start to finish. Anna Baumen, vocalist, sings several songs in a pleasing manner. Eugene Debell in illustrated songs and latest moving pictures conclude a good show. Good business. Empire Theatre (W. W. Bosley, mgr.)—The Musical Shireys have a good musical turn. Albert Tint sings Highland Mary and Brudde Sylvest in a pleasing manner. The Lydick Sisters in illustrated songs, and moving pictures conclude a good show. Gaiety Theatre (W. A. Marsh, mgr.)—The Great Kamama Medicine Show. Bijou and Union Theatres offer moving pictures and illustrated songs to good business.

San Bernardino, March 23.—At the Opera House (Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, mgr.)—The Elleford company last week played a very successful engagement, a full house and a well pleased audience was the rule each night. Tuesday, 16th, however, The Right of Way to one of the best houses of the season. The production was satisfactory in every respect and was so pronounced by all. 29, Lillian Russell in Wildfire.

J. E. RICH.

Redlands, March 23.—The Wyatt (H. C. Wyatt, mgr.; E. J. Underwood, bus. mgr.)—18, The Right of Way was played before a large audience which enjoyed every moment of the play. 24, Norman Hackett in Classmates was well received. Next attraction is Lillian Russell on the 31st. April bookings include The Burgomaster on the 3d and Daniel Sully, 22.

H. A. HARGRAVES.

Fresno, March 17.—Barton Opera House (Robert G. Barton, prop. and mgr.)—Joseph DeGrasse played Merchant of Venice, 10. Fair attendance. Good show. Gingerbread Man, 16, pleased large audience. Novelty Theatre (A. J. Hotchkiss, mgr.)—Raymond Teal Musical Comedy, Too Rich to Marry, 15-18. Melrose stock company opens 22 for indefinite stay. Empire (Ed Hoen, prop.)—Gertie Dunlap company, The Wizard of Wall Street, 15-21. Good business. Redmond company, 22, The Bachelor's Romance. Star, Bijou, National, Grand and Fair theatres, moving pictures to small attendance. Item—After twenty-eight weeks of paying business at the Empire the Gertie Dunlap company will close 21. Lew Virden and Gertie Dunlap will join the Raymond Teal musical comedy company, the other members of the company will go on the road as the Jackson-Berger stock company. The roster of the company is Lorna Doone Jackson, C. Rae Berger, Leslie P. Webb, Mayme Pansler, Max Hoen, Josephine Martin, Harry Roberts, Frank Roberts and Ed Hodel.

Monterey, Tex., March 12.—The Juarez Theatre here was destroyed by fire last night, causing a loss estimated at $250,000. The building was unoccupied.

Fresno, March 24.—Barton Opera House (Robt. G. Barton, prop.)—The Right of Way, 21. Fine performance. Good attendance. Black Patti, 25. Novelty Theatre (A. J. Hotchkiss, mgr.)—Nashville Students, 22-28. Good show to fair business. Empire Theatre (E. Hoen, prop.)—Redmond stock company in A Bachelor's Romance. Excellent performance to good returns. Five moving picture houses doing fine business on Saturdays and Sundays, balance of week very light.

L. W. WILSON.

Marysville, March 21.—Girls, at the Marysville Theatre on March 22. The Girls gave a very classy performance and played to a big house. Daniel Sully in The Matchmakers played on Tuesday evening, March 23, to a large and appreciative audience.

Woodland, March 20.—Peter Rice, manager of the Harry Beresford company, had a very narrow escape from death while en route to this city a week ago. He left the train at Goshen Junction to send a telegram and the train started to pull out before he was ready. Mr. Rice is an elderly man and a rather portly gentleman, consequently not over active. He lost his grip and fell from the steps. Some of the bystanders who witnessed the accident grabbed him just in time to save him from rolling under the wheels. Aside from one of his legs, which was considerably bruised, and a general shake-up, Mr. Rice escaped uninjured. The accident rather unnerved the members of the company who are very fond of their manager. To add to the company's woes, they were delayed several hours, almost missing their engagement in this city. To make matters even worse, Mr. Beresford, the star, was suffering excruciating pains from neuralgia in the head when he arrived here. Few people in the audience were aware under what difficulties the company were laboring during the performance.

Tacoma, Wash., March 20.—Charles B. Hanford made his annual visit to this city, 7-8, presenting A Winter's Tale and Othello. The supporting company was a large one and adequate in every respect. The plays were given in splendid style. Miss Drofnah was at her best in the dual role of Hermione and Perdita in A Winter's Tale, while Mr. Hanford gave a masterly interpretation of Iago in Othello. Prominent in the casts were Gertrude Fowler, Alexander McKenzie and Andrew Tombs. March 10, Paul Gilmore, who is also an annual visitor here, brought with him The Boys of Company B. The play was a lively and clean little comedy, but not worthy of so good an actor as Mr. Gilmore. Harry McClain, Lyman Overmann and Ethna Bern are deserving of special mention. Arthur Cunningham in The Kerry Gow, 14, made a real hit here, his songs being especially well received. The company is a good one and will return here 21, presenting Shaun Rhue. The Girl Question opened last night for a two nights' engagement and was greeted by a large and enthusiastic audience. The piece is a lively one and the music catchy. Paul Nicholson gets many laughs and is well supported by Elsie Scott, Marguerite Devon, Nina Collins and Russell Lennon and a large chorus. March 23, recital by Joseph Lelievre; 24, lecture by Admiral Robley D. Evans; 26-27, The Red Mill; 28-29, Florence Gear in Marrying Mary. At the opening performance of Quo Vadis at the Star Theatre, Charles B. Hanford occupied a box and addressed the audience. That Tacoma's appreciation of the Mr. Rae players in Quo Vadis was evidenced by the big business that prevailed all week. The piece was gorgeously staged and costumed and splendidly given. Mr. McRae was fine in the role of Marcus Vinicius, having played the part when Quo Vadis was first produced on the road. Mr. Holuber as Petronius gave a successful rendition of the part. Mr. McCub as Ursus played in his usual finished manner. Robert Lawrence was in one of the best characters he has given us, that of Nero the Emperor. Miss Oswald made a pleasing Lygia, rendering her emotional scenes in a natural manner. Tom Sullivan as Tigellinus and Miss Van Tassel as the designing queen of the emperor were strong and virile in their parts. Miss Robeson, Miss Llewellyn and Miss Cordray and Ed Lawrence, Denton Vane and a large supporting company all contributed to the success of the production. During the week just closed the Star's bill was The House of a Thousand Candles, which was well received. Miss Oswald made a charming Marian Devereux and Allen Holuber a manly and independent John Glenarm. John McCabe made the most of the role of Bates the butler and Denton Vane was capital in the role of Larry Donovan, the merry Irish lad. J. Brigham Percival and John Sullivan as the villains were equal to all demands made upon them. Miss Robeson in the role of Sister Agatha, Miss Cordray as a young school girl, Ed Lawrence as the eccentric grandfather and Robert Lawrence as the young priest were all excellent in their parts. Wednesday night, March 17, the bill given was Kathleen Maymourn, under the auspices of the A. O. H., the leading roles being taken by Miss Van Tassel and Michael J. Hooley, the latter a well-known actor on the Coast. Miss Follansbee of Seattle was also in the cast and acquitted herself creditably. Between the acts specialties were introduced by Miss Cordray, Mr. Vane and Mr. Hooley. Next week, Cousin Kate. The vaudeville houses have had their usual good bills. At the Grand, the Georghetty Family of acrobats gave an act sensational and novel. Lightning Hopper amused with his cartoons and Elmer Tenley with his monologue and

Katherine Mulkins Makes Very Favorable Impression in Oakland

This has been rather a dull and listless week in dramatic circles. The most important feature at the Liberty is the introduction of Manager Bishop's new ingenue, Katherine Mulkins, who made her first appearance Monday eve in Israel Zangwill's charming comedy, Merely Mary Ann, in which she essayed the title role and played it in a manner which stamped her as an artist of considerable ability. The young lady has a charming appearance, a good, full voice and made a most favorable impression with her work. Her support by Lanlers Stevens and Geo. Friend was all that could have been wished for, as both of those popular actors appeared at their very best and had parts congenial in every way. Lillian Elliott, as the lodging-house keeper, did some great character work and was one of the hits of the play. E. L. Bennison, Geo. Webster and Georgia Cooper were the others who were conspicuous for their clever work. Next week, The Importance of Being Earnest. The inclement weather has interfered with the attendance at the Macdonough to a considerable extent, and this week's business has diminished somewhat. Kolb and Dill are still presenting Wiener and Schnitzel, but will change the bill next week, when The Politicians will be the offering. A Modern Pocahontas, presented by a company of full-blooded Indians, is the chief attraction at the Orpheum and is proving quite a novel and interesting feature. Foy and Clark are also repeating their last week's success in The Spring of Youth. The other numbers are good and fully up to the Orpheum standard. Six Little Girls and a Teddy Bear, Kitabanza Troupe, Geo. Herbert Mitchell, Walters and Crooker, Agnes Mahr and Connelly and Webb. Isabelle Fletcher, who, for the past two years has been the leading woman with Bishop's players, has concluded her engagement and will give her final performance in The Importance of Being Earnest, next week's production at The Liberty. At present Miss Fletcher's future plans are rather indefinite. Caught in the Rain and The Crisis are early Liberty productions.

Picture Machine Men Organize

Butte, March 24.—A long stride forward was made here this week, when the picture machine operators formed an organization, for the protection both of themselves and of the public. An examination is necessary before the acceptance of candidates for membership, and as a guarantee to the public that a competent man is in charge of the machine, at least once during each performance the union seal will be pictorially displayed on the screen. The officers elected are A. E. Elge, president; M. A. Cannon, vice-president; C. A. Humphries, financial secretary, and Roy Mitchell, recording secretary. Mr. Cannon will act as business agent for the body. Another link is to be added to the gigantic chain of Orpheums in the erection of a house for the vaudeville purveyors presided over by Morris Meyerfeld, at Ogden, Utah. Ground for the house has already been purchased, and it is announced that building operations will be commenced as soon as the snow gives way to spring. Mr. Meyerfeld is represented at Ogden by J. H. Garrett, who will have charge of operations, and through whom the land was secured.

Favors City Nickel Theatres

Chicago, March 22.—New light is thrown on the 5-cent theatre problem by Mrs. William I. Thomas of the juvenile court women's committee, who urges the establishment of a "municipal nickel theatre."

Fight Pictures Are Good

The motion pictures of the Burns-Johnson fight now exhibited at the Novelty Theatre are remarkably fine, and it is at once noticed that the films are about the best ever shown of a fight. Every movement of the fight is depicted and it is almost as enthusiastic to watch them as it must have been to see the fight itself. After four weeks here the pictures will be taken on the road.

United States Court Stops Ben Hur Pictures

By a decision rendered last week in the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, a moving picture exhibition is held to be a stage representation violative of the rights of the author's copyrighted book. The question arose in a suit brought by Klaw & Erlanger and Harper & Brothers against the Kalem Company to enjoin the moving picture exhibitions of Ben Hur. The Kalem Company, which is a member of the moving picture trust, admitted that the scenes which were being exhibited were taken from General Lew Wallace's book, Ben Hur, but it urged through its counsel, Drury W. Cooper, that the representation was only an exhibition of pictures and not a dramatic performance under the copyright law, and that in any event the statute was unconstitutional which sought to prevent moving pictures, because it was not a "writing" within the meaning of the constitution which vested in Congress the power to secure to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their "writings." Klaw & Erlanger and Harpers & Brothers were represented by John Larkin and David Gerber, and it was shown that over five hundred different theatricums were giving exhibitions of Ben Hur throughout the country, and while they conceded that the questions presented had never been decided in this country because the moving picture was a matter of recent discovery and development, still as an author was protected in the story which he originated, any method of conveying to the public that story, whether in pantomime, dialogue or by means of moving pictures was a violation of the author's exclusive right to his origination. The Circuit Court of Appeals held that in order to give a moving picture exhibition it was necessary to take the novel of the author and prepare a synopsis or story, which was in effect a dramatization and that the author alone had the right to make or authorize a dramatization and that therefore a moving picture exhibition of a story of an author violated the author's exclusive right secured to him by his copyright.

Ellsworth and Linden in a one-act farce. His Day Off, provided the comedy features of an interesting bill. The Marco Twins with their absurd actions are always good drawing cards here and this week is no exception. Alice Davenport and company in a well-acted sketch, called Now, and the McIntyre Sisters in songs and dances furnish clean and meritorious acts. Hetty Urma is a pleasing singer and dancer. Next week the tiny trained elephant Baby Hip will be the stellar feature at the Grand. At the Pantages, Adelaide Hermann entertained with her feats of magic. Joe Goodman had an entertaining monologue and the Ott players an amusing farce, The Gibson Girls. The Scotch Maids with their dancing and the Haydens in a tight rope act pleased everybody. This week the Eight Russians in their songs and dances are a big feature, their act being new and novel. The Garden City Trio of singers sing well. Al Haynes and Julia Redmond have a clever little play, The Girl and the Critic. Warner and Lakewood amuse with The Scarecrow and the Maid, Warner being an especially good dancer.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Ber- nard

A very clever producing couple is Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bernard, who are among the best known actors in the Middle West and on the Coast. They are now putting on acts in San Francisco at the Central Theatre, where the cleverness of their acting and the superior quality of their offerings are attracting very unusual attention. In fact, the word has gone out that the Bernards are giving something of a very superior article, and as a consequence the theatre is doing a great business. Ever since their engagement the capacious Central has been packed to suffocation on Saturdays and Sundays. Last Sunday, Manager Howell sold 5,500 admissions and the police stopped further sales. Mr. Bernard is a comedian with the real funny bone, and as a producer he has few equals. He has been trained in the old school that has brought out both talent and versatility. Mrs. Bernard plays the character parts, and is thoroughly experienced in the difficult art of "feeding" the comedians. She also takes a motherly interest in the girls and has an exceptionally pretty, attractive and well trained chorus. Prominent in the company are Jim Rowe, of the old and well known team of Lord and Rowe, and Mabel La Monaie, who plays soubrette parts and directs the dancing numbers. Mr. and Mrs. Bernard are continuously in receipt of offers that keep them busy the year around. For the past two years they have been producing over the Elite Circuit in the Middle West, but a strong effort is being made to keep them in California where their ability is acknowledged and admired.

Abe Cohen Returns From New York

Abe Cohen, manager of the American Theatre, who left two weeks ago for New York, in company with his partner, Ed Homan, returned Wednesday night, after completing arrangements to bring some great summer shows to his theatre.

Frank Sheridan Has a Court Engagement

The Rauer Collection Agency in its attempts to collect an old judgment against Actor Frank Sheridan of the Lillian Russell company, caused the thespian and his manager, Frederick Hinton, a lot of trouble and unpleasantness during the last day of their stay in San Francisco. A citation requiring that Hinton bring his books into court to show whether or no Sheridan had money coming to him, reachable under the California attachment laws, resulted in a temporary and partial victory for the defendant and his manager. Sheridan was allowed to leave town, making his train for Sacramento by a narrow margin. The matter is to be taken up again within a fortnight when the Russell company will be playing in a neighboring town, and when Messrs. Sheridan and Hinton will come into court a second time for further questioning. This court action was the result of a theatrical venture indulged in by Sheridan and two partners in Salt Lake some years ago.

The examination of Mr. Sheridan took place last Thursday in Judge Trout's court. George Frederick Hinton, manager of the Lillian Russell company, testified about advances made by the company to Mr. Sheridan, on his salary, and exhibited an I O U for $100 signed by Sheridan. Then he was asked if he personally had made any advances to Sheridan. Hinton replied "no." Sheridan, who is being pressed by the Rauer Collection Agency for $1,630 due under a judgment obtained in Salt Lake City more than 10 years ago, will leave the Lillian Russell company Tuesday week. He gave the manager a fortnight's notice after being examined by Judge Cabaniss last Tuesday. "Sheridan is stubborn," said Hinton, "and he is throwing up his position with the company rather than be forced to pay what he considers an unjust claim. His engagement would have run to June. As he has to pay the transportation of his successor from New York to this State, and as he must also pay his own and his wife's fare back East, he is sacrificing in all something like $3,000 in order to escape the judgment." Hinton testified that Sheridan has in the last few weeks been paying off a debt of $400 he owed the company, and that of his week's salary of $200 becoming due March 27, $100 has already been advanced to him. Attorney Meyer asked the court to order Hinton to pay the $100 into the hands of the sheriff of San Francisco, but this Judge Trout refused to do. The attachment issued to bring Hinton into court was discharged and he was allowed to hurry to San Luis Obispo, where the company appeared last Thursday evening.

Fischer Wants to Return to San Francisco

E. A. Fischer, who is probably as well known as any manager ever associated with San Francisco theatres, was in this city the early part of the week on a still hunt for a theatre. He and Sam Loverich, who controls the Novelty, had several talks, but owing to the fact that Billy Roche, the fight referee, acting for Jimmy Coffroth, the fight referee, had an option on the place, nothing came of the conferences. Roche intends establishing the Novelty as a vaudeville house. In the meantime, Mr. Fischer, who had made plans to build a fine new theatre in Los Angeles, was up against several conditions that were not to his way of thinking, and called all building ideas off. And it's a safe bet that this genial, popular and successful amusement purveyor will soon be back in San Francisco.

Personals

LILLIAN RUSSELL in Wildfire is doing phenomenal business on the Pacific Coast. Her season will not close until the middle of June. She will open in her new play, The Widow's Mite, by Edmund Day, in New York City the middle of September. Will Archie, who is playing the part of the stable boy, will be featured in Wildfire next season. Edmund Day is now wintering in Los Angeles.

JACK DODGE, the popular manager, who is inseparably connected with the amusement life of San Diego, made a flying trip to San Francisco early in the week, visited a host of friends for a few minutes each and then, a few minutes before catching the "Owl" for the South, signed Jim Post and his company for a season at the Garrick Theatre in his city, commencing May 3d.

DESPITE all his unquestioned managerial acumen, John Cort has laid down his hand for once, and admits that the problems of managing concert tours for Mme. Calve are beyond him—that is, the managing of the tours on a mutually satisfactory basis. Mme. Calve, in common with other "artists" in whom the "divine spark" illumines brilliantly, is a bit eccentric on some points, says the Napoleon of Northwestern theatrical matters, and "fussy" to a degree. Hence when it required a strategic trick to induce her fulfillment of an engagement at Havana, Mr. Cort, by his representatives, decided that the traditional "last straw" had been crowded on, and hence canceled the remaining concert dates for the season, also retiring from the management of the diva's business affairs. The lady returned to St. Augustine, Friday, gave a concert on her own responsibility, and is now planning an early fitting to Europe.

Van Ness Theatre

Seldom is it the good fortune of the play going public to witness a production at the hands of a company boasting such undeniably clever co-stars as Guy Standing and Theodore Roberts, who are respectively the Charley Steel and Joe Portugais of the current production of The Right of Way. The two men are each masters of their art, and have each devoted a world of study to the interpretations in hand. Mr. Roberts, a San Franciscan in his early youth, has ever been a close student of human nature. Also he spent much time with the Canadian-French habitants in special preparation for his present assignment. The combined result is a genuine achievement and a portraiture that is distinctly all it should be. Mr. Standing's part is one hardly less difficult, if less ostentatious, and requires a deftness of handling not easily attained. The combined work of the two men would make a less meritorious play than The Right of Way worth while. Their supporting company is hardly worthy of them in some respects, although none of the actors are without merit; it is not that, but merely they suffer much through enforced comparison with the stars. Probably the work of Evelyn Walls as the "red woman" is most worthy of special notice, while among the men, the work of the priest is the only thing that stands out noticeably. I think that the lighting effects in the second scene, that at the Corte D'Orion saloon, are the best I have ever seen. The shimmering waves of the river in the background, the shadowy flicker of the lamplights on the walls of the dingy little drinking room where the river drivers assemble to pass their spare hours, and the thousand and one little details that go to make the scene realistic together with the gradual and almost imperceptible changes of light make a scene hard to equal. Although the play is far from being as strong as Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, and standing by itself and without the novel's reputation and the supporting greatness of the presenting stars, might not be deemed as a really notable one, it is unquestionably one which grips the heart while it is being witnessed. And after analysis is not impotent. The production is well staged.

Valencia Theatre

The Halfbreed, Oliver Morosco and Harry Cottrell's melodrama, which received a rather unsatisfactory presentation at the Colonial some two years ago, is being given a worthy production at the hands of the Valencia stock this week. Mace Greenleaf, who created the title role when Mr. Morosco first produced the play at his Burbank Theatre in Los Angeles, recreates the educated half-Indian in the current bill, and plays it with all the finish and understanding which made his work in the first offering noteworthy. The "girl" of Blanche Stoddard and Ross Kennion of Thomas MacLarnie complete a good triumvirate of leading characters. There are a host of well-handled and well-colored character parts in the piece, many of which are deserving of high praise. As for the play itself, it is a melodrama, pure and simple, with a world of heart interest, many more or less tense situations, two murders (off stage), and one gunshot in the darkness to furnish the smell of powder without which no "honest and true" melodrama may be. Its story tells of the all-absorbing love of Delmar Spavinaw, a half-breed Indian, for Evelyn Huntington, a beautiful, wealthy and lovable white girl, whose father is a judge and cattle king in the Indian Territory. Of course, the girl doesn't return his love, being epris with a deserted plainsman hero, whose little son is her baby admirer. Seizing upon a meeting between the hero and a messenger from his recreant wife, who wants a divorce and has communicated with him for that purpose alone, the Indian inflames his lady's jealousies, succeeds in having the hero saddled with the murders (done by his band of Indians) and generally mixes things up for the edification of the public and to allow of a skillful disentanglement by the playwrights. Eventually the wrongs are righted, and the guilty one, defiant as to the white men and romantically steadfast as to his love for the beautiful white girl, slips the lariat with which the plainsmen are about to lynch him over his arm, jauntily buttons his natty coat, dons his gloves, bows to his erstwhile lady, and says, "Come on, gentlemen," himself leading the way to his execution. Mr. Greenleaf does himself decided credit in his handling of the more or less intricate part, and, while never holding the sympathies of his audience, yet commands their respect and admiration for the good work. Mr. MacLarnie's Kennion is more or less a feeder for the situations of the title role, yet he stamps the creation with individuality and carries it well, so well that better evidence is not needed as to his ability as an actor. Miss Stoddard has but meager opportunities for being anything but her very pleasing self in the part of Evelyn. Naturally, she is more than acceptable. Of the minor characters, Gerald Harcourt as "Fuge," lover of the innkeeper's daughter; Chas. Dow Clark as the romantic French host himself; William Wolbert as a drunken "doc"; Reginald Travers as the father of the heroine, and Lillian Andrews as "Surly Sue" are the best. The piece has been well staged and is worthily presented. Master Jesse Mendelson, as "little pal," his father's solace and idol, does some juvenile acting that does him rare credit. He reads his lines intelligently and, moreover, acts them as a natural boy would.

16th Street Theatre

This theatre still continues to play to large and appreciative audiences. This week's offering is a Southern comedy-drama, Shadows of Life, and gives all members of the cast a chance for some good acting. Mr. McGrath revels in the part of the love-lorn Major; his love-making and conflicts with his rival being irresistibly funny. Mr. Malan, as the hot-headed Southerner, gives his usual conscientious and finished performance. Florence Bell shows herself to be a versatile young actress and handles the leading role in a painstaking manner that shows a thorough study and understanding of the character. She has a better vehicle this week to display her talent and exhibits a decided improvement over her former work. Howard Nugent is up to his usual standard, and as the Southern Colonel dispensed with the traditional goatee, which was refreshing. Mr. Nugent is a decided acquisition to any company. Ivan Miller again this week devotes his time to harassing and making everybody miserable in his suave and delicately cruel way. As the disgraced son returned home for forgiveness, Eddie Hall was very satisfactory, but we would suggest that Mr. Hall wear habiliments more suggestive of a prodigal son than of a Spanish grandee. That petite little soubrette, Miss Murella, as Patty, kept her two ardent admirers continually at each other's throats and really seemed to enjoy it immensely. Ross Birchett as the Major's rival has a rattling good light comedy part and handles it well. Some splendid work is contributed by Miss Howard as the adventuress. This is the first week that Miss Howard has appeared without a character make-up, and she was a pleasant surprise. Miss Trelease shows herself to be an exceptionally clever toe dancer and wins hearty approval for her work. William Brady in a black-face turn keeps the audience in an uproar with his jokes and parodies. The staging of the production is all that could be wished for, and on the whole the production is an improvement over the preceding. Next week the romantic melodrama, Little Wild Flower, will be produced. A treat is promised.

Alcazar Theatre

For beauty of production and general effect, Blue Grass, the week's play, should be the best output of that capable dramatist, Paul Armstrong, who gave us The Heir to the Hurrah. But it does not live up to the cleverness of the production accorded it or to the splendid acting of the company. The play, while pleasing, just misses fire, and the two leading actors of the company, Bertram Lytell and Evelyn Vaughan, have comparatively little to do—hardly nothing, in fact, except to make love, and they give a clever exposition of that delightful pastime. The play is strong in character types, and these are cleverly handled. The honors of the performance unquestionably fall to Burt Wesner, who plays Old Folks, the family servitor, who lives solely for the honor of serving the Taylor family of Kentucky and their celebrated brood-mare, My Lady. Wrapped up in his old black soul is a fervid devotion to the once gallant racing mare, and his devotion is touching. Mr. Wesner has some of the longest speeches ever written for an actor, and in the fourth act, where he is found puttering around the stable, he delivers a long speech full of splendid sentiment, with a tremendous amount of real pathos. The audience, visibly effected, responded with enthusiastic applause. Howard Hickman, too, has the gift of eloquent pathos and is an exceptionally good all-around actor. His Colonel Taylor was a clever study, even if his Southern dialect was rather trying at times. John Maher contributed a delightful small part with perfect fidelity in make-up and Southern intonation. Christie McLean triumphantly carried out the comedy idea of a Southern mammy, who had some of the richest comedy chances ever given to a stage darkey. Louise Brownell and Adele Belgarde were pleasing and attractively gowned, and the balance of the company were effective. Edward Lada and his orchestra introduced several characteristic Southern airs and medleys that were greatly appreciated.

American Theatre

Bright, spicy, musical, pretty and alluring—that is about the list of adjectives necessary for a fair description of The Gingerbread Man, and if you don't believe it, go see. It's just a bit of Mother Goose done into a near-comic opera or musical comedy, whichever you choose; they're much alike nowadays. But nursery lore or not, it's an entertaining diversion they offer you, well presented by a company, which if it boasts but a couple of celebrities, has a host of clever people on its roster; both among the principals and the chorus. Fred J. Nice is more than nice in his eccentric interpretation of the title role; while his grotesque dancing is ample apology for his not overly strong singing voice. Rose Murray is a chic, winsome little Margery Daw, and her doll imitation quite captivates the house. The "happy thoughts" of Ross Snow in his Wondrous Wise, together with the wonderful contortions of his elongated and elastic nose are convulsing, while Adele Archer is so sweet and captivating a Jack Horner that one wonders why there should ever be the question of a doubt with Mazie Bon Bon as portrayed by May Bouton, as to her affection for him. Carrick Major as the evil dealer in black art, contributes what is musically one of the best things in the piece, My Queen of Dreams. Possessing a strong, melodious voice, his handling of the number elicits repeated encores. Maurice Holden is a very amusing Good Fairy. The musical hits of the play include Mazie, The Mythical Land of Bon Bon, Moon, Moon, Moon, The Original John Dough, and Nursery Rhymes, as well as several very well handled and meritorious ensemble numbers.

Princess Theatre

This is the second week of The Sultan of Sulu, in the name part of which Frank Moulan scores as heavily as he did when he created the part. The present show is a wonderful one for a stock house, and as a matter of fact, it would be difficult for a road company to equal this performance, for few, if any, road organizations ever carried such a high-class company or ever exhibited such a fine handsome singing chorus. Mr. Moulan and his fellow-workers—Fred Mace, Budd Ross, J. F. Stevens, Helen Darling and May Boley—are a conscientious and hard-working aggregation, and their splendid ability is enthusiastically received nightly.

Henry Miller Has New Play Ready

The Family, Robert H. Davis' new play, is being prepared for a New York presentation by Henry Miller's forces. There are but seven characters in the piece, the most important of which is to be assumed by William Burgess, until recently with the Potter forces in The Girl from Rector's. Mr. Burgess is succeeded in The Girl by W. J. Ferguson.

Vaudeville

The Orpheum

While it wouldn't be fair to say that the Orpheum management has taken to "girl shows," yet there are an even dozen pretty ones, some even entitled to the appellation "beautiful," scattered 'round through the olio provided this week—and a very excellent olio it is, too. There's a pretty girl who nearly sings in the opening number of the bill; another who does marvelous feats of strength in the second; a clever, very pretty and vivacious soubrette-ingenue who stars in the fourth number; an octette of English (?) lassies who cavort and carol through three or four selections as the ninth allotment, and a woman whose abilities on the tight wire are ably seconded by her pleasing personality, for the closing number. Now maybe that isn't a preponderance of evidence as to the twelve section bill being a "girl show," and then again, maybe it is; suit yourself. Anyhow, it's a good show, full of laughs, catchy music for the most part well sung, and replete with feats of strength and agility to excite your admiration. What more should you want? Violet Black and her players in The Subway, a comedy sketch, is given the feature position. As for the sketch, it holds enough of interest, possibility and humor to pardon the very apparent dramatic license which obtains to make a fifteen minute interlude in the traffic of a subway station during which time there isn't a single train passes, and only five people are seen in the depot. Maybe the trains were prevented from keeping their usual "minute headway" by a blockade somewhere, and then again, maybe the audience is so interested in the comedy that they pass unseen and unheard. Those are the only hypotheses I can imagine for an explanation of the unusuality. The sketch is a breezy if somewhat improbable little affair, but through the good work of Miss Black and her company of three men, Messrs. Cameron Clemons, Eugene Keith, Herbert Morris and E. W. Brown, the audience is admirably entertained. The Blessings present a startling ten minutes—startling because of the amazing feats of strength accomplished by Madame Blessing, the ease with which she accomplishes them, and the equally difficult balancing stunts of her smaller, if better (?) half. Mme. Blessing is a beautiful woman of the Junoesque type, whose muscular development is the more remarkable since it does not interfere with her symmetry. Silbon's novelty circus serves to introduce a quartet of educated cats, who do tricks and stunts of unbelievable cleverness; a love of a collie dog, who displays almost human intelligence, and a Shetland pony, whose accomplishments are diverse and varied. The animals are exhibited by a man who uses comedy and a woman who can lay claim to recognition beyond her control over the animals by her child's dress and real bare legs. The Eight Palace Girls and James Clemons repeat their success of last week; Ray L. Royce pleases with his impersonations; the Four Poncherrys offer a cleverish wire-walking exhibition, and James McDonald sings to the picturesque accompaniment of Valerie Huntington's acting and dancing. One of the best things on the bill is the number of James Cullen, "The Man from the West," with his clever parodies, adroit humorisms and inimitable "Thank you." Good motion pictures complete the bill.

Pantages-Empire

Manager Weinstock has the banner attraction of the year in the personage of the Champion of Champions—John L. Sullivan—who, rotund of girth and as jolly as ever, entertains his many admirers with several amusing anecdotes of his long career, before his boxing bout with his old antagonist, Jake Kilrain. Those expecting to see a couple of decrepit old men make a feeble attempt at the boxing game were accorded a great surprise instead to see a couple of hale and hearty old men, with hair plentifully sprinkled with white, put up as lively a boxing bout as the average normal being could well wish for, and they do not deliver gentle love taps either, as I learned upon going behind the scenes, where I found Kilrain with a lacerated ear. Upon my remarking it, he said: "That will be healed by morning, and that's a sign of plenty of good, healthy blood in the system, and if any one thinks we are ready to take the count they are badly mistaken, as John and I both feel as well as we did twenty years ago." Hats off to these two old war horses! They are still in the ring of life's vicissitudes for many years to come if an appearance of good health counts for anything. The balance of the bill is composed of several clever turns. Fortune Brothers entertain with some very amusing acrobatic stunts, and some clever and entertaining musical numbers are introduced by the Stoddards. Jack Atkins, the man of many travels, has several new parodies which capture the audience. One of the best little acts seen for some time is to be found in According to the Code, by Harry Cottrell, and presented by Dave Williams and company. It is brim full of good comedy without being a burlesque; good, legitimate and clever acting predominates. Mr. Williams has to be seen to be appreciated and has surrounded himself with clever support. Gilbert and Katen, Hebrew entertainers, also deliver the goods and have an inexhaustible fund of new and up-to-date parodies. Interesting moving pictures as usual complete one of the best programs seen in some time.

The Wigwam

Manager Harris of this popular house has a bill this week that is hard to beat. Chefalo and Capretta in their Garden of Mystery have several new features to mystify the audience with. The College Boys with the Dancing Feet do some exceedingly clever and intricate steps in the dancing line. The Miller Musical Four give masterful selections upon numerous instruments and well merit the applause they receive. The Country Choir prove themselves to be masters of harmony to the degree of almost perfection. A scourging of the methods of rich corporations is to be found in the sketch, The Second Story Man, as it is presented by Chris Lynton and company in a very creditable manner. The comedy of the evening is supplied by Art Adair, who is a musician of no mean calibre and has a fund of funny stories that keeps the house convulsed. The big sensation of the evening is supplied by Ralph Johnson, who has something distinctly different to offer in trick bicycle riding. His stair climbing stunt in itself is clever, but the leap from the top of the flight to a narrow platform several feet below is a thriller. Fred Sanderson's rich baritone is heard to advantage with the illustrated songs. Several reels of interesting motion pictures complete an exceptionally good program.

The National

The roster of this popular house this week leaves nothing to be desired by the most fastidious lover of vaudeville. The Australian Tree Fellers are the headliners for this week and the novelty of their act justly entitles them to the fact. Their lightning like demolition of logs with saw and axe and the accuracy with which they hurl their small hand axes proclaim them to be masters of their art (if I may use the term—see vaudeville note). Ma-reena, Nevorra and Mareena are gymnasts in a class by themselves with a number of new and difficult stunts introduced in the act. Adolph Zink handles a number of costume changes in a clever manner. Moving pictures of an amusing nature, depicting him making the changes is an interesting feature of the act. Ray W. Snow, as a monologist, has his own inimitable way of entertaining an audience. You like him, you can't help it. As a juggler John Le Claire wins generous approval for the neatness of his work. Elise Schuyler make good with a number of songs, such as I'll Marry Him to Make a Home for Mother. The Franklin Ardell company appear in a farce entitled Cat-astrophe, with the emphasis on the cat. It is funny to the point of absurdity, but you have to laugh. It is a vehicle for good comedy work and Mr. Ardell is given excellent support by Gladys Brockwell. Motion pictures of an interesting nature complete a program that is unusually satisfying.

Vaudeville Notes

Gilbert and Katen, the Hebrew entertainers, will book next season with William Morris.

John L. Sullivan will be featured by John Cort during the Fair in Seattle, opening there about June first up to the close of the Exposition. He will be accompanied by his sparring partner, Jake Kilrain.

Bert Stoddard of The Stoddards at the Pantages-Empire this week, is the original Stoddard of Stoddard and Wilson—The Rat Catchers—which played here about three years ago. The act was dissolved and last presented at Tony Pastor's house, Fourteenth Street, New York, January 20, 1908. The original manuscript of the act is now in the possession of Fred Wilson, and is not to be used except by the originals.

While Gilbert and Katen, playing the Empire this week, were doing their turn one evening, Jake Kilrain standing in the wings started to kid Katen, who becoming exasperated ran off the stage and attacked Kilrain. There was a lively set to, and if Sullivan hadn't appeared there is no telling what may have happened. Katen says he will get him yet. Kilrain says, "Pooh, pooh." I do not vouch for the veracity of this statement, but merely repeat it from reliable authority.

While standing too close to a cage of tigers at the winter quarters of a circus, on March 13th, in Portland, Mrs. Vernon, who was appearing at a local theatre in an act with her husband, a ventriloquist, was clawed by one of the big cats, and she is now at the Good Samaritan Hospital. Her face is terribly lacerated from the claws of the Royal Bengal tiger, and the woman had to be placed on the operating table while many stitches were taken.

Juliette Chandler has joined Wayne and Adams in vaudeville.

W. H. Weber, who will be remembered as the manager of The Haymarket before the fire and after that calamity, built The Lyceum Theatre at Twenty-ninth and Mission Streets and ran it for a while as a combination stock house, with an occasional short season of vaudeville, died at his rooms above the theatre, Tuesday morning of last week. He was suddenly seized with neuralgia of the heart and died at 1 o'clock Wednesday morning. Mr. Weber had for a year past been running the Lyceum as a picture house, and now his wife, who was left with practically nothing but the lease of the theatre, has taken up the work and is carrying on the theatre. Mr. and Mrs. Weber were particularly happy in their married life, and the sudden death of the husband has been a terrible shock to the devoted wife. A baby boy, two years old, is left with the mother.

Nance O'Neil appeared in vaudeville, March 22d, at Atlantic City, which will be followed by a week at Keith's, Boston. She then plays fifteen weeks over the Orpheum circuit. Miss O'Neil will appear in a playlet called $1,000 Reward, supported by William Bonelli, David Miles and Paul Scott.

Howard Hall will play the tabloid version of The Man Who Dared in the London music halls, where he has been engaged for twenty weeks.

J. Bernard Dyllin is in Los Angeles

this week at the Empire Theatre. The Horseshoe song was called for after his eighth song. Mr. Dyllin has been singing this song since 1878, and people seem never to forget it or grow tired of it. A song is lucky now to last a season.

Mrs. George Goldsmith, who is better known by her stage name, Lillian Burkhardt, left, March 25th, for a four weeks' engagement at leading vaudeville houses in Denver, Seattle, Portland and San Francisco.

L. Wolfe Gilbert, of Gilbert and Katen, has completed a new song hit for Mrs. Stoddard of The Stoddards, for which he has received the remuneration of $200 in honest-to-goodness money.

Franklin Ardell, who is presenting his sketch, Cat-astrophe, at the National this week, had a dark jest perpetrated upon him while playing in Vallejo last week. He received a number of telephone calls and scented missives during his engagement and eventually made an appointment with his admirer, after the performance and took her to a cafe for some refreshments, where he importuned her to remove her heavy veil, which she steadfastly refused to do. (Said he wouldn't like her if she did.) Finally he threatened to leave if she didn't give him a glimpse of her fair features. She raised the veil. "Shades of darkness! A coon." He left. His friends wear a pleasant smile when he meets them, but say nothing.

Lightning Harper, cartoonist, will be one of the attractions at the National Theatre next week, and display his ability as a sketch artist. Mr. Harper is connected with one of the largest newspaper syndicates in America.

Franklyn Ardell, formerly in support of Eddie Foy and Marie Cahill, goes East from here to play Keith & Proctor's time in his sketch, Cat-astrophe, written for him by Alice Davenport, sister of Fanny Davenport, deceased.

Mr. Katen, of Gilbert and Katen, at the Empire this week, is an ardent admirer of the "Eternal Feminine," and also of the great American national game—draw (not a gun) poker. Ardell says hello.

James Marrion, with the Australian Tree Fellers at the National Theatre, this week, holds the championship of the world, having defeated Hugh McHugh, the Australian champion and breaking the world's record. Time, one minute, seventeen seconds; size of log, 19 inches in diameter. Manager Le Breque also has with the act, Mr. Tom Leggett, the lightweight champion, and Mr. Henry Dubois, the middleweight champion.

Burns-Johnston Fight Pictures Are Being Pirated

The great success that naturally is attending the exhibition of the Burns-Johnson fight pictures has lead the Harback Film Company of Seattle to offer a series of pictures which are advertised as the real pictures, but which are rank counterfeits. Col. Billy Thompson, who represents Hugh D. McIntosh, the Australian promoter, who owns the pictures, is on the trail of all who offer these pictures as the real thing, and something will be doing if anybody attempts to steal or infringe on his rights. As per an announcement on our back page, Col. Thompson warns all managers against playing these bogus pictures. He has instructed his attorneys, J. M. and H. L. Rothchild of this city, to go to any length to protect his rights. The real Burns-Johnson pictures have been protected by copyright and any offense committed under the copyright laws will be vigorously prosecuted.

New Nickelodeon Ordinance

The amended nickelodeon ordinance, making 400 the maximum seating capacity, was passed to print by the Board of Supervisors Tuesday. Murphy also introduced a measure requiring the owners of moving picture shows to secure permits from the police commissioners before operating such places of amusement, and providing a fine of $500 with maximum sentence of six months in jail for any proprietor whose house should exhibit any picture portraying lewd, lascivious or criminal acts. This measure will be reviewed by the police committee before action by the board. The provision setting forth the character of pictures which may not be exhibited follows:

It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to display or to cause or permit to be displayed at any moving picture exhibition or at any entertainment at which moving pictures are exhibited any picture, illustration or delineation of any nude human figure or of any other matter or thing of an obscene, indecent or immoral nature or offensive to the moral sense; or any picture, illustration or delineation of any matter, murder, suicide, robbery, holdup, shooting, stabbing, assault, clubbing or beating of any human being, or the commission of any crime or any lewd, lascivious or criminal act.

It is reported that Virginia Brissac is to succeed Warda Howard as leading woman with George Howard at the Lyric Theatre in Vancouver.

Billy Mong Is Playing The Clay Baker in Portland to Pleased Audiences at the Lyric

Portland, Ore., March 22.—Heilig Theatre (Cal. Heilig, mgr.; William Pangle, resident mgr.): The concert given by Lheviny last week was well attended. This was the last offering of the Misses Steers and Coman. The latter part of last week brought us Florence Gear in Marrying Mary, and he it said to her credit that she gave us a high class performance of the part that we had previously seen Marie Cahill in. She is well fitted to play the part of Mary, and her support was good, although it could not compare in any way with that Miss Cahill had when she presented the play in this city. Last night we had Clyde Fitch's latest success, Girls, and without a doubt it is one of the most pleasing plays that has come this way for quite a while. Fitch is to be thanked in giving to us such a delightful entertainment. The play brought back to us Ethel Terry, who was formerly a member of the Baker Stock Company, and as one of the girls she readily showed her Portland admirers that she has well advanced in her chosen profession. Bessie Toner and Suzanne Jackson complete the men-haters, and they were equal to all demands. The Right of Way comes April 1st. Bungalow Theatre (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.): Again the stock company takes a dip into comedy, and offer George Arliss' There and Back for their bill. It is the first time it has ever been done here. It is a well written farce, and although the first act is a trifle talky, the play goes at a whirlwind speed in the last two acts. Sydney Ayers and William Dills are found playing the principal comedy roles and give good accounts of themselves, and William Gleason in a Scotch role plays the same as if it were written around him. Louise Kent and Mina Gleason have the principal roles of the ladies, and both are well cast and meet all demands. The play is produced up to the usual high standard we are sure to find at this theatre. Next week, Leah Kleschna. Baker Theatre (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, business mgr.): That odd fellow, Harry Beresford, is back again after a long absence. He opened at this theatre Sunday afternoon in his new vehicle, Who's Your Friend, and truly he has got a laughter-maker in it in the full meaning of the word laugh. It is a bright, natural, clean comedy and calls for high dramatic art on the part of the star, and, of course, it is not necessary for me to state to those who have ever seen Beresford that he is adequate. His support is fairly good and serve as a good feeder to the star. This house is dark next week. Orpheum Theatre (J. E. Ericson, mgr.): The past week the Orpheum has kept up its reputation in the vaudeville line, and no complaint can be registered by its patrons for lack of good entertainment. Tom Nawn, in the playlet, Pat and the Genii, was the headliner, and it is one of the most entertaining playlets produced at this house since its opening. The Four Casting Dubars have a high-class acrobatic act, and the musical turn of the Eight Melanis was of high order. The other acts were entertaining in every respect. Commencing tonight: Mlle. Zélie De Lussan is the feature act. The others on the bill are S. Miller Kent & Co., Will Rogers, Jolly Violletta; Caron and Farnum, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Clark, Surxall and Razall. Lyric Theatre (Keating & Flood, mgrs.): This week's bill is The Clay Baker, in which William Mong is starred, and is supported by the stock company. Mong was playing heavy at the Bungalow, and his work in the lead at this house is worthy of commendation. The stock company gave him good support, especially Herbert Ashton, Ralph Belmont, Rupert Drum and Lillian Branscomb and Mrs. Lillian Griffiths. Grand Theatre (J. E. Erricson, mgr.): Marco Twins are the headline act, and the balance of the bill includes Alice Davenport & Co., Joe Watson, Hetty Erma, Elmer Tenley, the operetta, The Yankee Tar, and Harry McDuffee. Pantages has Marisoffs Eight Russians in singing and dancing for their feature act, and Rawson and June as a specially added act. A. W. W.

Virginia Thornton and Russell & Drew's Melodramatic Stock Pleasing Seattle

Seattle, March 22.—The Moore Theatre: The Girl Question made a hit at the opening performance last night, packing the house. It is a breezy, snappy performance, and Paul Nicholson, who assumes the burden of the comedy, bears it easily. The entire ensemble were good to look at, with plenty of changes in costumes and plenty of song hits. Grand Opera House: Florence Gear in Marrying Mary proved a big merrymaker at the opening performance last night. The play still retains the smart air for which Marie Cahill made it famous, and Miss Gear certainly fills the bill very cleverly. She has three solo numbers, which are repeatedly recalled. The supporting company is a very creditable one to the star and manager. Seattle Theatre: The Russell and Drew Stock Company are this week presenting From Tramp to Millionaire. There is the usual assignment of melodramatic parts to the people who know how to inspire sympathy for the heroine and hero. Miss Thornton is the heroine whom Mr. Travers, the hero, rescues and marries. Si Condit is the inventor, and the villainy is distributed among Messrs. Thorne and Sutherland and Miss Davis, all of whom were cordially disliked. Two enormous houses yesterday testified to the drawing tendencies. Lois Theatre: Two delighted audiences yesterday saw the Pantages Stock Company in Tennessee's Pardon, and as produced by them becomes a play of the highest class. Miss May took the part of Tennessee Kent in a sweet, lovable manner, and both her humorous and pathetic scenes were handled in an artistic manner. Mr. Frawley, in the part of Caleb Swan, has a part of which he makes much. Mr. Abram as Asa Brice is seen in one of the best things he has done at the Lois and is bound to make many warm friends during the week's run. Mr. Kimball, who plays the part of champion liar, certainly carries off the honors, and his every appearance is a signal for laughter. The balance of the company are all up in their respective parts and assist to give a very finished performance.

E. MORGENSTERN.

Jessie Shirley Will Give Up Stock in Spokane

Beginning September 1 the Auditorium Theatre at Spokane will pass to the Northwestern Theatrical Association and be under their direction. The policy of the house will be to play the first-class combinations, and the dollar shows are to be played at the Spokane Theatre, the present home of all of the bookings of the Northwestern in the Eastern Washington metropolis. The change means the discontinuing of the stock company engagement of the Jessie Shirley company. Jessie Shirley and her company have been in Spokane nearly five years, and of late the stock has not been doing as well as formerly. Too many of the same faces, year after year, and the natural let down of interest that comes periodically to stock, explain why the attendance had fallen off, although the members of the company numbered many friends in Spokane.

Farrar-Scotti Engagement Rumored

New York, March 24.—Musical, social and theatrical circles are gossiping with renewed interest about the tale of the industrious Dame Rumor to the effect that Geraldine Farrar and Antonio Scotti are to be wed. Although they are constantly seen together, and it is an open secret that if indeed there be no engagement, it is not Sig. Scotti's fault, yet no confirmation can be obtained from the parties of the story. On the contrary, the gentleman says he would be only too happy and proud to be allowed the privilege of making such an announcement, were it true. Miss Farrar remains silent upon the subject.

Rob Roy Tells All The Recent New York Theatrical News

NEW YORK, March 21.—It may be true that New York likes plenty of lightness and gayety, and even frivolity, in its theatrical bills of fare—indeed, it is true—but it likes also such graver, sterner fare as only Shakespeare can provide. Witness the large audience which greeted Robert Mantell's interpretation of Macbeth last week in the New Amsterdam Theatre. Surely there is no frivolity in that great tragedy, yet no comedy success of the winter has brought out more genuinely hearty applause than that received by the star at the end of every act and scene in which he appeared. Mr. Mantell was at his best, and that must be said with equal truth of Marie Booth Russell, the Lady Macbeth, especially when she planted the seed of murder in her husband's heart and in the sleep walking scene. Alfred Hastings as Duncan, Ethelbert Hales as Banquo and Fritz Leiber as Macduff—the latter winning a curtain call—shared in the honors of an excellent production, which all in the cast helped to make an undoubted success. * * * The Faith Healer, Henry Miller's new play, was produced for the first time last week in St. Louis. It is by William Vaughn Moody, author of The Great Divide. The locale is rural Missouri, and Ulrich Michaels (Mr. Miller), the son of a missionary to the Indians, who has lived long in New Mexico, wanders into the humble home of the Beelers, in a Missouri hamlet, and falls in love with Rhoda Williams, a niece of Mrs. Beeler. The play has the merit of freshness, originality, seriousness, honesty, sincerity, good writing and competent acting. * * * Thomas W. Ross appeared last week in the title role of The Fortune Hunter, an American play, by Winchell Smith, which was produced in the Apollo Theatre, Atlantic City, for the first time on any stage. George M. Cohan, one of the managers, was present and assisted in directing it. The play deals with a man who sets out to find a fortune and wins a banker's daughter, but falls in love with another girl and marries her and decides to make the fortune. Mr. Ross was applauded generously. Others who shared in the honors of the night were Mary Ryan and Messrs. Forest Robinson and Hall Hamilton. * * * If you went to Wallack's Theatre last week your attention was arrested in the lobby by this device: "Women are voting in four States in the West now. Why are you not voting in New York?" This banner was hung, or worn apron fashion, by a suffragette. Acting as a sort of bodyguard were three others, all of the gentler sex, who wore badges. That made it very obvious for mere man that he was in for it. And he was, for when he got into the theatre his gaze was met by a yellow suffragette banner, which hung from the railing of the first balcony. It was the first performance here of Elizabeth Robb's play, Votes for Women, that stirred them up over in London or five months. And you may be sure that it was a special audience that assembled to see it. There was a wholesale absence of the blasé first nighter and a liberal sprinkling of what are known as "highbrows."

Women with spectacles were in numbers, men of serious mien and also men with undisguised expressions of curiosity. The play is about a girl who is betrayed by a man, who later rises to political power in England. She becomes an ardent worker for the cause of woman, and when in after years they meet and he wishes to make atonement she shows that he can wipe out his debt to womankind by aiding the cause of woman. All the members of the company were members of the Actors' Society of America. Miss Shaw, finished actress, was Vida Levering, the worker for woman's rights, and Martin Alsop was the English politician, Kathryn Browne acted the part of his betrothed. Clare Weldon, as one of the suffrage speakers, was excellent. The others all strove earnestly for the cause—or for the play. And the mob scene of the suffragettes, in Trafalgar Square, was impressive. To sum it up, it is one of those plays that are interesting to those who are interested in it. * * * Clyde Fitch's original offering, The Bachelor, at Maxine Elliott's Theatre last week proved to be a light comedy in three acts, interwoven with a pretty love story between a confirmed bachelor and his stenographer. Charles Cherry was the bachelor and Ruth Maycliffe the stenographer. The play is short, but a most delightful play. The Bachelor was well received. * * * To commemorate the one hundredth performance of Wilton Lackaye in Cleveland Moffett's play, The Battle, at the Savoy, souvenirs were distributed last week. They were booklets bearing the title Laconigrams. The laconigrams were collected by Mr. Lackaye. * * * The Beauty Spot, the new De Koven-Herbert musical comedy, had its first public performance last week at the Belasco Theatre, Washington. Following a week at Washington the play will be seen at Baltimore and Philadelphia, after which it will come to the Herald Square Theatre. In the cast are Jefferson De Angelis and Marguerite Clarke. * * * The Head of the House, a new comedy of politics and domestic life, by Edward W. Townsend and Frank Ward O'Malley, had its first metropolitan production in the Grand Opera House, Chicago, last week, with Ada Lewis of California in a distinctive stellar role. If almost continuous laughter when Miss Lewis was on the stage is a sign of approval of her work, she lived up to her reputation. The sidelights on district politics and the part a clever housemaid can play in the game were laughably interesting. The company supporting Miss Lewis acquitted itself well. George C. Tyler, managing director for Liebler & Co., and Mr. O'Malley watched the production anxiously and seemed pleased. Others present were Viola Allen and Kyrle Bellew. The engagement here is for three weeks. * * * Robert Hilliard will appear in Potter Emerson Browne's new play, A Fool There Was, in the Liberty Theatre on March 29. The story deals with New York of today. In the supporting cast will be William Courtleigh, S. K. Walker, George Clare, Nanette Comstock, Emily Wurster and Katharine Kaelred, the latter an Australian actress. * * * The Potency of Suggestion will be the subject of Augustus Thomas' address at the graduation exercises of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in the Empire Theatre next Tuesday afternoon. * * * Vesta Tilley will return to New York to sing in vaudeville, and is to leave England on March 26. Percy G. Williams, who has engaged her, has a publicity agent who asserts that she is to receive $3,000 a week and a proportionate rate for each encore, which he figures will be about £10 sterling. SEVERAL new and important people will be added to the personnel of the Valencia stock company for some of the big productions which will follow Peter Pan. A new leading man, direct from one of the season's successes on Broadway, will make his first appearance in this city April 26, and Albert Brown, who played the leading part in Paid in Full when Walter's drama was presented at the Van Ness recently, will be another of the additions. Josephine Brown, who won the first prize in the world's beauty contest conducted by New York and London papers, and who is as clever as she is beautiful, will also appear soon after Easter.

MARY'S LAMB

You have all seen Carle's plays, but without him. This time you will see Carle HIMSELF, and in his best Musical Comedy.

Mr. Carle is the author of the following musical plays:

"THE TENDERFOOT," "THE MAYOR OF TOKIO," "THE MAID AND THE MUMMY," "THE SPRING CHICKEN," "MARY'S LAMB," "THE HURDY GURDY GIRL," and "THE BOY AND THE GIRL."

Mr. Waldemar Young, of the Chronicle, heard Mary's Lamb bleat in New York last summer. He writes: "And there is Richard Carle in 'Mary's Lamb,' which you will find to be the funniest musical show of the season. Carle, I think, is the best of the comedians in musical work."

Ancient Laws Relating To Stage Censorship

In view of the recent controversy in New York whether or not a play censor is needed, it may be interesting to those who have followed the discussion which was started by Archbishop Farley, to note the strange laws that have been enacted for the purification of the stage. The first attempt in England to establish a censorship was made in the reign of Henry VIII. By an act it was criminal to play in an interlude contrary to the orthodox faith, declared or to be declared by that monarch. In the reign of Edward V, in 1549, an act was passed making it criminal to use profanity on the stage. In the first year of Queen Elizabeth's reign it was made an offense punishable by a fine of one hundred marks to speak anything in the derogation, depraving or despising of the Book of Common Prayer in plays. In 1605 an act was passed making it an offense punishable by a fine of £10 to jestingly or profanely speak or use certain sacred names in any stage play. Censorship of plays was exercised in republican Rome. From 1545 to 1624 the Master of the Revels in England was the dramatic censor. From that time on the supervision was exercised by the Lord Chamberlain.

Miss O'Neil in Vaudeville

Makes Her Debut in Keith & Proctor's 125th Street Theatre in
$1,000 Reward

Miss Nance O'Neil made her vaudeville debut in New York last week in Messrs. Keith & Proctor's 125th Street Theatre in a one-act playlet by De Witt Kaplan, entitled One Thousand Dollars Reward. The scene is laid in Arizona, and the plot hinges around the robbery of an express train. The audience took kindly to the little play, and gave Miss O'Neil a hearty welcome. The leading male role was well played by William Bonelli.

Pretty Peggy, Frances Neva Aymer's love story of Peg Woffington and David Garrick, will follow The Halfbreed at the Valencia Theatre.

A good benefit for Mrs. Lester Wallick, with Blanche Bates, Mrs. Leslie Carter, Wilton Lackaye, Eleanor Robson, William Faversham, Anna Held and many others just as famous in the bill, was given week before last in New York.

The rumpus stirred up in Los Angeles by fighting the war against the stage and cinema, by a strong defense of the stage by Playwright Broadhurst, has received fresh impetus most unexpectedly from the church itself. Rev. Edward Adams Cantrell has written the following open letter to Dr. Charles L. Davis, who started the con-oppose card playing and dancing and de-stage. Permit me to say that I am one of a growing number of people in the world who are inclined to think that the play-and recreation of the people is as importpulpit as by quarantining the stage. Both of these institutions are with us and both and rationalized, can do a great work in the that it held in the old days of Greek civvicious elements connected with the stage today no one can deny. But can you deny vicious also? Or can you claim for the or virtue as compared with the dramatist and actor? Such claim would be an assumption unwarranted by facts. As to the sermon, I believe, and am ready to defend the proposition, that the modern drama not only comprehends more of truth and life, but exalts a higher standard of morality than does the modern orthodox sermon. Will you deny the proposition? Will you do it in the open—outside the protection of your pulpit? Will you meet the issue? Yours for the exaltation of life

trell.

Cleveland, O., March 20.—A mass of falling plaster, and a frightened, foolish and false cry of "Fire" were the overture to a serious panic at the Majestic Theatre last night, in which a score of women and children were crushed, smothered and generally injured, many people were trampled on and at least six people were more or less seriously injured. The accident occurred between the second and third acts. Dampness caused by a leaky roof caused a patch of plaster possibly three feet square to become loosened from the ceiling. It fell to the parquet, mostly, hitting several of the audience and cutting one man's head. A portion of the debris, followed by its cloud of dust, struck the gallery and a frightened boy cried "Fire!" The panic ensued. Coolness and prompt action by the house attaches prevented what at its inception bade fair to become one of the worst theatre panics in years.

Guy Standing, who played in The Right of Way at the Van Ness last week, is one of the most enthusiastic autoists in America. He recently returned from an automobile trip through Europe. He toured England, France and Germany. He is enthusiastic over the possibilities of a motor car, and enjoyed his vacation at a most nominal cost. According to Mr. Standing, the expense of shipping an American car to Europe is not excessive. He asserts it is more economical to take Reports float down from Sacramento about the internal dissensions in the Del Lawrence Company. A final split between Lawrence and Sandusky would not surprise people on the inside.

CLOTHIER TO THE PROFESSION

No. 57 Powell Street
Formerly Van Ness and Eddy

A meeting of German actors and actresses which began yesterday, shortly before midnight, did not terminate until noon today, after proceedings of an exciting character. The meeting was convened to protest against new rules and regulations introduced by the Association of Theatrical Managers for the guidance and control of actors and actresses engaged at their theatres. These regulations have given rise to great resentment among the members of the profession, who consider their interests are seriously injured. Many angry speeches were delivered, in which theatrical managers were vigorously denounced as tyrants, slave drivers, blood suckers and thieves. Herr Rickelt, a prominent Berlin actor, who is the leader of the movement, declared that many agreements are concluded between the theatrical managers and members of the theatrical profession which are absolutely immoral, owing to the extent to which the actors and actresses are exploited. Speeches were also delivered by six members of the Reichstag, who assured the members of the profession that their aims and ambitions found sympathy in parliamentary circles. The Association of Theatrical Managers tonight issued a statement repudiating the attacks made on them by the actors and actresses.

By a special arrangement with Russell & Drew, sublessees of the Seattle Theatre, Seattle, that house will be released by them for the remaining year of their agreement with the Northwestern Theatrical Association, and on September 1 a new scheme of entertainment will be provided, the house passing to San Francisco parties, who will rename it the Tivoli and install a permanent light opera company in the present home of melodrama. Before the new management assumes control of the Seattle Theatre, the new Majestic Theatre, now building for Russell & Drew, will have been completed and they will have transferred the bulk of their interests to Westlake boulevard, Fifth avenue and Pine street.

The latest gossip is that John P. Danne will play Mary Marble, Little Chip and a famous company at Los Angeles this summer. Which house? The Majestic or the Auditorium?

The Retort Poetical

Otis Skinner, recently taken to task for his interpretation of Philippe Bridau in The Honor of the Family—the play made from Balzac's novel—sent the following not only retort courteous, but poetical, to his critics. It is Mr. Skinner's rhythmic impression of what he considers Philippe Bridau should be upon the stage, disdaining any arguments as to what Philippe Bridau is like in the pages of Balzac. The conclusion one arrives at from reading both sides of the controversy, is not whether Mr. Skinner or his critic is right—not whether Bridau is a friend of D'Artagnan, as the actor makes him, or a Bill Sykes, as the critic would have him—but whether there might not be more poets if there were more critics in the world. At any rate, indignation made these verses by Mr. Skinner:

BALLADE OF MONSIEUR BRIDAU
Bridau! I view you askance!
You are too bad I declare,
With your prancing blade and free lance,
Your wash-buckler, devil-may-care,
Ready to fight or to swear,
To drink or to dice or to dance,
To behave over there,
These are the manners of France.
Less me! One shrinks from your glance,
You make at your impudent stare,
Then with a threat you advance,
Wagging in with an air,
Will your good uncle's affair,
Called for such treatment perchance,
And Flora had need of a scare,
These are the manners of France.
Less! I admit, as you prance,
Solent, bold, debonair,
Who you are of romance,
Eager to do and to dare,
Courage you have and to spare,
Handshakes, too, to entrance,
To bully, cajole, or ensnare,
These are the manners of France.
ENVOY
Princess, I bid you beware!
Ladies have never a chance,
You should go over there,
These are the manners of France.

Spotlights

Leota Howard and the Curtiss Comedy Company gave one of the most finished and artistic performances ever seen in this city at the Binar Theatre last night. In spite of the disagreeable weather, a good sized audience enjoyed a performance that has never been equalled at the prices. The Workman proved to be a highly interesting drama furnishing much food for thought. Leota Howard's first entrance as Ethelrompton was a signal for an outburst of applause from her many friends who presented her with an enormous bouquet of roses as a token of their appreciation of her return. Her work is more finished and effective than ever. In her strong scenes she was especially good. In her support Melville Mayo did some excellent work and by his finished rendition of the difficult role of Percy Ruskin established himself with critical observers as an actor of high class. Francis Wilkerson, another new member of the company, was equally pleasing. Eva McKinzie as Polly gave a quaint conception of the little country girl, and Ella Hazlett was simply great as Cinders. S. M. Curtiss gave a finished performance of The Workman, and Robt. McKinzie as King, the leader of the strikers, did the best work of his engagement.—Baker City Exchange.

The Curtiss Comedy Company, now playing Baker City, Oregon, is composed of Leota Howard, Melvin Mayo, Chic Kehoe, Harold Harris, S. M. Curtiss, George Routh, Harry Mendall, Ray Penington, Tom Matott, Sallie Drummond, Lillian Mullaly, Flossie Striker, and Bessie Canwright.

The Streeter-Bryan company, which has been playing to indifferent business in Phoenix at the Third Avenue Theatre, left there recently for Texas.

Count Louis de Savigny, one of the wealthiest noblemen of Normandy and great-grandson of Antoine Lavoisier, discoverer of oxygen, leaped blithely from a cab and ran directly into the arms of a process server in the lobby of the Hotel St. Regis, New York, Wednesday, March 10. The process server's summons gave Count Louis notice that he had been sued for $50,000 for alleged breach of promise by Grace Conklyn, an actress of that city. She says he promised to marry her, toured the West with her under that promise and then deserted her suddenly just as she had finished her trousseau. The ceremony, she says, was to have taken place at the Little Church Around the Corner, the naval station.

San Bernardino is waking up theatrically, and the past week organized a Theatrical Association lodge, enthusiasts from both San Bernardino and neighboring cities combining in the organization. The organization has a large membership in this country and Canada, and comprises about 90 per cent of the prominent and lesser lights among those theatrically inclined. The officers of the new lodge are E. B. Fickes, president; J. Baldrige, vice-president; Leo M. McLaughlin, secretary and treasurer; board of trustees: H. O. Higgins, Riverside; H. Wilms, Redlands; William Mather, San Bernardino.

The engagement of Ralph Stuart by Barton & Wiswell for a period of five years beginning September next adds another strong attraction to the list of enterprises handled by this firm. Mr. Stuart will be presented in plays of the romantic order, a field in which his talents as a forceful actor, are adapted. A new play, as yet unnamed, has been secured for Selma Herman, who is at present under the firm's management and will remain for three years to come. Miss Herman goes to Seattle for a season in repertoire beginning April 11th. Her regular season in the best of the popular priced houses will begin on September 5th. The new song show for the "Smart Set" company is already under way and gives promise of being the most pretentious enterprise of its kind ever offered. As usual the cast will be headed by S. H. Dudley. Among the list of plays to be presented next season by Barton & Wiswell will be found new ones by Willis Steel, James J. Montague and a new English melodrama at present running in London.

By the will of the late Eugene Tompkins, various charities, mostly in Boston, will be enriched eventually by nearly a million dollars. The will, dated June 14, 1906, and filed for probate in Boston, contains bequests to former members of his staff in the Richard Carle is one of the unique persons of the American stage. He is author, composer, lyric writer, stage manager, dancing instructor, star comedian and producer. He not only writes his own plays, but he provides much of the music, arranges the dances, preparing the sketches for the scenery, produces and manages his plays, thereby drawing salary as star, drawing royalties from his songs and participating in the net profits as manager.

Mr. Carle is still on the sunny side of forty. He was born in Somerville, Mass., a suburb of Boston. He was christened Charles H. Carleton. His father, Edgar W. Carleton, still lives in Somerville. According to the father, everything indicated a stage career for the son from earliest youth. When he was still in his kilts, young Carleton strung a wire screen across an unused wagon loft, mounted some old chintz curtains and gave shows in which he furnished the whole entertainment. The admission fee was ten nails and the receipts were cashed at a junk dealer's.

When he was 15 or 16, young Carleton fed his stage fever with frequent but fugitive trips to the old Howard Athanaeum in Boston. There, in exchange for admission, he passed out programmes—a tall, gawky boy with light hair, spectacles and an imitation fur cap, with the accompanying ear muffs, tied together atop. He had a keen eye for Somerville faces, and when he saw a neighbor coming he introduced the novelty of passing out programmes behind his back. To get out nights he elected himself a member of a mythical club which had for recreations whist, sleigh-riding, candy pulling and spelling matches.

"It's strange your club never meets at our house," observed his father.

"Yes, it is strange," replied the son, "but our club is very peculiar."

Watching the old-timers at the Howard was an inspiration to young Carleton. Several of the men now prominent in amusements used to be great favorites at the old music hall, and he longed to be able to sing, dance and do funny falls as they did. The idea of the legitimate stage also occurred to him, for once in a day dream he had printed this card, which he quietly slipped to his mother one morning:

RICHARD CARLE
Boston Museum

His mother beamed on him fondly as she saw him in perspective a representative actor.

"But I never dared to show that card to father, who was sitting across the table," declares the comedian. However, he clung to the name and the following summer found him putting out handbills announcing at various summer resorts, "Richard Carle in imitations and at the piano." He charged no admission, but trusted to the generosity of his audience, adding naively that he had no charge.

He had been in this kind of work only a short time when he applied for a job to Rich and Harris of Boston, at whose theatre James T. Powers was playing in A Mad Bargain. He was engaged at $25.00 a week. After A Mad Bargain Mr. Carle appeared in various plays, including A Country Sport, in which the late Peter F. Dailey was then starring. But the turning point in his career came with his engagement in The Lady Slavey at the New York Casino. His aptitude was such that George W. Lederer took him to London, with the company that stayed there two years in The Casino Girl, An American Beauty, and The Belle of Bohemia. During this engagement he rose to be leading man.

Returning to America, he began writing for the stage. As author, his first work was Mam'selle Awkins, closely followed by a burlesque, Way Up East, which was presented by several notable casts. About this time he was engaged by the old Dearborn Theatre company of Chicago. First he revamped The Explorers, originally a failure, into something of a success, then he worked out another's ideas on the fanciful topic, The Storks. This work had its handicaps, and Mr. Carle had no opportunity of showing his real skill until he wrote The Tenderfoot.

Then followed The Mayor of Tokio, another big success. This ran almost two years. In the meantime he had written and produced The Maid and the Mummy, which enjoyed wide popularity, although he never played in it himself.

During the summer of 1906 he was engaged to "Americanize" a musical comedy, The Spring Chicken, which had been running for two solid years at the Gaiety Theatre in London. The result was quick success when The Spring Chicken was produced that fall. The play ran four months in New York, three months in Chicago and two months in Boston.

In the summer of 1907 he finished the manuscript of a musical comedy, The Boy and the Girl, for the Bank Officers' Association of Boston, which produced the play with great success in February, 1908.

While he was on the road Mr. Carle worked over an old French farce, Madame Mongodin, which he renamed Mary's Lamb. As in the case of The Spring Chicken, he provided book, lyrics and music. Mary's Lamb was produced March 2, 1908, in Columbus, O., and was a success from the very start. It ran for three months last summer in New York and also enjoyed extended runs in Boston and Chicago. He is using this piece for his present western tour, which will end May 15, and Mr. Carle will immediately begin rehearsals for The Hurdy Gurdy Girl, another of his musical comedies, in which he will begin a summer run May 30 at the Colonial Theatre in Chicago. In the meantime, on March 14 at the Whitney Theatre in Chicago, The Boy and the Girl will have begun a season of ten weeks. This piece Mr. Carle has rearranged since it was presented by the Boston amateurs, and it is one of his most promising musical comedies. It will go from Chicago to Boston in June, for a summer run at the Tremont Street Theatre.

Ferris Hartman Finds the Appeal to Los Angeles

Theatregoers in Love Tales of Hoffman Very Strong

LOS ANGELES, April 1.—BURBANK—Manager Oliver Morosco has found it necessary to continue the run of Arizona at the Burbank Theatre for another week. He announces that this will positively be the last week of Arizona. He has no option in the matter, the eastern litigation in which the piece is involved forbidding its continuance after next Saturday night. The cast remains unchanged.

MASON—The Mason opera house is dark this week, but will open next week for a six-day engagement of Lillian Russell, in the Broadhurst-Hobart play Wildfire.

MAJESTIC—Norman Hackett appears this week for the first time in play. The story of the play has to do with the rivalry of two West Point cadets, and their adventurous career in the tropics. Here, lost in the mazes of a poisonous jungle, they fight their final battle for love. Mr. Hackett rises fully to the requirements of his role. The part calls for some good manly talk that makes the character a genuinely strong and likeable romantic creation. The first act, which shows the campus at West Point in the evening, is a good piece of staging, contrived with a careful attention to detail. One other striking example of the scenic artist's importance in this production is in the third act. It represents a tangled forest near the head waters of the Amazon. The merest glimpse of it suggests deadly reptiles, etc. It is here that the rescue party come upon the unhappy man for whose life they have risked their own. The encounter is intensely dramatic and the final escape of the survivors by a second rescue party brings the scene to a spirited conclusion. Mr. Hackett's "Duncan Irving" is well conceived and executed. Miss Doris Mitchell is seen to advantage as the girl and the rest of the supporting company is strong.

GRAND—The Tales of Hoffman is being repeated with great success at the Grand this week. "Sold out" signs appear at every performance. Miss Neilson, Mr. Welch, Mr. Arling and the other favorites have the same roles they interpreted so well last week.

ORPHEUM—The headlines at the Orpheum are Harry Foy and Florence Clark in a very funny skit entitled, The Spring of Youth. It involves the experience of an elderly person shipped up from Tombstone, Arizona, to benefit by the rejuvenating waters. Bowers, Walters and Crocker are billed as "The Three Rubes," and have an eccentric acrobatic act. There is no talk in their act and talk is useless in making an attempt to describe it; it must be seen to be appreciated. Agnes Mahr does some exceptionally fine toe dancing. She is assisted by Flora Mahr. Jack Connelly and Margaret Webb contribute some clever musical burlesque. The holdovers include Nonnette, Frank Nelson and his company in Thirty Dollars, Jwan Tschernoff's dog and pony circus and Goldsmith and Hoppe.

LOS ANGELES—There is an unusually good bill at the Los Angeles Theatre this week, the best feature of which is The Sexton's Dream, a scenic novelty of picturesque quality. It is a long time since the Los Angeles has offered so effective a stage picture as is shown in this act. Another act of excellent quality is provided in the singing of a mixed quartette, billed as The Country Choir. Frank Mayne and his company offer an amusing playlet of slang dialogue entitled, The Tipster. Other acts on the list include Ralph Johnston, a trick bicycle rider; Art Adair, an "eccentric musical comique, and Chefalo and Capretta, Italian magicians.

EMPIRE—The bill for the week at the Empire Theatre includes the following good acts: Manning and Ford, champion buck and wing dancers; De Shields, aerial cyclist; Joe Valle, in a musical act. By special request the Empire stock company presents Al Frank's original version of The Dope Fiend. New motion pictures and picture ballads complete a most satisfactory programme.

FISCHER'S—The Siamese Twins is the title of Producer Alphin's offering at Fischer's Theatre this week. Max Bloom and Ben T. Dillon do some clever comedy work as does Frank Vack as Dr. Munion. Pearl Jardinere has a good character part and also does some good singing. Dorothy Raymond appears to best advantage having two effective song hits, Dainty Little Ingenue and Get Out and Walk. Nellie Montgomery sings Shine On, Harvest Moon, and Tracy McDermott sings Did He Run. The attractive costumes of the chorus as nurses add to the production. It is one of the best things seen at the little First street house for some time.

UNIQUE—King Lorenzo, an abridgment of The Mascot is well staged and sung at the Unique this week. Director Blair has retained all of the popular songs. The title role is taken by John J. Martin, who makes a good Lorenzo. Miss Sutherland makes a charming Bettino, and Miss Parker a sprightly Beppo. The latter sings The Legend of the Mascot and Happy Days Gone By. The comedy is well handled by Will H. Armstrong as Rocco. He gives his own inimitable interpretation of how the song He Goes to Church on Sunday should be sung. Miss Atkins as Fiametta is well cast as is also Jack Curtis, who essays the dual roles of Dr. Bolus and Matheo. Morey Long as Frederic has an opportunity to use his agreeable tenor in several numbers.

WALKER—There is a very enterprising bill at the Walker Theatre this week. The headliner is Georgia Gardner and company in their one-act farce comedy entitled Too Many Darlings. Devaull and Lotta have a pretty sketch in which Lotta appears in several fancy costumes. Baby Lewis returns with some good imitations. Ransdale and Bance, the S-penny Kids, do some clever singing and dancing. Warren Ellsworth tells some funny stories and also sings a song entitled The Cross-Eyed Butcher. Hazel Salmon is a winsome soubrette who does some clever imitations of a French singer.

AUDITORIUM—Whim-Wham

is the name given the musical offering at the Auditorium this week. The plot, if plot it may be called, has to do with the many misadventures of a dramatist and author in London. This person, Jack Harrington, goes through all sorts of queer experiences in his effort to continue his literary work and still keep up appearances. We are this week introduced to Manager Ernest Crawford in the role of an actor under the stage name of Arthur Ford. He takes the part of the hero Harrington. Olga Stech is heard to advantage in several songs. The other roles are well handled by Maude Beatty, Hugh Metcalfe, Billy Onslow, Ben Sellar, Harry Goldsmith and Miss Swan Wood.

BELASCO—The fourth week of The Dollar Mark at the Belasco Theatre promises to be as successful as any of the previous weeks of the Broadhurst play. The appearance of the new leading woman, Florence Reed, is necessarily postponed for one week. Miss Reed will appear next week in Miss Hobbs.

NOTES ABOUT TOWN

Manager Wyatt of the Mason Opera House is spending $6,000 in his redecorating of the lobby and installation of a fountain. The work will be completed in time for the opening of Miss Russell in Wildfire next week.

A song, My Dusky Salome, by Byron Beasley and Blanche Hall, will be a feature of Gay New York at the Burbank next week. There will be eight Salomes in the show, all advertised as "marvels of feminine pulchritude," whatever that is.

June Moore, the chorus girl bride, who fell on a stairway at the Majestic Theatre last week, injuring herself so severely that it was feared she might be a cripple for life, is improving and her complete recovery is looked for.

Dick Ferris and Florence Stone will return to the local stage at Hamburger's Majestic Theatre next week, when they will be seen in a star cast presentation of Edwin Milton Royle's successful comedy drama, Friends. It has been more than a year since the resourceful Dick last graced a local stage and several months since Miss Stone bade farewell to Los Angeles audiences at the Burbank. The play by the author of The Squaw Man, will provide them with strong roles and the supporting company will include in its membership several local favorites in addition to a number of players who are strangers to Los Angeles audiences. Frederick Gilbert has been engaged by Mr. Morosco to play the heavy in Friends. The play went into rehearsal yesterday under the direction of Sedley Brown.

Among the principals chosen, so far, for the summer musical comedy season of the Murray and Mack company at the Grand, are Bessie Tannehill, Max Bloom and Lillie Sutherland.

Bennet Southard will close at the Belasco Theatre in two weeks. He is contemplating a vaudeville tour with his wife.

A deal probably will be concluded today for the sale of Fischer's Theatre. Manager E. A. Fischer, who has conducted his burlesque house on First street for several years, stated last evening that a transfer was pending, but that no transaction had been carried through as yet. The prospective purchasers are said to be Messrs. Smith and Warren, owners of the land which Fischer leased when his little playhouse was erected. Fischer may go in business here, or he may go to San Francisco. He has been considering for some time a piece of land at Main and Winston streets, but he stated last night that he was no longer holding this as a possibility. The People's Theatre, however, has been in his mind for some days, and if he does not go North he may take this expensively idle institution over for his own.

Having a week open at the Majestic, Manager Morosco has conceived a managerial coup. He has engaged Dick Ferris and Florence Stone to head a company in Friends. The company is now rehearsing under the direction of Sedley Brown and will have besides the two prominent actors already named, William Yerance, Margo Duffet, Harry Messtayer and Frederick Gilbert, late of San Diego.

Among the principals so far chosen for the Murray and Mack company, at the Grand Opera House are Bessie Tannehill, Max Bloom and Lillie Sutherland.

Mme. Modjeska was not removed from her home at Bay City today to a Los Angeles hospital as intended by her physicians. Although a special train was in readiness to transport her to the local hospital, the condition of the aged actress was so serious that it was deemed inadvisable to make the attempt. She has little or no chance of recovery.

Negotiations were completed yesterday for the use of the Auditorium to accommodate Ben Greet's players and the Russian symphony orchestra of New York, under the direction of Modest Altschuler, when these combined forces visit Los Angeles in the near future. The original plan was for the use of Shrine Auditorium, but Mr. Snow, Mr. Greet's manager, found this rather impractical on account of the inability to use electrical and scenic effects.

Florence D. Emery.

New Broadway Theatre of Oakland

Manager Guy Smith, who has a wide popularity and acknowledged ability in theatrical management, will next Monday introduce to Oakland theatre goers a new theatre in the remodeled Novelty, which will be known as the Broadway. The theatre will house a first-class stock company, which will be directed by Al Hallett. The opening bill will be The Fatal Wedding. The company will be headed by Roy Clement and Priscilla Knowles, and in the support will be Sydney Diamond, Louis Thompson, Jack Bennett, Fred Munier, Claire Sinclair, Georgie Woodthorpe, and Anita Allen. Following The Fatal Wedding, The Heart of the Blue Ridge will be offered and then At Valley Forge will be seen.

MADAME ELSA DE GOGORZO, wife of the great baritone, has been granted a divorce from her husband. In her complaint the wife said her husband was infatuated with Emma Eames, the beautiful and great soprano, with whom he had appeared in concert.

Trip to Africa—Long Beach, April 5, and then north.

Correspondence

London, March 25—Where innumerable sermons had failed, and addresses from the crown, and fiery editorials and magazine articles, and military recommendations, and patriotic appeals have left people cold, a single play in a fortnight has succeeded in what in arousing the sturdy Briton to the necessity of recruiting his army, of strengthening his coast defenses, of teaching his young men the use of the revolver and the manual of arms, of teaching his daughters to care for the sick and wounded. The play—An Englishman's Home—written by Major Guy du Maurier, an army officer and son of the author of Trilby, portrays the effect on the unprepared nation which a foreign invasion would have. The result—the most remarkable of any dramatic production in decades. Other companies are being rehearsed rapidly to produce the play in every part of the kingdom. The government and parliament are aiding the productions. But that isn't all. A great wave of patriotic enthusiasm has swept the island. Men are hurrying to the recruiting stations to join the volunteer and regular regiments. Women are enlisting in the hospital and nursing corps. England has become a vast recruiting station. The play is centered about a typical British family on the Dover coast. The people in it—Mr. Brown's family—play cricket, cribbage, football and laugh at the volunteers. Suddenly a Russian force lands on the coast, near the house of Mr. Brown, while a house party was in session. Volunteer soldiers hastily assemble and begin to barricade the house. Brown orders them out of the house. The volunteers, untrained, are still courageous. The guests at the party laugh at them, and make jests. Then the firing begins, and the leader of the jesters and two of the volunteers fall dead or dying. An adjutant of the English regular army arrives at the house and orders the volunteers to fall back. Brown calls them cowards and refuses to accompany them. His house is taken. He resists to the last with an old blunderbuss, which he has contrived to load. He is taken captive and shot instantly on his own lawn for fighting without a uniform. The women come in for their criticism in the play. A physician in the party calls to two of the women guests to assist in caring for the wounded. They are utterly helpless, do not know even how to bind up a wound. They are courageous, but useless. This is the play. It doesn't preach a moral. But it points one which the Englishman was quick to see—and quicker to feel.

New Orleans, March 27—Tulane Theatre. Hook of Holland numbered itself as one of the season's fine musical treats. Frank Daniels and Christine MacDonald are the central figures around which the musical jingles are woven. Daniels is as intensely funny as of yore. The part of Mr. Hook fits him snugly, and particularly happy is his rendition of the song "I Used to Be Afraid to Go Home in the Dark." Miss MacDonald is clear and magnetic and the possessor of a voice inexpressibly sweet. Daniels always boasts of a good supporting company, particularly in the chorus effects, and Hook of Holland is most fertile in that respect. Misses Gladys Claire, and Blossie Hope, Arthur Harold, Leslie Stiles, William Kent and Will Danforth are conspicuously prominent. Next week Nat C. Goodwin and Edna Goodrich, Crescent Theatre—Little Johnny Jones, one of Geo. Cohran's best, has pleased large audiences during the week. The company is strong and the scenery and costumes rich and handsome. Charley Brown essays the leading role most satisfactorily. William Keough, Danny Simon, Ada Gifford and Gus B. Mordant are particularly worthy of extended notice. The chorus work was of a high order. Next week—Low Dockstader. W. L. McCONNELL.

Salt Lake City, Utah, March 29—Salt Lake Theatre—Wednesday, March 31, the local Press Club will present their annual farce in the form of a paroxysm of political purity, entitled The Bungle. The evening with the Press Club is always awaited with great impatience by the public, for they never fail to please. The Bungle gives every promise of being a splendid success. Concluding the week Charles B. Hanford will present three of Shakespeare's most popular plays, Othello. The Winter's Tale and Much Ado About Nothing. Lovers of classics will have an opportunity to see Shakespeare rendered in an admirable manner. Colonial Theatre—The Willard Mack stock company presents Trilby very pleasingly. The long engagement of Mr. Mack and players in Salt Lake has been one great treat from the first night. It may also be said that the company has prospered beyond their expectations. At the Orpheum is a bill of great variety headed by Helen Grant in The Never Never Land. The remaining numbers are all good. Grand Theatre—Melodrama is once more at the Grand. At Grapple Creek will be played throughout the week. GLEN SMYTH.

Astoria, Ore., March 28—Tommy Getz, author of A Night in Bohemia, has been here the past week, putting the finishing touches on that girly musical tamale for Astoria Lodge, No. 180, B. P. O. Elks, and with a cast of about seventy-five of our local people it will be presented at the Astoria Theatre, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 30-31. The play is in two acts, and, in addition to about twenty-five whistly songs, dances and specialties, it has enough sentiment to touch the heartstrings. Getz has been playing A Night in Bohemia for the Elk lodges more years than he can remember, and will soon be in San Francisco. In speaking of Frisco he grew reminiscent, and said: "Dear old Frisco. It seems only yesterday that I was working for Uncle Billy Emerson at the Bijou on Market Street, where with McIntyre and Heath, Joe Green, Raymond Moore, Harry Armstrong, Harry Romaine, Billy Norton and Francis Leon, old Nic Roberts was managing a minstrel show. I remember Emerson used to fill his pockets with silver, and leaving the theatre by the alley entrance would scatter the change to a line of poor unfortunates lined up for his coming. I was writing local songs then for the Golden Gate song book. When the Teachers Convention was here, Frisco, Oh, Frisco, and When the Caps Punched the Valentine Clock Game were all successful and got laughs. I wrote Since My Daughter Plays on the Typewriter for Billy Emerson, and one night, at a stag social given by old Golden Gate Lodge of Elks, I sang it with a rousing chorus. Harry Kennedy, the old ventriloquist and author of I Owe Ten Dollars to O'Grady, was chairman, and he fined me one dollar for singing a rotten song and fined every one present ten cents each for singing it. Gustav Walters was just opening his theatre then, which was the head and foundation of the great Orpheum Circuit. It was here that one day an artist, applying for booking, told Mr. Walters that he was a comedian, and Walters, with his countenance as hard as iron, said: 'You are a comedian, are you. Well, make me laugh.' That's been over twenty years ago," said Getz, "and that yarn's been going the rounds ever since." Getz has just played A Night in Bohemia for the Seattle, Norman Hackett, 6. Novelty Theatre (A. J. Hotchkiss, prop. and mgr.)—James Post Musical Comedy Company, indefinite, 29. April 4, May the Best Man Win, to big business. Mr. Post, the best comedian here in years, kept the audience holding its sides whenever he was on. Joe Hayden very clever. Balance of the company satisfactory. The Two Old Cronies, 5-10. Amateur night announced for 6. Empire Theatre (Ed Hoen, prop. and mgr.)—Reimond stock company, indefinite. Pleasing large audiences. Alta Phipps joined 29. Star, Bijou, National, Grand and Fair, moving picture shows. The Eagles' Lodge will put on a minstrel show, 14-15. Local militia company will put on The Desert. The cast of characters indicates that the piece is really Arizona under an assumed name. Norris & Rowe's Circus, 1, under auspices of Woodmen's Lodge. L. W. WILSON.

Laramie, Wyo., March 29—Nothing doing at Opera House the past week. Florence Roberts billed for Thursday, April 1, in The House of Bondage. A. D. K.

El Paso, Tex., March 27—El Paso Theatre (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—March 22, Richard Carle, in Mary's Lamb, was greeted by a S. R. O. audience, and gave excellent satisfaction. During the first act an officer attempted to arrest a tough in the balcony; the tough drew a gun, which Manager Frank Rich grabbed; a scuffle ensued in which the tough was thrown down the stairs. Women screamed and started for the exits; the audience down stairs hearing all the noise above, thought the house was on fire and that the people in the balcony were getting out. So they started to make a rush for the doors. Richard Carle shouted, "Sit down, there is no fire." Mr. Carle certainly saved the day, or rather the night, for in one moment more everybody would have made a rush to get out. As it was a few were bruised and tramped on, but no one was seriously injured. The house was simply packed, and, although the El Paso Theatre is well supplied with exits, if the audience had all made a break for the doors, many lives would have been lost. It took for a moment as the audience did not know what to do, but Mr. Carle's commanding voice seemed to bring them to their senses. The cry was then taken up by several men in the audience, and in a moment everything was as serene as if nothing had happened. The Crawford (Crawford & Rich, mgrs.)—March 25, the National Stock Company open an indefinite engagement at this house. The company is under the direction of Roger Flint and H. L. Lawrence, featuring George R. Matison and Lorraine Keen. This is the same company that played The Lieutenant and the Cowboy on the Coast, Majestic (Frank Rich, mgr.)—Majestic Musical Company to S. R. O. business all week. Mention is due Willa Behn and her Indian Maidens, Grace Wolf and the Poverty Chaps, George Burton, Robert Ross and Bert L. Russell. Unique Theatre will open soon, date of opening as yet not given. This house will play musical comedy. Some of the principal members are Messrs. Max Asher, Charles Franklin, A. Paul Mathot, Misses Gracia Corbett, Ida Wharton, Jane Wickett and eight others. GEO. A. MANSFIELD.

San Bernardino, March 30—At the Opera House (Mrs. M. L. Kiplinger, mgr.), 29, Lillian Russell with her excellent supporting company presented the racing comedy, Wildfire, to one of the largest and most enthusiastic audiences of the season. The night of years seemed but to enhance the charms of this beautiful artist, and the vigor and fire of youth still characterize her interpretation of the dashing widow. The whole cast is in excellent hands. Coming attractions: A Trip to Africa, 31; The Talk-a-scope, April 1-3; The Burgomaster, 2; Mme. Nazimova, 21; Daniel Sully, 23. J. E. RICH.

San Diego, March 30—Garrick (Morocco & Wyatt, lessees; J. M. Dodge, mgr.)—26-27, Norman Hackett in Classmates played to good business and pleased. At the conclusion of the third act the Elks of this city presented Mr. Hackett with a beautiful floral piece as a token of their esteem for him. On the 28-29 that old favorite, The Burgomaster, paid us a visit and did deservedly big business. Harry Hermen as the Burgomaster was very funny and more than pleased. Marie Grandpre made a charming Ruth. As Willie Van Astor-bilt, Euphemie Lockhart enacted the part in a very clever manner. The balance of the company were well cast. The scenery, costumes, etc., looked new and pretty. 30, Gabrielowitz, in recital, April 2-3, Lillian Russell, in Wildfire, 16. Ben Greet's players, Pickwick (Scott A. Palmer, mgr.)—Week March 29, in Sweethearts and Wives, the Pickwick has an unusually attractive bill this week, and good business continues to rule. There are a number of song hits. Among them are Dixie, I Love You, sung by Ethel Davis; The Yamma Man, by Libby Blondell and chorus; Dreaming, by Ethel Davis and chorus; Mushytingi, by Barney Williams; Be Sweet to Me, Kid, by Miss Delacour. The chorus is well dressed and the scenery is up to the Pickwick standard, which means A1. Queen (Swarts & Urban, mgrs.)—The bill as presented this week consists of the following acts: Dolph and Susie Levino, cartoonists and comedy sketch artists; Joe Edmunds, the How-de-Do Man; Leffingwell, Bruce and company in Sketch, The Ashes of Adam; Nehoff and Phelps, in singing, dancing and talking specialty; latest moving pictures conclude a good show. Good business. Grand (Walter Fulkerson, mgr.)—The Great Oak, world-renowned juggler; Bernard Dyllin, character singer; Clara Lagueau and her dancing boys; Eugene De-Bell, baritone; illustrated songs and moving pictures conclude a good show. Gaiety (R. O. Marsh, mgr.)—Vaudeville: Roberta, in the milk can mystery; The Rosells and Baby Wanda; Mlle. Syma; Mabel Humbert, singing comedienne; Jessie Stewart, soprano, moving pictures and illustrated songs. Fair show and business. Empire (W. W. Bosley, mgr.)—Vaudeville: The Mendells, comedy sketch artists; Albert Tint; Lydick Sisters; moving pictures and illustrated songs. Very good business. Union and Bijou offer moving pictures and illustrated songs to fair business.

Redlands, The Wyatt (H. C. Wyatt, mgr.; E. J. Underwood, business mgr.)—30, A Trip to Africa occupied the attention of a small audience, which was much pleased with the attraction; 31, Lillian Russell, in Wildfire, was greeted by a large and fashionable gathering, which assembled to see this famous woman in this comedy. This was Miss Russell's first appearance in Redlands, but, of course, many of our people had seen her at other times during her career as a stage favorite. 3, The Burgomaster will play an engagement here.

Fresno, March 31—Barton Opera House (R. J. Barton, prop.)—The Elfeffor Company, March 28-April 1, repertoire, satisfactory performance to fair business. Norman Hackett, 6. Novelty Theatre (A. J. Hotchkiss, prop. and mgr.)—James Post Musical Comedy Company, indefinite, 29. April 4, May the Best Man Win, to big business. Mr. Post, the best comedian here in years, kept the audience holding its sides whenever he was on. Joe Hayden very clever. Balance of the company satisfactory. The Two Old Cronies, 5-10. Amateur night announced for 6. Empire Theatre (Ed Hoen, prop. and mgr.)—Reimond stock company, indefinite. Pleasing large audiences. Alta Phipps joined 29. Star, Bijou, National, Grand and Fair, moving picture shows. The Eagles' Lodge will put on a minstrel show, 14-15. Local militia company will put on The Desert. The cast of characters indicates that the piece is really Arizona under an assumed name. Norris & Rowe's Circus, 1, under auspices of Woodmen's Lodge. L. W. WILSON.

Chico, March 31—The Majestic Theatre, which has been operated for the past season by the Great Western Theatrical Circuit, who have furnished Chico with the finest attractions the town has ever enjoyed, will on April 1 pass into the hands of John Cort, who has leased it for a term of years. Mr. Cort was in Chico recently. A number of improvements will be made to the theatre at once. The local manager will be N. O. Turner. The first attraction to appear under the new management will be The Gingerbread Man, on Sunday, April 4. This show was seen here about a year ago and its many tuneless airs have not been forgotten yet, so it's safe to predict a filled house on Sunday night. The Teal Musical Company has filled a three nights' engagement here this week, finishing the 31st. They played at popular prices and drew good houses. At the Gem the vaudeville numbers are now being changed twice each week and the popularity of the house is still being demonstrated by the big nightly attendance. C. H. CHACE.

San Jose, April 2—This week's program at the Elks consists of the Barker Brothers, Ladd and Brown, Kid Gabriel and company; Somers and Storke; and Madame Bonetti. Business only fair. Local Union, T. M. A's, held their annual banquet Thursday night on the Victory Theatre stage. At Truck George Thompson and Felix Cassetti were in charge. Palmyra, April 1, Hill Opera House (J. R. Roche, lessee)—Sunday night, March 29, The Gingerbread Man, better than ever. This was the best musical extravaganza ever seen here; and the house was filled. The Barker brothers continue to play to fair business. On Friday night the Black Patti Troubadours.

Archie Levy Writes: I take this method of expressing my utter contempt for a certain party who is laboring under the delusion that he is a great wit and practical joker. I do not make these remarks with bad feelings or malicious intent as I have only pity and compassion for the poor, deluded mortal who, in the bliss of his ignorance knows no better than to criticize his superiors as regards both intellect and manhood. He is at present appearing in an act booked over the Circuit I represent under the appellation of The Men of the Hour, and has taken occasion on a scurrilous manner, to criticize my wearing apparel, which I am pleased to say, so far exceeds his own that his action simply shows that the green-eyed monster has complete control of his jealous nature. My advice to him is that he is more appropriately adapted to the vocation his name implies, that of wrestling with pots and pans instead of with the English language which he is so fond of butchering at every opportunity, and by so doing he will give his partner a chance to get some one who will not be a drag upon the act. If his partner will follow my advice (which is, throw him out), I will venture to say that I can go on in his place and make his partner feel ashamed of ever having been seen with such a poor apology of masculinity. This poor, misguided mortal is addicted to the habit of pestering his acquaintances by sending them postal cards with poetic compositions written on them. I do not claim to be of a poetic temperament myself, but if I can't write better stuff than that he dishes up I will go to driving a sand wagon, for I am a d—n smart fellow if I do say so myself. I received my education at college, while he, I presume, must have received his—now that I think of it, he hasn't any, so consequently could not have received anywhere. He only thinks he has an education, and, as ignorance is bliss, it is an act of charity to allow him to go on his way laboring under the hallucination that he is a great wag and that he is on the road to that astronomical firmament called "Stardom." P. S.—I warn this party not to address me at any time for I shall snub him publicly if he does. So beware, my noble joker.

Myrtle Vane

Myrtle Vane is the new and important feature to the Vancouver theatre going public, where she opened last Monday under the management of Walter Sanford. Miss Vane goes to Vancouver with a notable record as a stock leading woman. Having had a thorough training in comic opera as well as drama, it will be seen that she possesses versatility of an unusual type. She is young, pretty, of a vivacious temperament and great emotional powers. Her training has been with the best of organizations. She was a great favorite of Belasco's Central Theatre stock company in San Francisco before the fire, and her later engagements in stock were with the Baldwin-Melville stock company of New Orleans, the Alisky stock of Sacramento, and the Pickwick stock of San Diego. She has won success in all lines of drama and wins especial triumphs in comedy, her mercurial temperament admirably equipping her for this line of work. Her opening with the Sanford players was made in the part of Cigarette, in Under Two Flags, a part that Miss Vane plays with brilliant results.

Vaudeville Notes

The Washington Square Theatre will be closed for a few weeks on account of alterations. Due notice will be given of the re-opening, when an exclusively new and Italian and American company will appear every afternoon and evening.

Rita Villiers, who was a favorite member of the Spooner Stock Company, is making her first appearance here in the Bijou Theatre after an absence of two years. With Darrel Vinton, a well known Shakespearean actor, she is appearing in a comedy sketch called The Liar. Miss Villiers has been in the West since she severed her connection with the Spooners, playing part of the time in classical dramas and in vaudeville. This season she was with Robert Mantell, closing her engagement with him very recently. Vinton will be remembered by Brooklyn theatre-goers for his connection with the Gotham Theatre stock company some years, and for his portrayal of Hamlet at the Amphion, which was praised highly by the critics. He has starred in Shakespearean plays and for several years was leading man for Frederick Warde.—New York Herald.

Correspondence

Tacoma, Wash., March 27.—Arthur Cunningham and company played a return engagement at the Tacoma Theatre, 21, Shaun Rhue being the bill selected this time. The little melodrama was enlivened by some pleasing vocal selections, well sung by Mr. Cunningham. The course of artists' recitals under the direction of Mrs. Bernice Newell came to an end 23, when Lhevinne, the Russian pianist, appeared here. A large and fashionable audience was present and thoroughly enjoyed the excellent program. Robley D. Evans, U. S. N., lectured at this theatre under Masonic auspices. The Admiral gave an informal and intensely interesting address that was much appreciated by the large audience. The Red Mill is closing its brief engagement tonight, having played to good business. The pretty, tuneful opera with its comical situations seemed to please everybody. Neil McNeil and Walter Willis made a hit here and Milton Dawson and W. H. Brown also added materially to the fun-making. Anna McNabb, Sadie Kirby and Marguerite Fry were all favorites. The chorus was well trained and beautifully gowned and the piece splendidly staged. March 28-29, Florence Gear, in Marrying Mary; April 2-3, The Fitch Comedy Girls; 4-5, The Right of Way. Marguerite Fry of the Red Mill company was the guest of Tacoma friends while in the city. Entertainments in her honor took the form of dinners, supper parties, a luncheon and a tea. Miss Fry, before taking up stage work and while a resident of Seattle, was a pupil of Henry T. Hanlin of this city, and was often heard here in song recitals. Tacoma Lodge of Elks entertained on Thursday for the young people who so cleverly assisted in the Elks' theatrical performance last month, when they presented A Night in Bohemia. The affair was a combined minstrel and vaudeville show, in which all the Bohemia hits were comically burlesqued. This was followed by a supper and dance. Prettily staged and well played by the McRae players, Cousin Kate made many friends among the Star's patrons, who readily agreed that everything was all right when she came. Mr. Holuber and Miss Oswald played with spirit and unaffectedness and Miss Oswald wore some fetching gowns in the latest modes. Miss Cordray as the self-centered young girl was good in her part, as was Miss Van Tassel in the part of the lovable and fussy mother. The minor parts were cared for by Miss Robeson, Mr. Vane and Robert Lawrence. Next week, Frenzied Finance, Baby Hip, the young elephant at the Grand, besides his vaudeville stunt passed programs, sold newspapers on Pacific Avenue and went automobiling, and was an object of much general interest. The Wartenberg Brothers were particularly clever in foot juggling. Marie Wanda entertained with lute and saphone and the Atlantic City Four sang well. Tom J. Dugan had a pleasing monologue. A musical offering by the Muellers and illustrated song by Leo Keane completed the bill. The big drawing card at the Pantages was likewise an animal act. Mme. Millie with her ponies and a lion and bear attracted much attention. The Lucier Trio, in a good singing act, displayed an attractive wardrobe. Seymour and Dupre proved themselves clever character comedians and Honaely and Russell offered a lively and amusing sketch, He and She, which proved to be mostly "she." Johnstone is as clever a ventriloquist as has appeared here.

Jack Dodge Writes: San Diego, March 29.—The Dramatic Review circulation is booming here. The newsboys have doubled their orders here recently. Business is fine with us. Burgomaster last night and tonight, big business, and Lillian Russell is with us Friday and Saturday.

Priscilla Knowles

The very handsome and striking picture on our front page this week will call attention to a new and important figure in our Western theatrical horizon. Miss Knowles, who will play the leads at the new Broadway Theatre in Oakland, is a talented and most attractive leading woman who will be very much in evidence during the coming season. Miss Knowles has had a long experience in stock and on the road with the best companies and she will be a valuable member of the clever stock that Manager Guy Smith has signed for his new theatre.

The Eames-Gorgorza Affair is Old

Only a year or so ago it was predicted—the Gorgorza-Eames affair, which is now being dished up with so much aromatic condiment as "news" in the daily press. The icy armor in which the beautiful songstress always encased herself did excellent service in warding off gossip about her and her infatuated admirer, at least in this country. In Paris last summer, however, people were not so overawed by Mme. Eames that they were speechless about the intimacy between her and Gorgorza—oh, no, Gorgorza—when they lodged at the same hotel, took all their meals together, and drove like two cooing doves every afternoon in the Allee des Acacias. In August they removed themselves to Venice, where the faithful Abigail who attends to Mme. Eames' tantrums in her boudoir was sent on a vacation, and Fannie the companion was packed off on a tour to a bibulous Cythera. Fannie, who is the daughter of a ballet dancer, is the one person of whom the willful diva stands in fear, for being addicted to strong waters, her tongue is likely to run astray with her and you never can tell what is going to happen or what she is going to say. Everybody wonders that the ultra-elegant Eames can be so infatuated with a person of Gorgorza's caliber, as he is a most ordinary person without even the veneer with which opera singers generally manage to coat themselves, and besides is positively illiterate. Of course we are always prepared for the vagaries of opera stars, but that the glacial Eames should thaw is enough to forever destroy our faith in appearances.

Dick Jose started his company rehearsing last Wednesday. Lillian Hayward will play the part of Jane. The Merry Widow has been engaged to make her first bow to a San Francisco audience at the Van Ness Theatre on the fourth of July.

New Rates For Theatrical Companies

The Southern Pacific, Santa Fe and Salt Lake railroads announce the discontinuance of class rates affecting theatrical companies, and at the same time offer special rates to parties of fifteen or more, which are open to everybody. The changes apply to travel within California, and go into effect May 1. The railroads will now make a rate of one and one-third fare for the round trip to parties of fifteen or more between points in California. This offer is general. The time limit given is five days, instead of two days as heretofore. If the party exceeds ninety-nine in number, a rate of one fare for the round trip will be made with a time limit of five days where the one way fare is $10. If the one way fare exceeds $10 the time limit will be extended to fifteen days. Heretofore theatrical companies have been given a one way rate of two-thirds single fare. This will be discontinued May 1. Theatrical companies will be held to the requirements of the party rate thus required to purchase round trip tickets. Members of theatrical companies have been allowed a baggage allowance of 200 pounds. Henceforth they will be limited to 150 pounds, as with the usual traveler. Students of the University of California, Stanford, the State Normal Schools and other like institutions will no longer be given the vacation rate of one and one-third fare for the round trip. They will be required to pay full fare, unless they take advantage of the party rate. Baseball, basketball, track and other athletic teams also will no longer be given the half rate afforded them. They will have to take advantage of the party rate, which means that instead of traveling at the rate of one fare for the round trip they will pay one and one-third fare.

Isabelle Fletcher Concludes Her Engagement in Oakland

The Importance of Being Earnest, this week's offering at the Liberty, is notable for being the final production of Isabelle Fletcher's engagement. This popular artist, who for the past three years has been Bishop's leading lady, has determined to take a well earned rest and will take a trip East to visit her parents. As yet her future plans are rather vague. For her farewell role, Miss Fletcher was given the character of Gwendolen Fairfax and gave a performance that will long be remembered by the Liberty patrons. She was ably supported by Landers Stevens, who essayed the role of John Worthing. The cast, though small, comprised Bishop's best people. Geo. Friend, Henry Shumer, Elmer Booth, E. L. Bennison and Lillian Elliott. The two new acquisitions to the company, Helen Lackaye and Katherine Mulkins, are both making good and have already become prime favorites. Next week the company will present the much heralded Southern play, The Crisis. At the Macdonough Kolb and Dill have changed their bill and this week are seen in their funniest of all plays, The Politician. This travesty on American politics certainly makes a hit. This ought to be termed feminine week at the Orpheum, there being about twenty girls on display, including the Eight Palace Girls, and The Teddy Bear and the Six Little Girls. The week's program is just medium, the best thing on the bill is the Kitabauzai Troupe. The other specialties are: The Blessings; Mr. Herbert Mitchell; Miss Emma Rainey; Mr. James McDonald and Miss Valerie Huntington; Mr. Ray L. Royce. Quite a novel feature at the Bell is the log splitting contest as depicted by a crew of Australian wood choppers. The other numbers are: John Le Clair; Adolph Zink; The Star of Bethlehem; Carroll and Cooke; Mareena, Navarro and Mareena; motion pictures. Next Monday the Broadway, formerly the Novelty, opens with a first-class stock, under the management of Guy Smith, the oldest, and at the same time, the youngest manager in Oakland.

Among the members of Madame Nazimova's company are several players who are well known in San Francisco. The leading players in the organization are Brandon Tynan, Dodson Mitchell, Cyril Young, Francis Powell, Percy Lyndall, Robert Coleman, Florence Fisher, Mrs. Jacques Martin, Evelyn Weilding and Alice Seymour.

Williams & Woods, who have been running a picture show in The Auditorium Theatre of Grass Valley, have leased the theatre for one year, paying $1655 for that term.

Van Ness Theatre

In this age of musical comedy it is refreshing to run across a show that is so impregnated with the charm of novelty as is Mary's Lamb, the vehicle that introduces Richard Carle to the theatre goers of San Francisco in the guise of a star, playwright, composer, producer, and whole thing. Several unusual things characterize Mary's Lamb. First of all, it is without qualification, the best singing and dancing show we have had here this season. Again, it is rich in the possession of shapely and attractive girls and, thirdly, it is bewilderingly full of the most original and surprising "business" of any show of the last few years. And then there is Richard Carle. Mr. Carle is an elongated comedian of quiet methods, who does the most unexpected things without warning. His first entrance was made to long and enthusiastic applause and it is to be recorded that very seldom has an actor appeared in this city to be met with the warmth and length of Mr. Carle's greeting. Cecilia Rhoda, who is an old favorite, came in, too, for a very warm reception. Clean cut and clever work was furnished by George Bogues, Sylvain Langlois, Jules Rolph, Cecilia Rhoda, Violet Seaton and Rita Stanwood. The chorus work and the singing numbers were tremendously effective and the show throughout was effective and productive of one long chuckle of pleasure.

Valencia Theatre

Pretty Peggy is unique in the way of a play, and when played with spirit and with a good cast is always an entertaining proposition. The Valencia stock is extremely well suited to the enactment of the various characters of the piece, and the novelty of the disturbance in the body of the house and in the boxes, is immensely enjoyed by the audience who are given a close view of the actor folk, garbed in their make-up and finery of the stage. Blanche Stoddard, who makes her farewell bow in the character of witty and saucy and lovable Peggy, has a bewitching brogue and a charm of manner that does full justice to the playwright's fascinating heroine. Beatrice Nichols, who has invariably shown herself to be an exceedingly clever and artistic little woman, is very satisfying as Polly. Lillian Andrews has one of those character old women in which she revels and she makes Mrs. Woffington a very humorous and entertaining old girl. Grace Travers is a stunning Eva Sorrel, who would keep the volatile Garrick affections. Thomas MacLarnie, who since Mace Greenleaf's retirement has been assigned to the leads, falls very easily and satisfyingly into the character of David Garrick. The impulsive love making, the quick Irish wit and the persuasive Garrick charm is splendidly portrayed, and in addition, Mr. MacLarnie lends a manly and handsome physical adornment to the portrayal. Gerald Harcourt, as Sir Charles Harburg, Charles Dow Clarke as the Earl of Cholomondeley, Robert Homans as Cavendish, and Gilmore Walker as Bennett, fill out the cast of principals most acceptably.

Alcazar Theatre

Esmond wrote a world of pathos into his comedy, When We Were Twenty-one, and Bertram Lytell makes his audiences at the Alcazar appreciate that same pathos fully as much as the comedy. Comparisons are odious, and I'm not going to make comparisons between Mr. Lytell's interpretation of Richard Carewe and the stage picture Nat Goodwin gave us in the same part, for the two men treat the character from different standpoints. Goodwin was more the comedian than Lytell, but Lytell grips the hearts of his auditors in a way Goodwin never did. He is the life of the current revival and has re-created a worthy lead in his week's rehearsing. His make-up too is worth observance and mention. Evelyn Vaughn, although somewhat handicapped by her stature and physique for the part of Phyllis, yet imparts a girlish chic and witchery to her interpretation which renders it comparatively pleasing, immensely more so from a histrionic standpoint than that achieved by many of her predecessors in the role. Ernest Glendenning surpasses his usual good work in the exceedingly "fat" part of "The Imp," and earns well deserved encomiums by his sincere, well studied and faithful presentation of the character. The cast is a long one, and all of the parts are handled in so acceptable a manner that the presentation may be justly stamped a notable one. A. Burt Wesner, Will R. Walling, John B. Maher and Louise Brownell are worthy of especial commendation. Miss Brownell's "Firefly" being a right clever bit. An entirely adequate mounting is provided and Edward Lada's orchestral music is as usual enjoyable.

16th Street Theatre

Vaudeville and moving pictures hold forth at this house this week and next. In the meantime the Malan-McGrath Stock company is re-organizing and will go on the road for one week before re-opening in The Octoroon. The house will be entirely repainted and made more comfortable in every way. Special scenery is now in preparation for the re-opening of the company, and several well known Frisco favorites will be among the members upon the occasion. The cast is a large one and no expense will be spared to make the production a success. It will be taken on the road for a week before opening here and a finished performance will be in evidence on re-opening night.

Princess Theatre

When Frederick Ranken coopered up the book of Nancy Brown to order for Marie Cahill, after her great hit in the song of the same title, nobody imagined for a minute that the play would "go" without the supporting lustre of the star and her most excellent company, but they were wrong. Clever May Boley and the company at The Princess are giving almost, if not quite, as good an entertainment this week as did the original company. Miss Boley is at her best in the snappy, saucy, up-to-the-minute-wise-girl character of Nancy Brown, and not only gets by in a couple of conversational numbers, but really sings one song in the second act most acceptably. Moreover she graces three stunning costumes in her usual more than acceptable way. Aside from the title role and its handling by Miss Boley, Frank Moulan, Budd Ross and Fred Mace in the three comedy roles are "it." Moulan, while his funnyisms are some of them trite, and his methods lack marked versatility, yet is a laughable Bey and cavorts merrily through the not overly humorous part. He is ably assisted by Budd Ross as the chamberlain, and Fred Mace as an American commercial traveler, pressed into service as the bogus crown prince of Ballyhoo. James Bean, Oliver Le Noir, Arthur Messmer and Walter Catlett, as the quartette of fortune hunting noblemen, contribute good bits, and James T. Stevens displays a powerful and pleasing baritone voice in the solo allotted him in the character of the real prince. Ethel Du Fre Houston has opportunities for good vocal as well as histrionic work as the princess; Zoe Barnett is a winsome Muriel, and Ellen Crane, promoted from the chorus for the part of Mrs. Jenks, an American parvenu, seeking to marry her only son to a title, gives a good account of herself. The chorus numbers are well staged, and the production as a whole is decidedly worth while.

American Theatre

Daniel Sully is a splendid actor in the type that he long ago established for his own and since which he has been identified with. Mr. Sully presents a stage Irishman, sometimes in the garb of a corner groceryman, sometimes attired as a great contractor, sometimes vested with the garments of priesthood, but always with the true characteristics of the genial, big hearted and attractive Irishman. His present play, The Matchmaker, presents him as a priest, who looks out not only for the spiritual but physical welfare of his people. The play is not brilliant with opportunity, but whatever its weakness, it presents. Mr. Sully in a very enjoyable portraiture and allows the company to give an evening of quiet, pleasing entertainment. Mr. Sully is supported by Julius Wright, Hal Levin, R. A. Stewart, Fred J. Harvey, Joseph Lasker, Mary Cagwin, Eleanor Franklin, Kate Toneray, and Gertrude Earl.

Personals

PERCY HASWELL comes as the leading woman of Otis Skinner's company.

WILLIAM J. ETEN is this season business manager for Richard Carle's Mary's Lamb company and Fred Price is back with the show.

DARRELL STANDING, one of the most popular members of the Valencia stock company, who has been enjoying a fortnight's vacation, returns as Mr. Darling in Peter Pan.

F. MARION CRAWFORD, the novelist and playwright, who has been ill for some time in Sorrento, Italy, has developed symptoms of bronchial pleurism. His illness is not regarded as serious.

LILLIAN FRANCE, one of Broadway's brightest, prettiest and most talented ingenues, arrived from New York Friday, to begin an engagement at the Valencia Theatre as Wendy in Peter Pan.

DAISY LOVERING, who has dropped completely out of theatrical life, is still in this city, having taken up the work of Christian Science with vigor. She is the reader of the First Church of San Francisco.

CLARA WILLIAMS has succeeded Kathleen Taylor as ingenue of the Bentley stock company at Long Beach. Evelyn Selbie is the new leading woman. They opened last Monday in The Man from Mexico.

OTHO HERBERT DILLEY, musical director and composer of popular songs, died in Senecaville, O., April 1, aged 35. Dilley was in charge of the Iroquois Theatre orchestra, Chicago, the afternoon of the fire in that playhouse a few years ago in which hundreds perished.

ETHEL BARRYMORE and John Drew, with their respective companies, will start West this week, and are scheduled for appearance at the Van Ness Theatre in the near future. Miss Barrymore will be seen in Lady Frederick and John Drew in Jack Straw, said to be his most brilliant hit.

PAUL McALLISTER, one of Henry W. Savage's best actors, and who created the part of the artist in The Devil, has been engaged as leading man for the Valencia stock company, and will begin his engagement at the conclusion of the run of Peter Pan in a sumptuous production of If I Were King.

CECELIA RHODA, who is appearing with Richard Carle in Mary's Lamb at the Van Ness Theatre, is to be in Los Angeles as a star. Classmates is the vehicle used by Mr. Hackett. Visually, romantically and dramatically Classmates is an effective the cast of Carle's new production, The Hurdy Gurdy Girl, when it is brought out May 30 at Chicago.

FRIENDS of Fred Belasco, who have missed him from his usual haunts in New York during the last week, learned today, says a dispatch from the metropolis last Thursday, that he has recovered from a severe attack of ptomaine poisoning. A week ago Belasco ordered some deviled lobsters. He ordered some more and ate both orders. As a result he was in bed for a week with two doctors in attendance. Today was his first day out.

DONAH BENRIMO, the clever and beautiful young San Francisco actress, was married in Seattle week before last to Walter Reed of Portland. Miss Benrimo has played with Max Figman in The Marriage of Kitty, and with Rose Coghlan in The Second Mrs. Tanqueray. Before that she was at the old Third Avenue with The City of New York, and with James Ward eight years ago. Miss Benrimo is now leading woman with S. Miller Kent in a sketch, and will be seen here at the Orpheum next week.

ROBERT LAWLER, the clever and versatile young actor, well known here before the fire as a member of the Majestic stock company, has just returned from a three years' sojourn in Eastern climes, where he has held a number of successful engagements, among them leading man for Mary Shaw and later in support of Nance O'Neil and also a season on the Keith & Proctor Circuit in support of Edgar Davenport. The greater part of his time has been spent in stock in New York City. He has been specially engaged to play the part of John the Baptist in Manager Weinstock's version of Salome.

Vaudeville

LLOYD C. FOUNTAIN, Editor

The Orpheum

This week's bill starts off with a very entertaining aerial acrobatic act by the Four Puncherries, who display decided skill on the tight wire. The big hit of the bill this week, as last, is made by Violet Black with her skit In the Subway. This is not only a very unique affair but a very funny one, and the piece could stand another week. Charles Matthews, an English jumper, gives an exhibition of high jumps that shows him to be a phenomenon in this line of acrobatics. Tom Nawn, who several years ago made an emphatic hit with a little play called Pat and the Genii, returns after a long absence and finds the piece just as potent to stir the risibilities as ever. The present visit emphasizes the fact that this play is one of the gems of vaudeville. James H. Cullen, the Man from the West, gives his monologue that is chuck full of funny stories and a few songs. The Four Casting Dunbars give an excellent example of aerial work and the usual showing of moving pictures completes a bill that is worth twice the money asked.

Pantages-Empire

Lovers of the weird, supernatural and mystifying should not miss seeing Adelaide Herrmann (widow of the late Herrmann the Great) at the Empire this week. Madame Herrman displays a knowledge of legerdemain that is marvelous, mystifying and delightfully entertaining. The Two Scotch Macks contribute some clever dancing and a few songs that are rendered with a delicious Scotch roll of the tongue. The Haydens are a family of clever tight wire gymnasts and give a pleasing performance. Signor Tetrizini pleases with a number of vocal selections, and Joe Godwin, the polite entertainer, has a line of talk that is amusing. The Four Otts have a rough and tumble farce. The Gibson Girl, that keeps the audience in a state of laughter from start to finish and is a prize winner for action. The usual entertaining moving pictures complete a more than satisfying programme.

The National

That enterprising young manager Sid Grauman has a bill this week ranging from the sublime to the ridiculous, and for anyone experiencing that old age feeling go to the National and Dan Leno's Happy Youngsters will hand out a prescription I warrant will take you back to your childhood's happy days. There are five boys and five girls (I should have said six girls as one of the boys is a girl) and a clever bunch of animation they are. From start to finish they keep things lively with their singing and dancing. Master William Barry and Frank Checkio are a couple of clever little clog dancers, and the balance all contribute their share of clever work. Miss Vinnie Phillips and A. Smith, assisted by the others, wind up an appetizing little act. It's great to be crazy is the idea conveyed by Daly, the Mad Juggler, who has something new in the juggling line to offer. He is as clever as he is funny, and he is awfully funny. The Booth-Gordon Trio have some new and difficult stunts on bicycles to introduce in which they receive hearty approval. Sarah Cogswell renders some delightful vocal selections which show the thorough training of an artist. His Day Off, as presented by Eugene Ellsworth and Edna Earle Lindon, is a scream from start to finish. Although presented here before it still goes with a bang. Fritz Errac and His Violin comprise a repertoire of standard and classical compositions all of which are rendered with perfect technique and warmth of feeling such as characterize only the performance of an artist. One of the best hand balancing acts witnessed in some time is tendered by Les Georgettys. The greater portion of the work rests upon the shoulders (or hands) of a little tad who, nevertheless, appears to thoroughly enjoy the tossing around he is subjected to. Exceptionally fine motion pictures complete a programme that will satisfy the most exacting, the young as well as the old.

The Wigwam

A fine show is to be seen at the Mission street house this week. Melbourne MacDowell and Virginia Drew Trescott are presenting their sketch A Man of the People to popular approval at every performance. The play treats upon that eternal question, Capital versus Labor, and still is not of a radical nature, but appeals simply to a sense of justice which is all the true wage earner asks, or, as the foreman of the works. (Mr. MacDowell) says, "Recognition." It is needless to discourse upon the merits of the acting as Mr. MacDowell is well known here as an artist of conscientious and sterling worth. Good support is contributed by Miss Trescott and by Percy Challenger. The Borsini Troupe have several new and difficult stunts introduced in their act. That funny man, Tom Brantford, keeps the audience in continual good humor while he is on the stage, and his imitation of a brass band is a scream. Some sensational whirlwind dancing is indulged in by Onetta, the Dervish dancer. Dave Morris & Co. present a nonsensical farce that is absurd enough to be funny. It Happened in Dogland, as presented by Coin's Dogs is a vehicle for a display of dumb brute knowledge that is marvelous. Fred Sanderson's rich baritone is a treat in conjunction with the illustrated pictures. Motion pictures complete the programme.

Vaudeville Notes

Following the issuance of a writ of attachment by Justice Stephens of Los Angeles, the Crown Vaudeville Theatre on West Colorado street, Pasadena, has closed its doors. No announcement has been made as to when it will reopen. The amount involved is $299.30, and the writ was applied for by Albert Mercer, assistant cashier of the Crown City National Bank. The theatre is owned by a syndicate of men, of whom the leader is I. Margolis, a Los Angeles Democratic politician.

G. D. Porter, who has been managing the theatre, has left it and will go on the road with a sketch of his own.

An amusing incident occurred at the National Theatre this week. William Barry, the tough boy with the Ten Happy Youngsters, complained to a number of his associates that the music for his clog dance was too high, and he was advised to speak to the drummer about it, which he did, and the party, seeing the joke, replied that the only way he could make it lower would be to take out two beats. "Well den take 'em out, I gotter have dat music lower." The music is now satisfactory, and he says that the only way to have anything done is to see about it yourself.

The prop stove carried by Eugene Ellsworth and used by him in his act, His Day Off, has been the cause of a great amusement in its travels around the country. Upon his opening engagement here Mr. Ellsworth asked a big burly expressman to help him carry the stove upon the stage, which he obligingly pro-

Vaudeville Notes

J. C. Bloom, the genial and well known head of the firm of J. C. Bloom & Co., jewelers, Denver, Colo., is registered at the St. Francis with his wife on a pleasure tour of the coast. Mr. Bloom is one of those fellows you like to meet and is well known among members of the profession, who are always assured of a cordial reception at his hands whenever visiting his home city. Mr. Bloom at one time managed one of the largest houses in the East, but finds the jewelry business a more reliable source of income and is always pleased to see anyone in the profession at any time.

Mathew Ott, with Ott's players at the Empire Theatre this week, claims to have given Richard Carle his first professional engagement, which was in the Star Gazer with Ott Bros., at the old California Theatre about twelve years ago.

A newspaper in Portland recently advised the Two Scotch Macks, playing the Empire this week, to brush up on their Scotch dialect. As they happen to be from Glasgow, Scotland, they are wondering if the dialect of their native country has changed since they left home.

Ott's Players at the Empire this week open in Troy, N. Y., on Keith & Proctor's circuit, April 19.

Miss Sarah Louise Cogswell, the talented young vocalist at the National this week, is the granddaughter of William Cogswell, who accomplished the ambition of his life (that of painting the portrait of every Governor of the state) shortly before his death about two years ago. The portrait of Governor Pico and others were copied from authentic photos. Mr. Cogswell's full length portrait of Lincoln is shortly to be placed in the National Gallery over Washington. The original is at present hanging in the White House. Miss Cogswell's father and mother were well known on the operatic stage under the names of William Gardner and Madama Ussini.

Darrell Vinton and Reta Villiers have returned to vaudeville again and hope to be back in California before the season is over.

Luttringer & Lucas continue their success with Harry Cottrell's sketch, A Girl of the West. They are playing in Everett, Wash., this week.

The Ambitions of the Ten Happy Youngsters

The following is the consensus of opinion of the Ten Happy Youngsters, under the management of J. P. Phillips at the National Theatre this week, as to what their aim in life is. The opinions are couched in their own words.

A. Smith—I want to be a character comedian as I think it is the thing now, and will be greater.

William Barry—I want to be as good a buck and wing dancer with my partner, Frank Checkio, as the Gleasons are.

Frank Checkio—I desire to be a leading man because I am not good for a comedian.

Chas. Wood—All I have to say is that I want to be one David Warfield and nothing else. If I don't make good in two or three years I will go home and book out in slapstick.

Lucille Leonard—I hope some day to be a star on Broadway in musical comedy.

Henrietta Howard—I trust I will some day be a good contortionist.

Alice Rogers—I want to be a character comedienne.

Vinnie Phillips—I want to make a hit like Eva Tanguay.

Mary Garden Victim of Vile Slanderers

New York, March 29.—Mary Garden, the prima donna, is vehement in her declaration that the story from Chicago about her having given birth to a child in Paris and having attempted suicide is an utter fabrication. These scandalous reports about her she attributes to Mrs. David Mayer of Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Mayer became interested in Miss Garden when, as a girl, she sang in Chicago, and they advanced funds for her musical and operatic training in Paris, in all about $20,000. When they came to New York to see Miss Garden at the Manhattan Opera House some time ago, the prima donna, it is said, snubbed Mrs. Mayer. Later in anger they demanded repayment of the money advanced eleven years before. Miss Garden states that she not only sent a check for the full amount, but also for eleven years' interest, although no note was given. "I preferred to pay rather than haggle in the courts," Miss Garden said, and hoped that the claims of those people would be ended; but now they pursue me with ugly, vile untruthful accusations. I will now take this matter up with my attorneys and silence the venomous tongue of that remorseless woman. I do not say that I have lived the life of a saint, of a nun or a debutante, for I have lived life. I have had my loves; I have had great joy; I have been in the depths of tremendous sorrows; but in all my life I have never had a child. If I had, that little one would be here at my side. I am no coward."

Chicago, March 29.—Mrs. David Mayer, patroness of Mary Garden, whom she financed into fame and fortune, today said: "Why, it is true, every word of it—what Mary says. She has been the victim of malicious gossipers. She has been outraged. I hope that she will punish her traducers." In Miss Garden's statement it appeared to Mrs. Mayer, as she analyzed it, that the singer thought that her patroness had given publicity to the insinuations which she so resented. "I know that Mary Garden has never been a mother. That story was told to me in Paris four years ago. I received it again in letters from malicious busy-bodies. Mary and I had several very hearty laughs over it. But as we both knew it to be groundless, we did not treat it seriously. "She has been ungrateful. I saw her first a wee slip of a girlie here in Chicago, with undeveloped talent and a world of temperament and no means. I grew tremendously interested in her. I helped her. I supplied for her the money and the encouragement that she needed, and I even extended to greater lengths the favors that I had pledged in my hours of greatest enthusiasm. Now, look at her. She is the most worshipped star of a continent. Her name adorns the first pages and her income is, I am told, $100,000 a year. And with what am I rewarded by her for making these triumphs possible? I am snubbed by her, and she gives forth statements saying that she had never descended to social relations with me. But, with all these things, I share her sorrow over the unfortunate allegations made against her by a gossip who has forgotten consideration and forgotten the essential elements of truth and decency. It is cruel and pitiful. I am sincerely sorry for Mary Garden, and in this respect I wish to extend to her my deepest sympathy."

Alcazar Theatre

Ever since Are You a Mason attained its celebrity as a mirthmaker the Alcazar management has utilized it for their offering during the last week of Lent, and this year there will be no exception to the rule, as the famous farce is announced for next Monday evening. Nothing funnier was ever written for the stage than Are You a Mason. It packed the old Alcazar Theatre to the doors the night before the memorable April 18th, and it did the same thing during its run last spring in the Sutter street house. That it will be witnessed by crowded audiences at every performance next week is a foregone conclusion, for the demand for its revival has been unprecedented in strength. There will be little or no change in the cast from that which gave the farce such excellent treatment a year ago. You will again see Bertram Lytell as the young benedict who gets himself and other folk into all kinds of ridiculous situations by pretending he is a Free Mason; Ernest Glendinning, as the accommodating youth who obliges his friend by masquerading as a modiste, and has much fun and several mishaps; John B. Maher, as the man from Illinois, who for twenty years has falsely led his confiding wife to believe that his nights were spent in a Masonic lodge instead of less reputable places; Burt Wesner as the "rube," who is put to all kinds of severe physical and mental tests to prove that he is eligible to become a Mason; Howard Hickman as the unscrupulous fakir who takes advantage of every opportunity to profit at the expense of those who trust him; Adele Belgarde as the jealous wife who regards Masonry as a protector of the domestic hearth; Louise Brownell as the loving young bride, and Bessie Barriscale and Effie Bond as her vivacious maiden sisters. To miss witnessing Are You a Mason next week would be to deprive yourself of provocation to laugh such as is seldom offered.

The Orpheum

The program at the Orpheum for the week beginning this Sunday matinee possesses an extraordinary interest. Its chief new feature will be the prima donna, Mlle. Zelig de Lussan. She will be heard in several of her most celebrated operatic selections and in some favorite ballads. S. Miller Kent will present a short comedy by Edgar Allen Woolf, entitled Marriage in a Motor Car. It tells the story of an impromptu wedding for mercenary reasons, which, after a series of amusing complications, results in happiness. Mr. Kent, as Harold Matthews, the husband, is most happily cast and is admirably supported by Donah Benrimo, a San Francisco girl who has won for herself an enviable reputation in the East. Dorothy Keane, a vivacious and engaging comedienne, will also assist Mr. Kent. Joly Violetta, the Parisian beauty and danseuse, will make her first appearance in this city and will be assisted by M. Armand, a Brazilian dancer. Violetta presents her act in two parts, the first being a series of parodies and the second characteristic Brazilian dances. Elsie Faye, Miller and Weston will introduce what they term The Act Dainty which introduces Miss Faye and her associates in very attractive songs and dances. Next week will be the last of Tom Nawn & Co., who will appear in the one-act farce, The Politician. It will also conclude the engagement of Charles Matthews, the champion jumper of the world, the Four Casting Dunbars and the delightful Melani troupe. A new series of Orpheum motion pictures will terminate what bids fair to be one of the best bills in the history of the Orpheum.

American Theatre

Daniel Sully will be seen in his lovable and amusing characterization of Father Daly in the quaint comedy drama, The Matchmaker, for the last times Saturday afternoon and evening and at the Sunday matinee the Black Patti Troubadours, headed by Sissieretta Jones, the Black Patti, will begin a week's engagement in their two-act musical comedy, The Blackville Strollers. Mme. Jones, the Black Patti, the vocal star of the organization and a great favorite in San Francisco where she has sung herself into favor time and again, is the most gifted singer of her race. Black Patti and the Troubadours, through their refined and enjoyable stage performances, have added much to the

Rob Roy Shows Just What is Valuable in New York Show News

NEW YORK, March 28.—In the New Amsterdam Theatre last week another novelty of Mr. Robert Mantell's season was presented when he appeared here for the first time as Louis XI in the play of that name, already made famous by Sir Henry Irving and Richard Mansfield. The crucial test of the play is in the acting of the death scene, which Mr. Mantell played with a dignity and freedom from affectation that deeply stirred his audience. It was a great moment in a performance that had been well acted throughout by all the players. In the earlier scenes the star was not quite so convincing, but that was perhaps the fault of the play rather than the player, for the character is drawn from sources that make a notable king a most unworthy character—one so inconsistent that his very malignancy makes the audience laugh instead of shudder at his malevolence. Fritz Leiber was a spirited Duc de Nemours, George Stillwell, a most sympathetic figure as the Dauphin and Guy Lindsley convincing as Philip de Commynes. As Marie, the daughter, Marie Booth Russell was a lovely figure and recited her lines with much beauty. Altogether it was a well founded performance, well staged. The actors were recalled nearly a score of times. * * * Mr. and Mrs. Newlywed and their baby held their first reception in this city last Monday up in the Majestic Theatre, and if there had been any doubt as to how New York would greet them the first ten minutes settled it. New York—at least as much of it as could crowd into the Majestic's big auditorium—liked The Newlyweds and Their Baby, and little Napoleon's nurse, and his doctor, and his auntie, and his would-be uncle, and all the small army of retainers of the Newlywed household, and even the cruel abductor of the baby, and especially the abductor's wofully intoxicated brother. Certainly there were enough persons concerned in the authorship of the comedy to warrant good results, for the book is credited to Messrs. Aaron Hoffman, Paul West and Seymour Brown and the music to Messrs. Nat D. Ayer and John W. Bratton, all founded on the cartoons of Mr. Geo. McManus. These numerous authors call their production a chuckling, bubbling comedy, with music. There are many bright, snappy, and catchy songs, and when the audience filed out one-half were whistling and the other half were humming. Of course William Clifton, as Newlywed, and Ruby Ray, as his wife, were much in the centre of the stage, but it is no injustice to them to say that when James E. Rosen was on hand, either as the baby Napoleon or as Major Knott Much, he was distinctly "It," with a capital "I." Mr. Norton, both in singing and dancing had a lot to do and did it well, while Flavia Arcaro, Irving Brooks and George R. Murphy helped greatly to keep the fun going. The chorus was well trained, the costumes fetching, the dancing good, and the whole thing handsomely staged. * * * In the Studebaker Theatre, Chicago, last Monday, Dustin Farnum presented a new version of Cameo Kirby by Mr. Booth Tarkington and Mr. Harry Leon Wilson, the original version of which was introduced earlier in the season by Nat C. Goodwin. The audience gave every evidence of enjoying greatly Mr. Farnum's portraiture of the Mississippi gambler. He was happily supported by James Lackaye, May Buckley and M. V. Snyder. * * * New York theatre goers last week had their first view of that much discussed play, An Englishman's Home, which created a sensation in London. The work of Major Guy Du Maurier, of the British army, and pointing out the alleged weakness of England's defenses against an invading army, the effect of the play was startling. The play was produced here by Mr. Charles Frohman, in the Criterion Theatre, last Monday. The audience was highly interested and there was great applause. The company is headed by William Hawtrey, who played the role of Mr. Brown and gave a convincing impersonation of the British bulldog. J. H. Benrimo was impressive as Prince Yoland, head of the invading army. Nellie Thorne and Nellie Malcom were typical as the daughters of the Mr. Brown, and the one touch of romance and sentiment was borne by Dallas Anderson, who acted the role of a volunteer. The stage management was excellent. * * * The Fortune Hunter, by Winchell Smith, will be produced in the Gaiety Theatre April 12 by Messrs. Cohan and Harris. The cast will include Messrs. Forest Robinson, Sydney Ainsworth, J. Charles Brownness, Misses Mary Ryan, Kathryn Marshall, Alice Parkes Warren and Hale Hamilton. * * * Declaring many musical farces now consist principally of "obscene posture and vulgar exposure," Rabbi M. H. Harris last night opened a discussion of the question "How can we suppress indecent and obscene plays and posters?" at a conference held by the Society for the Prevention of Crime. Rabbi Harris was followed by Canon Chase, Dr. Edward T. Devine of the Charity Organization Society, and other speakers, including Mr. Bernard S. Deutsch of the East Side Civic League, whose resolution calling for the formation of a committee, which is to call on theatrical managers and proprietors of newspapers in this city in the interest of the crusade against objectionable plays, was adopted unanimously. Mr. Frank Moss, president of the Society for the Prevention of Crime and presiding officer at the conference held in the United Charities Building, was authorized to appoint this committee. One of the objects of the committee will be to try to persuade the newspapers to give little or no space of any kind to objectionable plays. A suggestion made by Dr. E. T. Devine that the city maintain a permanent Board of Censors, to be composed of three or five citizens, with power to prevent the production of immoral plays, was not acted on. "Such a commission would have the same power in its field as the Municipal Art Commission has," said Dr. Devine. "Its acts would be legal. I do not approve of attacking this evil with the wrong weapons. I believe Mayor McClellan was wrong when he closed all the moving picture shows. We must discriminate between the good and bad, and that discrimination should be made by a body legally constituted." Canon Chase urged his hearers to work for the passage by the Legislature of the Travis-Murphy bills, which are directed against improper plays and posters. The Rev. M. J. Lavelle sent word last night that he would represent Archbishop Farley at one of the meetings to be held later.

ROB ROY.

Spotlights

A great novelty is promised at the American Theatre beginning Sunday afternoon, April 25, when a season of old-fashioned minstrelsy and clever burlesque will be inaugurated. Elaborate first parts, with the leading lights of minstrelsy as end men and the foremost male vocalists of the day as singers will be given, to be followed by bright and snappy burlesques, participated in by twenty-five comely and clever girl comediennesses, singers and dancers. The principals are now being engaged in New York and when the list of names is announced, great will be the surprise of lovers of fun and music in San Francisco.

The members of the Valencia Stock Company, augmented by several new stage favorites and any number of clever child performers, are devoting themselves heart and soul to the forthcoming production of Peter Pan, Barrie's delightful fantasy of the Boy who wouldn't grow up, and the Never, Never Land. Stage Director George Foster Platt expresses himself as being greatly satisfied at the progress made at rehearsals and promises a production that will be a revelation to local theatre goers when the curtain goes up on the Home of the Darlings at the matinee Easter Sunday.

The music incidental to the production of Peter Pan at the Valencia Theatre will be identical in every respect with that played at the Maude Adams presentation at the Van Ness Theatre two years ago. Herman Heller, who was then the musical director at the Van Ness, now waves his baton over the Valencia musicians and he and his men are going to play fairy music to "beat the band."

So great has been the success of Frances Aymar Mathews' delightful comedy drama, Pretty Peggy, at the Valencia Theatre that the management has decided to continue its presentation for half a week longer, the final performances being Wednesday afternoon and evening. The house will be closed the remainder of the week. Maundy Thursday, Good Friday and Holy Saturday, re-opening at the matinee Easter Sunday with a splendid production of Peter Pan.

The censorship of the theatre was brought about in England through the audacity of Fielding, who wrote a play which satirized Sir Robert Walpole, who was Prime Minister of England, and who introduced the famous act of 1737, licensing the theatre.

The Elleford Company Leaves for Honolulu Today

The popular Pacific Coast favorites, the Elleford company, under the direction of W. J. Elleford, left today for Honolulu on the steamer Alameda for an extended engagement. Mr. Elleford is one of the few managers who makes a success of the island trip, as his company is a prime favorite with the theatre goers of that city. In truth, we may say, he is the only manager who has demonstrated the ability to please the Honolulu people. The company, which is considered to be one of the strongest that this popular manager has had, is composed of Pietro Sosso, Lawrence Underwood, George Hernandez, Lloyd E. Edwards, Ray B. Collins, Clarence Ferguson, Norman Whisler, Frank Wyman, Auda Due, Mattie Lloyd Luce, Anna Dodge, Margaret Marriott, Maude Estelle, the two clever Osborn children and Mrs. Ida Osborne. The REVIEW wishes them a pleasant voyage, a great big business, and a safe return.

Calvin Heilig Is to Build a New Theatre in Portland in the Near Future

Portland, March 29.—HEILIG THEATRE (Cal Heilig, mgr.; Wm. Pangle, res. mgr.)—This house has been dark since the engagement of Girls, but reopens the 1st of April, with Theodore Roberts and Guy Standing in The Right of Way. Following this bill, Askin-Singer's The Girl Question will be offered. It was announced this week that Mr. Heilig had closed a lease on the northwest corner of Seventh and Taylor streets with Ashley Vantine, the owner, for the erection of a new theatre at that location. The premises are admirably located for that purpose as being very near the heart of the city.

BUNGALOW THEATRE (Geo. L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—Leah Kleschna is this week's bill at this house. It was presented for the first times yesterday at matinee and evening to packed houses. This is the second time that the Bakeronians have essayed this play, last season being the first time. Our first introduction to the play was by Mrs. Fiske and we all remember what an excellent production that was. When the Bakeronians played it last season Lillian Lawrence played Leah, and we all said it was one of the best pieces of acting that lady had ever given us. In yesterday's bill Izetta Jewel played the name part and got through with it in fairly good shape. The hit of the play, however, is again made by James Gleason. Jimmie was the hit also of last season, in the role of Schram. His portrayal of the part and his make-up were nigh perfect, and, of course, although we do not like to compare with the originator of that part, we must admit that the younger Gleason has nothing to be ashamed of. Next to James Gleason, Donald Bowles is worthy of mention as Raoul Berton. Bowles did this part last year and his playing of the role this year is equal to his previous effort—and that means it is first-class. William Gleason was good as Leah's father. Sydney Ayers got all there was possible out of the part of Paul Sylvaire. The play gives ample scope to the management in the scenic line, and of course it is well attended to. Next week—David Harum.

BAKER THEATRE (George L. Baker, mgr.; Milton Seaman, bus. mgr.)—This house will be dark for this week, but reopens shortly with The Gingerbread Man.

ORPHEUM THEATRE (J. E. Ericson, mgr.)—The management of this house are entitled to congratulations for the excellence of the past week's bill, stars of all kinds were included in the list. The offering headed off with Mlle. de Lussan, one of the very best song birds, and she was enough to pack the house at every performance. A short time ago she was here in concert and asked two and a half plunks, now we got her for seventy-five cents top price, and besides got seven other first-class acts. Next to the headliner, S. Miller Kent and company were the feature in their playlet, Love in a Motor Car. Jolly Violetta is also worthy of more than passing mention. This week's bill includes: Adeline Dunlap and company in The Night of the Wedding; Lottie Gladstone; The Misses Milch; The Sandiwans; Gordon and Marx; Harry L. Webb; and Frobel and Ruge.

LYRIC THEATRE (Keating & Flood, mgrs.)—The stock company offered Arthur Aiston's Shadows on the Hearth for yesterday's bill, and the play was much enjoyed by all witnessing it. The stock company did itself proud in the play, and the stage settings were more than ordinary. Herbert Ashton and Lillian

Opening of Idora Park

Idora, "the park beautiful," of Oakland, will inaugurate the season of 1909, Easter Sunday, in a very auspicious manner. During the winter months fully one hundred men have been actively engaged in making alterations, erecting new buildings and in divers ways beautifying the park. As to the attractions which will be given during the coming season, may be mentioned Patrick Conway (Gilmore's successor), and his band of fifty-one soloists, which will come direct from New York city to the opening. This is one of the greatest musical organizations in this country, and numbers among its soloists seven of the most famous artists in this country. The Peerless say that no circus that is proverbially noted for its "billing" will have a look in. The country will be covered for miles around, and nothing will be left undone to make Idora the great amusement place for the masses. Frederick Niles Innes and his band of 65 artists will follow Conway. Paine's Vesuvius and Carnival of Venice, with 450 people, will be one of the attractions during the week of May 10. Following them will be a big Wild West show for three weeks time. Big events and only big ones will have a hearing at Idora this season. The success of the undertaking is practically assured under the new order of things. J. H. B. Fitzpatrick, the well known amusement manager, is in charge of the department of publicity and he also arranges all of the free acts, bands, special events, etc.

Actors' Fund News

New York, March 26.—The Actors' Fund Registration Bureau has surpassed all expectations up to the present time; another busy week and Mr. McGrath reports an increase of one hundred annual members, seventy-five registrations and five new life members. A complete list of life members will be given to the dramatic papers next week. There are now three hundred names enrolled on the life membership list, and the Board of Trustees hope to increase the number to at least five hundred by May 1st. The cost of life membership is $51.00, which includes registration in the Bureau. Three dramatic weeklies have been added to the file of papers now in the reception and reading rooms, and one hundred and fifty books have been added to the library collection.

Blanche Stoddard Goes to Salt Lake

Blanche Stoddard will leave again for Salt Lake Thursday morning at the completion of the run of Pretty Peggy at the Valencia Theatre, to begin a limited starring engagement with Willard Mack's stock company at the Colonial Theatre in that city. Her opening bill on Easter Sunday will be, by special arrangement with Arthur C. Aiston, owner of the play, Pretty Peggy.

New Play by San Franciscans

A brand new American play, by two American authors, and San Franciscans at that, will be produced for the first time on any stage at the American Theatre Sunday afternoon, April 18th. It is called Right's Might, and is by the well known actor, Frank McGlynn, and the baseball magnate, Jack Gleason. Those who have been fortunate enough to read the manuscript predict a brilliant career for the play, which contains a beautiful love story thrown into a political atmosphere. It is in four acts and will be interpreted by a splendid company of prominent actors, including Mr. McGlynn.

LaFemmeX, The Dramatic Sensation

Reports from abroad say that Henry W. Savage will produce in London La Femme X, Bisson's powerful French play, before it is seen in New York. It is also reported that Mr. Savage has engaged Mrs. Patrick Campbell for the title role. La Femme X is the dramatic sensation of the year at the Porte St. Martin Theatre in Paris, and, strangely enough, has duplicated its success in Berlin. Americans returning from the continent predict that La Femme X will be another sensation when it reaches this country. It has furnished Mme. Jane Hading perhaps her greatest emotional part and one in which she is thrilling her audiences as no other continental actress is able to do. Her powerful portrayal of the leading role is described as being so realistic that it caused a tragic interruption of the drama at a recent matinee performance. A man of 74, named Letang, sitting in the third row of the stalls, suddenly sprang to his feet. He was very much excited by the play and shouted to the judge in the trial scene that the prisoner (Mme. Jane Hading) was fainting and ought to be allowed to leave the court. "You are torturing an unfortunate woman," he shouted, and as he said the words he broke a blood vessel and fell dead in the theatre. The trial scene is near the close of the play, and is the sensational scene that has given the play so much free advertising. Any actress playing Le Femme X has her work cut out for her. At one part of the play Madame X is a beautiful young woman of twenty, but shortly thereafter she must appear a woman of forty-five, able to picture the tragic agonies of a lifetime, all within the brief space of a few minutes. Mr. Savage has not announced who will play the part in America.

Primrose Can't Lose The Habit

Here's a "P. A." yarn which has come out of Sioux City, Ia., via the offices of the Orpheum New York publicity bureau. It has to do with the old-time minstrel man's penchant for a morning parade and concerns most intimately, George Primrose. Whether it's the "real truth" or not, it's funny, and if "real" will serve to warn local vaudeville managers what they may expect when the redoubtable Primrose makes his appearance. "You can't teach an old dog new tricks, and you can't convince George Primrose that a daily parade at 11:45 is not essential to the proper artistic development of any highbrow actor. For nearly a half century Primrose has so arranged his engagements that he might step into line in front of the local op'ry house or principal hotel and make a tour of the factories within the town limits. Since his entrance into vaudeville the veteran minstrel has missed this daily stimulant. In Sioux City last week he complained bitterly to David Beehler, the resident manager of the Orpheum Theatre, and tearfully announced that without a parade he was afraid he must abandon his tour. Beehler, being an accommodating manager, determined to humor Primrose, and arrangements for a parade were immediately put into execution. At 11:45 the following morning a brass band, several carriages, a tally-ho, two billposters' wagons and the entire staff of the Orpheum stood in front of the theatre, awaiting Primrose's pleasure. The line of march included the principal business streets. Primrose and Beehler were at the head of the procession, and when they returned to the Orpheum, weary and footsore, for the matinee performance, Primrose declared that he had not so thoroughly enjoyed himself since the day he heard that Jim Decker had fallen from the roof of the Flat Iron Building."

J. J. Shubert Coming and Sensational Papers Predict Big Theatrical War

J. J. Shubert arrived in Los Angeles last week in his private car, and his utterances given to the newspaper writers offer some reason to fear a bitter contest for the booking business of the West. Mr. Shubert says he will have houses in Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Victoria and Butte, and that he has secured the American Theatre in this city. The last statement Manager Abe Cohn denies most emphatically. To the editor of THE DRAMATIC REVIEW Mr. Cohn, who only returned from New York a few days ago, said that Mr. Shubert did not have the American, but that he would have a theatre in San Francisco. Furthermore, the Shuberts had asked for his house and had announced they had $20,000,000 to put up a fight in the West in opposition to the Klaw & Erlanger interests. However, Mr. Cohn said his house would book the syndicate shows next season, through John Cort as usual. Mr. Cohn admitted he had plans for a new theatre all ready and a site practically settled upon. Next week the DRAMATIC REVIEW will have the full import of Mr. Shubert's visit here.

Gertie Hayes Hoffman's Brother a Public Charge

John R. Hays, a consumptive patient at the County Hospital, who, as told in The Bee last night, is a brother of the famous Salome dancer, Gertrude Hoffman, and who was lately discovered in his present plight by his mother, who has promised to aid him to get to Arizona, has taken occasion to deny the statements he made in an interview yesterday to a Bee reporter. His remarks during the interview were decidedly sensational. In the presence of Stewart Weikel and a number of patients Hay gave the following running, disconnected interview in part: "I want to go to Arizona. It is merely a misunderstanding with my family, that is all. There isn't any story in it. It is merely a family trouble. The trouble arose with my brother-in-law, Max Hoffman. We cannot agree. He married my sister, Gertrude Hoffman, the Salome dancer. You know her. She was barred from dancing in Kansas City and is playing to packed houses. Her husband is musical director of the 'Mimic World.' They get big salaries. I think he has intercepted my letters to my sister. From her replies she doesn't know anything about my condition. She doesn't seem to have received any of my letters, and I can't explain her action other than that her husband is interfering with the mail. Don't say anything about that, because it might complicate matters in my getting some money to go to Arizona with. I don't want anything said about Hoffman in the papers. My mother lives with my sister, but there was the misunderstanding with her. I want to get enough money to take me to Arizona. My lungs are affected, and I think I could get well if I reached Arizona. I am doing as well as I could here, but want to get away as soon as possible. As soon as my mother hears about my condition I think I will receive the money. Be sure and say nothing about Hoffman taking my letters, for I don't want anything to happen that I won't get this money and get away to Arizona." When seen at the hospital today Hays admitted that the story as printed in The Bee last night was correct. He had come downtown in the evening, some one had joshed him about it, he had taken a few drinks and then taken it into his head to deny it. Stewart Weikel was also willing to testify that Hays was correctly quoted by The Bee.—Sacramento Bee.

WHEN Daniel Sully opened a telegram March 28 at the American Theatre he thought it was from his wife in Woodstock, N. Y. It was a message announcing the death of his mother in Newport, R. I. He did not even know that she had been sick, and smiled as he tore the envelope open. Sunday was the occasion of his silver wedding anniversary, and he thought the wire was a message of good cheer and love from his partner of twenty-five years. Manager W. D. Reed broke a rule when he gave him the message, but he knew of the anniversary date and thought the contents of that envelope would cheer his star's heart. So he gave it to him in the middle of the second act, within a few minutes of the time when Sully had to take his cue and go on again as the jovial-hearted priest. Mr. Sully went on and played, though his associates observed that the tears which some of the scenes demand were real that afternoon.

Moving Pictures Have Censors in N. Y.

New York, March 29.—The experiment of a public censorship for the theatre is to be tried on the 355 moving picture show places in this city. A board of five censors, one of whom is a woman, has begun work. Three represent civic organizations and two represent the moving picture men. This first board of theatrical censors for New York City consists of these persons: John Collier of the People's Institute, chairman; Mrs. Josephine Redding, formerly secretary of the Woman's Municipal League; Albert Shields, District Superintendent of the Public Schools; Joseph E. Driscoll and O. J. Lamburger. The board was appointed as the result of a compact between the moving picture men and educational societies. The five censors are to be unofficial, but their rulings will be absolutely binding. The Moving Picture Association of New York, which controls 355 show places, has joined with ethical bodies to weed out the "rat-holes" among the shows and raise the standard. The People's Institute took the leading part in the establishment of the board. The meeting at which the censors were selected was held in the City Club five days ago, and the Board of Censors has opened headquarters at 318 East Fifteenth Street. Inspectors from the Parkhurst Society will watch the moving picture shows to see whether they obey the censors' rules. John Collier, chairman of the board, when asked what sort of pictures the censors would bar from the shows, replied: "Crime pictures and those of immoral tendency. We will also cut out all objectionable songs. We propose to do our work in the factories, not in the show places. The only thing lacking to make the censorship complete now is the consent of the Motion Picture Patents Co. This company makes 150 miles of picture films a day, and has been called the trust. Its directors will let us know next Tuesday whether the company will come in, but we feel sure it will. All the independent film makers have consented, and those who do not will have trouble." A board of governors is in control of the movement. Its members include Miss Evangeline A. Whitney, Mrs. Jos. M. Price, Mrs. Serena Townsend and Mrs. Redding.

Show Troopers, Please Note New Automobile Rules

The following is the new code agreed upon by the Farmers' Anti-Auto Protective Society, which has just held annual conventions in the different states in the Union.

1—On discovering an approaching team, the automobilist must stop on the off-side and cover his machine with a tarpaulin painted to correspond with the scenery.

2—The speed limit on country this year will be secret, and the penalty for violation will be $10.00 for every mile an offender is caught going in excess of it.

3—In case an automobile makes a team run away the penalty will be $50.00 for the first mile, $100.00 for the second mile, $200.00 for the third mile, etc., that the team runs; in addition to the usual damages.

4—On approaching a corner where he cannot command a view of the road ahead, the automobilist must stop not less than 100 yards from the turn, toot his horn, ring a bell, fire a revolver, halloo, and send up three bombs at intervals of five minutes.

5—Automobiles must be seasonably painted—that is, so they will merge with pastoral ensemble, and not be startling. They must be green in spring, golden in summer, red in autumn, and white in winter.

6—Automobiles running on the country roads at night must send up a red rocket every mile, and wait ten minutes for the road to clear. They may then proceed carefully, blowing their horns and shooting Roman candles.

7—All members of the Society will give up Sunday to chasing automobiles, shooting and shouting at them, making arrests, and otherwise discouraging country touring on that day.

8—In case a horse will not pass an automobile, notwithstanding the scenic tarpaulin, the automobilist will take the machine apart as rapidly as possible, and conceal the parts in the grass.

9—In case an automobile approaches a farmer's house when the roads are dusty, it will slow down to one mile an hour, and the chauffeur will lay the dust in front of the house with a hand sprinkler, worked over the dashboard.

10—Theatrical troupers traveling in automobiles, upon entering a town, will at once order handbills from the town printer, announcing the first night's performance as being free, if the show is all right they will be allowed to show one more night. The next morning the company will be required to leave town at 3 a. m., so as to not interfere with traffic.

N. B.—Performers at any time meeting Prof. Faits kindly notify him of the above rules and regulations governing automobile traveling so that he will be able to govern himself accordingly.

Norris & Rowe Circus Registers Sharp Trick On Oakland Women

After having labored for weeks in the interests of the Fabiola circus benefit, nearly a score of the prominent society women of Oakland, headed by Mrs. Remi Chabot, Mrs. J. P. H. Dunn and Mrs. Mark Requa, awakened, at the conclusion of the final performance Wednesday night, to the bitter realization that their efforts had not earned a single dollar for the charitable institution. Six performances before crowds which were swelled with enormous free lists by the circus men failed to bring forth a five-cent piece under an arrangement that made it well nigh an impossibility for the hospital to increase its income in any degree and for the circus crowd to take away the entire patronage. Mrs. Dunn, who has had charge of the society workers, said: "The circus manager expressed regret that the attendance had been so poor, and thanked us for our co-operation." She is bitterly disappointed both at the outcome of the venture, the first of the kind in which Fabiola has participated, and at the ungenerous attitude of the circus management. Likewise, Mrs. Dunn's co-workers are disappointed and indignant. These women have devoted all of their time for weeks to the welfare of the benefit, and as the income of the show was greatly augmented by the indorsement of the Fabiola association, the opinion is commonly expressed that the circus managers at least should have presented a large check to the hospital. Upon what is pronounced by Mrs. Remi Chabot, president of the Fabiola Hospital Association, as misrepresentation relative to the seating capacity and income of the show, the authorities of the big institution were induced to enter an agreement, believing that as a result of the six performances a large sum would be realized toward the deficit occasioned by the construction of an addition. A contract was signed, giving to the circus $3250 of the proceeds of each day's (two) performances. The Fabiola authorities agreed to obtain the water and the city licenses free, while the circus consented to rent its own ground, although it attempted to get this also. All sums in excess of $3,250, up to and including $2500 (additional), were to go to Fabiola, while amounts over the second figure were to be evenly divided between the circus and the hospital association. Mrs. J. P. H. Dunn says that the circus men declared that in towns south of the bay as much as $5000 had been cleared by charitable institutions in similar ventures. It is said that conflicting tales were told concerning the seating capacity of the big tent, one being given to understand that it would hold 10,000, another 6000, and still another 5000.

Minstrels and Burlesque at the American

The American Theatre management has provided a decided novelty for the summer, beginning Sunday afternoon, April 25, when a season of high class minstrelsy and burlesque will be inaugurated. The very best stars obtainable in the burnt cork firmament will be brought from New York, with a constant succession of new faces every two weeks. For the opening week among other notables, Carol Johnson, The Beau Brummell of Minstrelsy, and a tremendous San Francisco favorite, has been engaged, as well as Emile Subers, one of the funniest end men and monologuists before the public. John King, the well known comedian, singer and dancer and the best wench impersonator extant, late a feature of George Cohan's Honey Boy Minstrels, will be another of the funmakers and among the vocalists will be Matt Keele, the San Franciscan who has become a famous tenor, and Will Oakland, the contra-tenor who made such a hit with Lew Dockstader's Minstrels last season. There will be a complete octette and megaphone chorus for the first part, and in the burlesque which follows there will be twenty-five pretty girls headed by Belle Gold, well remembered here from her work with McIntyre and Heath in The Ham Tree, and Ella Smith, a prima donna from Lew Field's company. Bobby Harris, also from the Field's company, will be the burlesque comedian.

Right's Might

Great interest is being manifested in the approaching production, for the first time on any stage, of Right's Might, the new play by two well known San Franciscans, Jack Gleason and Frank McGlynn. Scenery is being painted and rehearsals are in active progress, and the authors promise a most adequate presentation at the American Theatre, Sunday afternoon, April 11th. A capital company has been engaged, including Lansing Rowan, formerly heavy woman with the Frawley company; Maybelle Thompson, Ora Harris, Elaine Davis, Thomas MacLarnie, whose contract with the Valencia Theatre expires next week; Norval McGregor, Charles Place, Ralph Bell, Norman Phillips and a dozen others. Frank McGlynn, one of the authors and a sterling actor, will play a strong character part, Major Joel Hardy. The play has a strong love interest and political atmosphere and the third act, which takes place on the floor of a State Senatorial Chamber, is said to contain one of the strongest dramatic climaxes ever staged.

Actors' Fund Registration

The Actors' Fund Registration Bureau is an established fact, almost $3500 having been received through the bureau since its opening seven weeks ago, and Thomas McGrath, who has charge, asserts that, from the present outlook, by or before May 1 he will have turned into the treasury of the fund for new annual members, life members and registration at least $2000 more, which will make a total of almost $6000. The members of the theatrical world are certainly responding generously to the call for registration, and letters are coming in each day from prominent producing managers pledging their support and sympathy in the new departure and wishing it every success. Already the stock company managers are writing in for people for the summer season. It behooves all members of the profession who are not registered to attend to the matter at once.

ROSE ETYNGE has already retired from the Actors' Home on Staten Island. She was there almost a week.

Los Angeles Is Wondering What Jake Shubert's Visit Portends

LOS ANGELES, April 8.—Manager Oliver Morosco is being congratulated on all sides this week because of the tremendous success of Gay New York at the Burbank. Everyone connected with the production has been hard at work for days and the desired result has been attained. A long run is looked for.

Florence Smythe, who for some time was a member of the Belasco company, is playing leads with the Cook Stock Company at the Hartford Theatre, Hartford, Conn. Eleanor Carey and Florence Barker, well known through their work here, are also with the same company.

Dot Bernard, another local favorite, has joined the Vaughn Glaser Company in Detroit.

J. J. Shubert informs the people that the Shuberts are considering Los Angeles in their theatrical plans and much speculation has been aroused as to the possibilities of their entering this city.

Mrs. Fiske has closed a contract for the use of the Auditorium Theatre for the week of June 14, at which time she will present her present success, Salvation Nell.

After several years of successful musical comedy Fischer's First-street comedy cavern is to be converted into a vaudeville house, Manager E. A. Fischer having sold out his entire holdings. G. M. Smith and G. V. Warner are the new owners of the house. The former is a theatrical impresario of much experience from the East, having recently come from Lincoln, Neb., and will have the principal management of the theatre. Warner will be more or less of a silent partner. Efforts are to be made to furnish up-to-date, refined vaudeville acts, supplemented with moving pictures, and probably the name will be changed to the First Street Theatre. The new owners will take charge April 12, and have secured mainly local acts for the opening week. Herr Fischer is still uncertain regarding where he will hang out his bill board. He is considering removing to San Francisco, while there is a slight possibility of his opening up in the People's Playhouse on Main street.

AUDITORIUM—The Theatre Beautiful is dark this week. The Ben Greet players will appear the week of April 19 in Shakespearan repertoire.

BELASCO—Holy week seems to have no effect on the attendance at the Belasco Theatre for this the fifth week of The Dollar Mark. The management has been asked to continue this most successful play after Lent, but no decision has been made in the matter.

BURBANK—Once again we have Mr. Morosco's company in musical comedy and each one in the cast seems just fitted for this kind of work. In Gay New York, although seen in the East last year, has never been seen here before. It is a merry mixup with all the plot that is necessary and many good musical numbers. A. Byron Beasley is as much at home in this line of work as in the parts in which we are accustomed to see him. He has a good baritone voice and does not hesitate to use it. William Desmond makes his first appearance in musical comedy and he also makes a hit. Miss Margo Duffet shines here and her song, When I Marry You, is one of the hits of the performance. Miss Blanche Hall has several song numbers which she sings charmingly. There is also a Salome chorus in which 16 Salomes appear upon the stage in support of Miss Hall and Mr. Beasley. Charles Giblyn is cast in the eccentric role of Herman Schultz, a fashionable ladies' tailor. Mr. Giblyn is at home in musical comedy and he gets the full measure of laughs in the part. Henry Stockbridge is seen as a bell hop and is right in his element. Very excellent work is done by Lovell Alice Taylor, Louise Royce, Hale Studebaer and Jessie Mae Hall. The chorus, which has been especially organized for this production, does some very fine work; the costumes are new and attractive and the whole performance is most satisfactory.

MAJESTIC—Friends of Dick Ferris and Florence Stone are giving them a hearty welcome at the Majestic Theatre where they head a company in a production of Edwin Milton Royle's Friends. This is the play that made Royle famous, both as a playwright and actor. The work of Miss Stone as Marguerite Otto is all that we expect of this finished actress and further comment is not needed. Dick Ferris is just himself and comes in for his share of the applause. Of course he makes his usual speech; he would not be "Our Dick" if he didn't. La Cigale Ferris, his daughter, is making a very pleasing impression in the part of Miss Hartman. The supporting company is very good, each one handling his part well. William Yerance is cast as Hans Otto, Harry Mestayer as Adrian and Wills Marks as John Paden, Sr. The production is staged under the direction of Sedley Brown, who deserves much credit for its excellent showing he has made with but limited rehearsals.

GRAND—George Ade's Sultan of Sulu is the offering of the Ferris Hartman company at the Grand for the week. This play is too well known to require comment. It is very well handled by the producing company, in fact is one of the best things they have done. Mr. Hartman is particularly well suited to Frank Moulan's old part, Ki-Ram, the sultan. Oscar Walsh appears as Lieut. William Hardy and Christine Nielsen as Henrietta Budd, the colonel's daughter. Both are well cast and contribute some of the best solo and duet numbers in the piece. Miss Josie Hart makes an excellent Pamela Jackson and Muggins Davies is equally good as Chiquita, wife No. 1. Joseph Fogerty sings and acts well as Col. Jefferson and Walter De Leon is good as the sultan's secretary.

MASON—Large and fashionable audiences are paying tribute to "Fair Lillian" Russell this week at the Mason Opera House. Miss Russell is provided with a better play than usual. It is Wildfire, a racing comedy by George Broadhurst and George V. Hobart. Wildfire is a horse, the only property of a widow, Mrs. Barrington (Miss Russell). The action of the piece centers around Wildfire's accomplishments, the plots against Wildfire and the race which of course Wildfire wins. A small stable boy, a jockey, a villain, a character Englishman and several others comprise the supporting company. Wildfire is really second to his mistress as she holds the stage most of the time. The cast is in every way adequate and each one comes in for his share of the applause. The play itself is full of good comedy, brisk action and constant change. A most pleasing performance.

ORPHEUM—There are two exceptionally good acts on the Orpheum bill for the week. A Modern Pocahontas is a piece played by full-blooded Shoshone Indians, with the exception of two white characters which are taken by two white men. Pocahontas is played by the daughter of a Shoshone chief, who is known by her Carlisle name, Miss Emma Rainey. The Kitabanzai troupe of Japanese acrobats do some fine acrobatic work and some wonderful juggling. Six Little Girls and a Teddy Bear is an attractive singing and dancing skit. G. Herbert Mitchell springs some really new jokes and that is going some. The holdovers include Agnes Mahr, the Tommy Atkins dancer, Harry Foy's Spring of Youth sketch and Connelly and Webb.

LOS ANGELES—The Borsini troupe of equilibrists and acrobats give an unusually good exhibition at the Los Angeles Theatre this week. Their work includes head balancing, dancing on revolving globes and the simpler forms of tumbling. Tom Brantford, an exceptionally clever mimic, gives imitations of musical instruments, of a train of cars, and of several kinds of steamboat whistles. Carroll and Cooke haven't changed their act in the smallest detail since their last visit to Los Angeles. They're funny, however, and their talk makes good with the audience. Franklyn Ardell and company offer a new version of Boucicault's Confusion, which they term Catastrophe. Onetta, a young woman of considerable grace and much strength, dances in the whirlwind dervish fashion of the oriental-religious devotee, and Daly, The Mad Juggler, essays to prove that Sir Isaac Newton's discovery of the law of gravitation was not so important as it has been supposed, since Daly himself seemingly defies that law with impunity.

EMPIRE—The bill for the week at the Empire includes Somers & Storke in a comedy musical sketch, Will Brown with some of the latest songs and stories and a little dancing on the side, and La Nole brothers in a comedy acrobatic act. Miss Emma Elwood has some new selections and Al Franks has some new picture ballads.

FISCHER'S—Herr Fischer's little company are playing their last week in the First-street house, and very likely their farewell week in Los Angeles as Mr. Fischer is straining every nerve to locate in San Francisco. Mr. Alphin has chosen, as his final offering, In Poppyland. This play has been given before but with such marked success that it bears repeating. Ben T. Dillon is the broken down dope fiend and Max Bloom the eccentric Jew. Miss Raymond's two song hits are The Way to Win a Woman's Heart, which she sings in a duet with Dillon, and I Want to be a Lovelorn Juliet. Nellie Montgomery is featured in The Girl Worth the While, during which the chorus, dressed as girls of every nation, pass to and fro on the stage. Bloom sings I Don't Want to be an Actor Any More, and Tracy McDermott, The Eminent Dr. Pest.

UNIQUE—The General's Dilemma, a musical comedy in one act, under the direction of Frank B. Blair, is the week's bill at the Unique. The plot of the play has to do with a General Blowhard, who thinks he is a hero, and who has a young and attractive wife. There is also a gushing widow with a daughter who imagines that she is in love. Will H. Armstrong as the General has a comedy role and a parody entitled General Hardtack. John J. Martin gets a lot of laughs in his number Did He Run; Ben Sellar sings What Makes the World Go Round; Jack Curtis as Push Button, a bell boy, does some fancy dancing. Other musical numbers include The Long Green, by Miss Lillian Sutherland; The Tale of the Kangaroo, by Miss May Parker, and a quartet, Blew, Blew, Blew, by Misses Atkins and Sutherland and Messrs. Armstrong and Sellars.

WALKER—Manager J. Harry Pieper of the Walker Theatre offers a very entertaining bill this week. It is headed by Cummings Merley and company in a novel and amusing sketch. The Fowlers, head balancers and equilibrists present a unique act. Bessie Evans is a charming character comedienne, Robert Thomas is a card and coin manipulator, the Mizumo troupe are Japanese acrobats of merit. The Holy City, illustrated by moving pictures, is being presented this week. Also Joseph Manley sings an illustrated song entitled, Take a Trip Down to Luna With Me.

REGAL—In the bill at the Regal Theatre this week are Walter Wilson, champion buck and wing dancer; Leonard Kane, change artist; J. P. Wilde in illustrated monolog, and De Valle and Lotta, in a sketch.

FLORENCE D. EMERY.

Ethel Barrymore Is Married

Ethel Barrymore and Russell Griswold Colt were married at Hyde Park, Mass., on March 14th, by the Rev. Father James J. Chittick, rector of the Church of the Most Precious Blood, in the rectory of the church. John Barrymore and Roswell Colt were the only witnesses. After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was given at the home of John C. Fairchild at Dedham, where Miss Barrymore had spent Saturday night. Mr. Colt is twenty-six years old and makes his home in Boston. He is a son of Samuel Pomeroy Colt, president of the United States Rubber Company and of the Industrial Trust Company of Providence, R. I. The groom is a non-Catholic, and in order that the marriage might be solemnized in a Roman Catholic church four dispensations were necessary: One for a mixed marriage, a Lenten dispensation, one because the bride was married out of her own parish, and another because the groom had not been a resident of the parish for three weeks preceding the ceremony.

Fern & Mack writes: We have been meeting success since playing Pantages time. We open in Frisco, at the Empire next week or week after.

Tony Lubelski Gives Up His Reno Theatre

W. E. Sharp, for eight years musical director at the Novelty Theatre in San Francisco, last Monday took over Tony Lubelski's interest in the Novelty Grand Theatre, Reno.

Mr. Sharp will play musical comedy shows and book an occasional road attraction. The theatre was the last theatrical holding of Tony Lubelski, but Tony is in no wise oppressed, for he asserts he will have a new down town theatre in the city in less than six months.

Clune Vaudeville Circuit

Robert A. Brackett, who last week presented the announcement of the Clune Vodeville Circuit, something of especial interest to the theatrical public, spent the week in San Francisco. His coming here from Los Angeles means the acquisition of a new power in vaudeville and theatricals generally. His company owns and sells parks and theatres, books routes and operates a fine film service, and before many months this company will have its own new theatre in San Francisco.

Melvin Wienstock Leaves for Seattle

Melvin Wienstock, who has been the personal representative of Alex Pantages in California since the Pantages interests cut in here, has resigned and will leave for Seattle today. Mr. Wienstock will still be active in the vaudeville field and will represent a well known Eastern plunger in the conquest of Western vaudeville. Mr. Wienstock is sorry to leave and we're sorry to have him go. Last week, on the occasion of a birthday anniversary, the employees of Pantages Theatre here presented him with a valuable diamond ring. The new manager of Pantages Theatre will be W. J. Tiffany, who has been for years a leading factor in the councils of the Empire circuit. Mr. Tiffany is one of the most popular theatrical men ever connected with the game in California.

Correspondence

Astoria, April 4—Astoria Theatre (F. M. Hanlin, mgr.)—Tuesday and Wednesday, March 30-31, Tommy Getz's effusion, A Night in Bohemia, was given by local talent, for the benefit of the building fund of Astoria Lodge, No. 180, B. P. O. Elks. To say it was an immense success, both performances being crowded to the doors. To criticize an amateur show is indeed a hard thing to do some times, especially if you are connected with the profession, but in this instance the blasé professional can only humbly take his hat off to the amateurs, and say "You are all right." In the first place to take 75 or 80 young folks and drill them so that there is no confusion, and have everything run almost as smoothly as if they had been at the business for a long time, making no hitches, and none of the blunders that are so common in this class of entertainment, but going through every evolution of almost an intricate drill without a single hitch is remarkable, and this is what the young people in A Night in Bohemia did. But apart from the drills and choruses there were other features that make A Night in Bohemia a lasting memory, i.e., the really downright histrionic ability of the old Bohemian. This character is in itself a perfectly legitimate one, being an old retired actor on his sixty-fifth birthday, thinking of the happy past, and sadly brooding on being a forgotten quantity. This character, to my mind, was the shining part of the program, as it was portrayed by Wm. F. Gratke, who displayed every quality of the act, for, finished, easy and natural is his delineation of the character. The songs and specialties, drills and dances and general ensemble of the B. P. O. Elks' entertainment, A Night in Bohemia, was an absolute success, artistically, financially and generally. Theatre goers are now looking forward to the coming of the popular star, Norman Hackett, who appears here in De Mille's great success, Classmates, on the 24th. From the lasting impression he made when on tour with Louis James in the Merry Wives of Windsor, and The Merchant of Venice, no doubt he and his company will be greeted with a rousing business. Saturday, April 10, The Gingerbread Man will be the attraction, followed by Lillian Russell on the 14th.

Tacoma, Wash., April 3—The musical play in which Miss Florence Gear appeared at the Tacoma Theatre, March 28-29, was Marie Cabill's Marrying Mary, and has a distinct advantage over Cupid at Vassar in which Miss Gear appeared here last season. Miss Gear is personally pleasing and sings well. The supporting company was a good one, prominent among whom were Richard Karl, Harry B. Roche, Harry B. Roche and Hubert Campbell. Tacoma had her first chance at witnessing a Shubert production when the Fitch comedy, Girls, opened here last night. If this amusing and clean little comedy is a sample, the Shubert attractions will always be welcome here. The play was handsomely staged and entertaining to a degree.

Of the Girls, the Misses Toner and Jackson have appeared in both Girls and Girls with Miss Terry, male a charming trio. Girls has been a successful stage attraction for several plays. H. S. Northrup has often appeared in Tacoma and is always clever and painstaking; Evelyn Benson, Charles Brandt and E. A. Locke were all deserving of special mention. It is reported that J. J. Shubert is on his way to the Coast to establish a string of playhouses, and rumors here are to the effect that they will open a house in Tacoma. John S. Baker, who owns the property adjoining the Tacoma Theatre, has been approached by eastern theatrical interests to build a handsome playhouse on his ground, but no deal has been closed. It has been thought that this was perhaps a proposal from the backers of the Orpheum Circuit, whose vaudeville attractions do not appear in Tacoma as yet. Local opinion tends toward the idea that perhaps the Shuberts might take over the pretty little Savoy Theatre, a house which for some unknown reason has been an unfortunate venture since its erection. The second of Klaw & Erlanger's attractions to appear here this season will be The Right of Way, which opens here tomorrow night for two performances, after which the house will be dark until Sunday, April 11th, when Harry Beresford will give one performance of Who's Your Friend. Beginning Easter Sunday, the Star Theatre, which has been charging ten, twenty, and thirty, will raise their schedule of prices; the first nine rows of the lower floor will be given over to the fifty-cent seats, the balance of the house priced as before, and box seats, seventy-five. The old scale of prices will prevail for the matinees. Mr. Vin Moore, who was identified with the McRae players when they first opened here last summer, was in Tacoma this week visiting his old friends. Frenzied Finance, as demonstrated by the McRae players, was an absorbing drama, combined with some delightful comedy, provided by Jack McCabe and Marie Van Tassel and Denton Vane and Bertha Cordeau. The love scenes of the last named two are always ingeniously acted and never fail to please the Star's patrons. J. Brigham Percival gave a strong and convincing interpretation of the Governor, and in the role of his daughter, Miss Oswald, was sweet and womanly. Mr. J. Hooley, in an eccentric part, could hardly be improved upon. Miss Robeson made the part of the mother one of naturalness and dignity. Mr. Holuber, Mr. Ed Lawrence and Mr. Robert Lawrence were all good in their roles. The staging was effective and adequate, and the gowns displayed by the ladies of the company were attractive. Miss Oswald's particularly so. Next week, The Taming of the Shrew, with Miss Oswald as Katherine and Mr. McRae as Petruchio. At the Grand, Manuel Romaine is appearing again in Down Music Row and featuring new songs. He still has those clever dances, the Foley boys, with him, and Miss Palmer pleases with her song and dance. Another favorite, whose return is always pleasurable, is George Wilson, the minstrel comedian, who is always funny. The dancing of Miss Russell of the Glenroy and Russell team is a feature of the act. Al Carlisle exhibited some clever dogs and an unusually intelligent pony. Duff and Wilson sing and dance well, the acrobatic features being especially pleasing. At the Elks, Sahara, the mystifier of the Anna Eva Fay type, gave exhibitions of her skill. The Armanis, three men and two women singing in Italian, were one of the best of their kind I ever saw here since the appearance of the 8 Zingars. West and Mack, formerly with the Hi Henry Minstrels, had a good black-face act. Mr. Mack is a Tacoma boy and has been busily engaged all week being entertained by his friends. Wentworth and Vesta, as acrobatic clowns, furnished much amusement and were ably assisted by an incredibly bright dog. Hearn and Rutter offered an original and unique dancing stunt.

Laramie, Wyo., April 5—Florence Roberts was our only attraction last week. A. D. KINGSFORD.

Vancouver, B. C., March 30—Imagine an audience keyed to a high pitch of expectancy, a management nervous to the point of irritability, and an actress strained to breaking point, and you have the atmosphere of the Empress Theatre last night when the curtain rose on Under Two Flags. The work of the company was by far the best witnessed and each individual entered into the work with a vim that carried all before them. There was considerable interest taken in the presentation of the play, for it served to introduce Myrtle Vane, the new leading woman, and to say that she made good is putting it mildly. From her opening speech she captured all from the orchestra to the gallery, and her work guaranteed success from the start. Miss Vane is going to be a big favorite with local theatregoers, her voice is pleasing to the ear and she simply bubbles with action. Cigarette was the character to give her so favorable an introduction and when she started her mad drive through the gorge, all held their breath as the white charger sprang forward and carried the little lady up into the flies. Miss Vane has more than made good and we believe we are not far from the truth when we predict that before many weeks have passed she will have won the loyalty of all Vancouver. That she is also an accomplished vocalist was proven by the grand ring of a distance heard some that called for a burst of applause at its conclusion. Margarita Fischer was most pleasing as Venetia, and the balance of the company did excellent work. At the Lyric, George Howard and his company are playing A Rich Man's Home. RAY.

Norman Hackett Writes: After an absence of two years I think you can imagine what a pleasure it is to contemplate dear old Frisco again. I am to be at The American the week of April 11, in De Mille's successful play, Classmates, which Robert Edeson played five months in New York last year. I have the entire New York production (and a very beautiful one it is by the way), a nice company, and as it is my first appearance as a star in San Francisco I am naturally very anxious to make a favorable impression. I am glad to see the Review better and larger than ever. My season opened September 17 and will run until June—40 weeks. It has been a success beyond all expectations, and I am, of course, very much pleased and encouraged. I am to spend my summer abroad, and next year do Mansfield's Beau Brummel. Had fine success in Los Angeles, and am to appear next Saturday at the Greek Theatre, Berkeley, an honor I deeply appreciate, as I believe Bernhard, Maude Adams, and the Greek Players are the only other dramatic presentations ever given there. Have also been invited to address the University of California.

Frisco Johnny Williams writes: Editor Dramatic Review—My Dear Ed: To relieve the suspense of anxious enquirers, I will contradict the report that I was in advance of Emma Goldman and Tramp Capitalist, the Boom Jugglers, with a juvenile brass band and orchestra, but I made a successful tour with "Tedy" with a Trip to Africa, a dark complected company (they were born that way). Ten boys and ten girls with a remarkable brass band and orchestra. A successful tour which I booked, wild cat, wrote all press work, attended to printing, railroads, billing, ahead of company, and yet they say good agents are scarce. Try me; I am on the shelf like Macawber awaiting something to turn up. Yours in paste.

Raymond Teal

Mr. Teal, who for years has been known as a singing minstrel star of the first magnitude, being contemporary with Willis Sweatman and Dick Jose, is meeting with great success in the West at the head of his own company. Mr. Teal has gathered a clever company of musical comedy fun-makers under his banner, and today he presents the best musical comedy show at popular prices in the West. Everything about the show is first-class. The costumes are new, the singing is pleasing, the dancing is clever and the comedy is really funny. Mr. Teal carries twenty-six people in his company and is booked for a long season on the Coast, his time being booked by the Great Western Theatrical Circuit.

Modjeska Is Dead

LOS ANGELES, April 8.—Madame Helena Modjeska, the Polish tragedienne and one of the best actresses of the American stage, died at 10 o'clock today at her island home at Bay City, in Orange county, at the age of 65, after an illness of about two months. For several days she had been unconscious and her death almost hourly expected. Bright's disease, complicated with heart trouble, was the immediate cause of death. Gathered around the bedside of the noted actress when she passed away were Count Bozenta, husband of Madame Modjeska; Ralph Modjeska and his wife, a son and daughter-in-law, of Chicago, and Dr. J. C. Boyd, the family physician. The health of Madame Modjeska was in its usual state up to two months ago when she suddenly developed symptoms of Bright's disease. From that time she failed rapidly and scarcely left her bed after the first attack. The body of the actress was brought to this city tonight, accompanied by the husband, Count Bozenta, and the son, Ralph Modjeska. It will be placed in a vault here, where it will rest until it is taken to its final resting place in Cracow, Poland. Count Bozenta said that there is no cause for any apprehension that he will be denied the privilege of taking the body to Austrian Poland, in which province Cracow is. He said that the order of exile could apply only to Russian Poland. This order was issued by the czar, following the reading of a paper at the woman's parliament at the world's fair by Madame Modjeska.

More Fight Rumors

J. J. Shubert will be in town any day from Los Angeles, where he has been listening to propositions for a theatre. Nothing has been done there, for Mr. Shubert considers the prices asked altogether too high. He will meet the same conditions here, where real estate values are inflated beyond all reason. Coincident with the Shubert publicity out here, comes the following dispatch from New York: "New York, April 8.—Lee Shubert of the theatrical firm of Sam S. and Lee Shubert, Inc., and Max Anderson, who is connected with the Shuberts' management in the Hippodrome, today withdrew from the Theatrical Managers' Association of New York. Their reason for that act was that they felt they were not receiving fair treatment from the organization, which took up the grievances of other theatrical managers, but refused to help them in any of their fights. As the Shuberts next year will control fourteen theatres in this city, they expect to join with several independent theatrical managers in forming a rival association. The Shuberts are reported to be backed by wealthy men and rumor has it they have $10,000,000 ready for the battle." Like all theatrical news handled by the daily press, there may be some truth in the reports of a coming conflict and there may not be. Conservative observers, however, are of the opinion that there will be something doing in the West in the way of a rival circuit before many weeks have passed.

The Umpire at the Princess

The Princess offers an exceptionally strong attraction next Monday evening in the baseball musical comedy, The Umpire, which proved one of the greatest theatrical successes in the history of New York. The action of the play takes place in Tangier, Morocco, at a period when no extradition treaty existed between that country and the other nations of the world. This condition of affairs made it possible for fugitive criminals to reside in Morocco without danger of being arrested and deported to their native land for punishment. Fred Mace will appear as Jimmie Dolan, the umpire, which he played in the original production and May Boley will have a leading part.

Mrs. Saunders Celebrates Her 90th Anniversary

Mrs. Elizabeth Saunders, the exceedingly popular actress of the long ago, reached her ninetieth birthday last Sunday. For many years her anniversaries have been most lovingly celebrated by her friends, and until this year Mrs. Saunders has been physically able to entertain the hundred and more guests who always called. Sunday some of the nearest friends were given the privilege of a few moments with her.

For the past few months she has been confined to her bed. Mentally, she is as alert as ever, but a very weak heart tells the stress of 90 years. The tenderest care and solicitude are making these days just as comfortable as possible.

Mrs. Saunders has a sister in the East three years her junior. They are in the last of the generation of Jeffersons to which Joseph, of Rip Van Winkle fame, belonged. Photographs of Joseph Jefferson and Edwin Booth are the two which have always hung close to her rocking chair. Mrs. Saunders' last notable interview was with Tyrone Power of The Servant in the House company. She played with his grandfather just 70 years before the interview.

Personals

HARRY BERESFORD has given his new play, The Better Way, a trial in Seattle.

As usual, Mrs. Saunders' birthday was remembered with the fairest flowers, and every token that devoted friends thought would in any way add to her pleasure or comfort.

ELKAN MORGENSTERN, the Seattle correspondent of THE DRAMATIC REVIEW, was last week elected exalted ruler of Seattle Lodge, No. 92, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

FRANK ATKINS, the Marysville and Oroville manager was a DRAMATIC REVIEW visitor last week. Mr. Atkins will this summer remodel his Oroville house by making it a ground floor theatre.

IGNACIO MARTINETTE joined Babes in Toyland at Salt Lake, March 25th. He is playing his old part of Alan, replacing Eddie Redway who became too tired to play the part effectively.

COL. BILLY THOMPSON is on his way south booming the Burns-Johnson fight pictures. In the meantime Ernest Ely is in town, however, and has a couple of engagements to fulfill at the Beefsteak Club.

SELBY OPPENHEIMER will act as treasurer for Will Greenbaum's attractions at the old Orpheum (renamed The Garrick), succeeding Jack McCarty, whose death a few weeks ago was a shock to many friends.

WILLIAM EMMETTE COLEMAN, author, dramatist and traveler, died at his home in Berkeley last Monday after a brief illness. Among other notable events crowded into his eventful life was the dramatization, in 1864, of East Lynne.

NAT C. GOODWIN has recently produced two new plays. One of them is called The Master Hand and the other, a comedy, is entitled A Native Son. The latter is from the pen of James Montgomery and contains a good part for Edna Goodrich.

Van Ness Theatre

Despite the Holy Week retirement of many theatre goers, Richard Carle and his aggregation have been receiving very fair patronage during the second week of Mary's Lamb. Carle himself has apparently recovered in a marked degree from the indisposition which robbed his work last week of much of its former snap, vim and vigor. He is in better voice, and dances with his old time energy which, at least in a measure, made his fame originally. "Scamp" Montgomery, Mr. Carle's close friend and a comedian of real ability, continues to evoke many laughs in his role of colored servant at the Lambs' home, and though his dialect and mannerisms are far from the real Southern darkey, the house enjoys his foolery which is the consummation to be wished for, and enough. Julie Rolph and Mary Miranda Lamb. George Bogues, Silvain Langlois, Cecelia Rhoda, Violet Seaton and Rita Stanwood contribute each his mite toward the entertainment, and the chorus! Well, the chorus is very, very real, from the "broilers" to the statesque "show girls"—in fact is the best chorus a road show has brought to San Francisco in many moons, both as regards looks, singing and dancing ability.

Valencia Theatre

The Valencia held over Pretty Peggy the first half of the week and closed the house Wednesday night in order that the greatest possible opportunity might be given to the Peter Pan rehearsals. Wednesday night saw the closing of Blanche Stoddard and Beatrice Nichols. Miss Stoddard has done splendid work and her stunning dressing and graciousness will be greatly missed by Valencia audiences. Miss Nichols has impressed herself upon theatre goers as the best sou-brette the city has had in years and there is keen regret that her engagements take her elsewhere.

American Theatre

Black Patti, the only colored woman who has laid claim to pretentious singing, is in town this week, after an absence of five years. She is the same pleasing vocalist as of yore and gives us The Old Folks at Home with an unctious and understanding that few singers have attained. Her company, outside of Tim Owsley, the comedian, is not particularly strong and the rapidly lessening taste for "coon" shows seems to be apparent in the lack of enthusiasm in the audiences. Perhaps this style of show, in California at least, is passing as has lurid melodrama, and then perhaps the Black Patti is no longer the novelty she used to be. And then, again, Holy Week may have its distressing influence. Any way, we wish Manager Voelkel better luck next time, and would suggest a stronger supporting company.

Alcazar Theatre

As regularly as Holy Week comes around are we presented with a very mirth provoking performance of Are You a Mason at the Alcazar. Alcazar patrons are particularly keen for this play and the way it is given by this excellent company is a sufficient excuse, and nightly the Alcazar is showing a well filled house. Bertram Ly-tell, whom many have thought that because he was a leading man and a stage lover par excellence, demonstrates a positively fine comedy vein in the part of Frank Perry, and of course he is given great assistance by that fine comedian, John Maher, who is seen as the father, "the other bogus Mason." Ernest Glendinning assumes the character of the bogus cloak model and has an exceedingly clever make-up, and makes the most of the opportunity to rattle off some real French in a real Parisian way. Howard Hickman enters fully into the humor of Hamilton Travers and executes some enjoyable burlesque speeches. Burt Wesner plays the idiotic part of the country candidate for Masonic honors with fortitude. Adele Belgarde is a splendid, if fiery, mother-in-law and Evelyn Vaughan is bewitching as the young wife. The stage settings are as good as usual and the orchestra selections are enjoyable.

Princess Theatre

Nancy Brown is a most enjoyable show. It has three exceedingly clever comedians—Fred Mace, Frank Moulan and Budd Ross—whose team work and general fooling is worth a whole evening of ordinary entertainment. They certainly could keep an audience busy taking care of laughs for two hours and forty-five minutes. They can sing, they can dance and be funny. And then the chorus! What sprightly girls, what shapely ones they are! They can bowl over any imported group of show girls that ever struck this town. Next week—The Umpire.

A Husband On Salary

The Le Moyne Players, under the management of Robert Riddell, will open for a tour with A Husband on Salary at the Clunie Theatre, Sacramento, tonight. In the company are Charles J. Le Moyne, Charlotte Mundorff, Mrs. Zora Bates and Tike Bates, Florence Rex, Virginia Kelso, Edward Maples, Bertine Van Harlingen, Geo. C. Stanley and Josephine Lansing, musical director. Frank Smith is out in advance.

The Players To Open the Season

The Players, under the management of S. Terry McKean, opens its regular season Monday night at Redwood City. Manager McKean, however, is not breaking in his company or making Redwood the "dog" town, as he gave his company a two weeks' preliminary season playing dates at Concord, Black Diamond, Antioch, Crockett, Pinole and return dates at Black Diamond and Concord. Notwithstanding it rained the entire first week, business was good and return dates were requested in every town.

Manager McKean is mighty proud of his company and declares that he has a "king-pin" repertoire organization. Following is the roster of The Players: S. Terry McKean, manager back with company; Johnny Sire, advance representative; Walter H. Newman, director; Harry Belmour; Stanley De Wolfe; Carrol Ashburn; Bertha Foltz, leads; Miss Grace Johnson; Etta Delmas; Elsa Berg.

An unusually interesting repertoire of standard plays has been selected and as the tour will cover every important center in the state it goes without saying The Players, on this its first season in California, will enjoy a full share of the coming prosperity.

Chicago Has Stock Managers' Meeting

Chicago was the scene during the week of March 15, when the Stock Managers' Association of America was formed at a meeting of local and out-of-town managers. Temporary officers were elected, letters read from managers in various cities from coast to coast, and a charter under Illinois laws was applied for. Another meeting will be held April 22d in Chicago. About thirty managers were present, including W. W. Wittig of the Lyric, Minneapolis; O. D. Woodward of Omaha and Kansas City; George Fish of Cincinnati; John B. Howell of Columbus, Ohio; Edwin Tanhauser of the Bush Temple Theatre, Chicago, and Charles Marvin of the Marlowe, College and People's, Chicago. Proxies for several out-of-town managers were held. One of the chief objects of the Association is to get the use of successful plays sooner than at present. Naturally, an effort will be made to reduce royalties. Mr. Wittig was chosen president pro tem, and Mr. Tanhauser, secretary.

And Clyde Fitch is Really Responsible

The Pennsylvania railroad between New York and Philadelphia is a lane bordered with signs. Great billboards elbow each other and stare the traveler out of countenance. Recently a heavy gale wrecked some of the advertisements. A theatre sign and a soup sign standing side by side were left, reading like this:

GIRLS

BY CLYDE FITCH, JUST ADD HOT WATER AND SERVE.

Henry E. Dixey On Press Agents

Henry E. Dixey, one of the few great American comedians, has well-defined ideas on the art of publicity as well as on the art of expression, and he knows how to express his ideas, too. Dixey is as much opposed to "dog stories" about actors as any over-worked dramatic editor could possibly be. Hence, the other day, when he saw a tale in a newspaper where he was to appear in the big comedy drama, Mary Jane's Pa, he sat down and sent the following to the man in advance of the Henry W. Savage star:

"My Dear Mr. Kirby: From a friend I have received a newspaper clipping stating that 'Henry E. Dixey, who is starring in the big comedy drama success, Mary Jane's Pa, always carries a peacock feather in his pocket for good luck.' Although rabbits' feet are considered talismen and peacock feathers are considered voodooes among actors, Mr. Dixey holds the opposite belief and would never be without a peacock's feather under any circumstance. In fact, on one occasion when he lost his feather he was utterly unnerved until it had been replaced."

"I don't know who conceived this fantastic publicity conceit, but I assure you that I do not and never have considered peacock feathers indispensable to my success. I don't believe in talismen or voodooes, and I never possessed a peacock's feather.

"Permit me, once and for all, to register a positive objection to this sort of thing. Personally and professionally I refuse to be subjected to the claptrap notoriety of which custom has made a convention where actors are concerned. I don't believe in it and I don't want any publicity, saving what I obtain as actor in the reviews by dramatic critics. Of course, I realize that dignified announcements and advertisements of a forthcoming theatrical engagement are necessary for the information of the public, but I will not countenance the 'snake' stories and absurd fakes which are hung upon the names of many actors. Whenever I find it impossible to make good as an actor I will retire. I will never permit myself to be exploited as a freak.

"Players who make flying trips in the cabs of locomotives up and down the columns of newspapers; players who order, through their press agents, enormous automobiles, interiorly constructed like a Pullman car, for touring the country; who make traveling companions of pet snakes; players who possess scarf pins, rings and other personal embellishments, made from the crown jewels of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba; players who pay election bets by driving a four-horse dray loaded with a bag of peanuts through the principal streets of a city; players who do or possess any such silly things undoubtedly are of rare interest to the public; but so is a two-headed chicken, a calf with six legs, a lady with whiskers and a bald man with his nose on the back of his head.

"Stage folk who seek notoriety at any price are largely responsible for the ridicule that has been heaped upon the stage.

"Another point, please. I don't want to be interviewed upon subjects which do not pertain to the stage. I don't want to exploit my ideas on woman's suffrage, suicides, murders or any other topics with which I cannot expect to be familiar. Recently an intelligent newspaper woman wanted to interview me on the art of cooking.

"I am not a cook," I told her, 'I am an actor.'

"'Everybody knows that,' she answered, 'but it would make a corking good story to tell how you would cook a Welsh rabbit.'

"When I still refused she agreed to furnish the recipe, and held forth the alluring prospect of publicity, and evidently considered me a trifle demented when I did not avail myself of this opportunity to achieve culinary fame.

"I cannot understand why playgoers should attend the theatre to see a cook any more than a housewife should call at a dramatic agency to employ one.

"Trusting I have made myself clear, I am,

"Very truly yours,

"HENRY E. DIXEY."

OWING to ill health Evelyn Selbie will retire from the Bentley Stock Co., in Long Beach. Clara Williams will take her place in the leads.

JANE AUBREY, who has been playing leads with Paul Gilmore, is in town, having been compelled to give up her position on account of illness.

Vaudeville

The Orpheum

Diversity, and for the most part, a general excellence marks the bill at the Orpheum this week. Unfortunately a perverse fate decreed that the real headliner, Nlle. Zelle De Lussan, grand opera diva and song-bird, should be obliged through physical incapacity to postpone her appearance for a week. The singer is suffering from a cold and hoarseness, and hence is obliged to take a week's vacation. Tom Nawn with his dainty "and company," the same being sweet little Charlotte Appelle, repeats his success of last year. The Politician, with marked cleverness. Nawn and his eccentric Celtic comedy has ever been a favorite with vaudevillian patrons, as formerly with audiences in attendance at the burlesque and comedy houses. Miss Appelle is charmingly suited to her part of daughter to the drunken politician. Edward Barnes offers some rag-time piano playing and sings a couple of songs. Just what they were about I don't know, for the orchestra played "forte" and Mr. Barnes sang somewhat "piano." Hence—

The playing served to display digital dexterity, if nothing more. S. Miller Kent, supported by Claudia Colona and Dorothy Keene present Marriage in a Motor Car. The title of the sketch is something of a misnomer, for the motor car is only alluded to once during the little playlet, which is clever enough to merit a caption fitting its subject matter. Kent is marring his work more and more every year. Now it is Henry Miller whom he apparently seeks to resemble. His work is forced and lacks the spontaneity of genuine comedy. Miss Colonna does wonders with a part evidently written as a "feeder" for the star, while Miss Keene is a dainty, pretty little housemaid. The Four Casting Dunbars with their old time aerial casting, lightened by some side-splitting comedy, are favorites. The singing of the Eight Melanis elicits even more enthusiasm than when they were here before, and Elsie Faye, accompanied by Miller & Weston, do some dainty dancing and pleasing singing, enhanced by appropriate and up-to-date costuming. Long distance and trick jumping by Chas. Matthews proves interesting. Mr. Matthews, whose pretty little assistant, Doris Reece, announces him as the world's champion jumper, hurdles over piano, chairs, barrels and other obstructions in a startling way, covering almost unbelievable distances in standing leaps. The entertainment of Joly Violetta and her assistant, M. Arnaud, is notable chiefly because of the picturesque costuming of the little Parisian, and the indisputable effectiveness of the final dance number which the two present. It is announced as a Characteristic Brazilian Dance, but in its posturizing, tempo and execution it is strongly reminiscent of a dance which created a storm of protest the country over when brought to the Columbian Exposition from Egypt, and it leaves little to the imagination. Two sets of moving pictures were also shown during the evening.

The Wigwam

The offering for this week contains a galaxy of talent far above the average, and not a dull moment is to be found in the entire offering. Mareena, Nevarre and Mareena have one of the best equilibristic acts seen for some time and hold the audience throughout their act. Their work is the essence of cleverness. John Le Claire is a juggler of ability with some new stunts to introduce. Chas. Morrell has a line of songs, helped out by his banjo, that please, also a few jokes, ditto. The Cartwrights, colored entertainers, are there with the usual song and dance that take with the audience immensely. A big act by a little fellow is to be found in Adolph Zink in a number of character changes of decided cleverness. Motion pictures of an amusing nature, depicting him making the changes, is an interesting addition to the act. Fougere & Emerson come in for their share of approval with their clever singing and dancing turn. The Australian Tree Fellers are something new in the vaudeville line and have an intensely entertaining act which claims the interested attention of the audience at every performance. The motion pictures are exceptionally good and conclude a pleasing and highly satisfactory program.

The National

An expression of satisfaction is carried away by the patrons of the house of Grauman this week attesting an entertainment of gratification. The Girl with the Diamond Heels, assisted by Keller in a number of whistling imitations, gave a pleasing turn. A departure from the usual run of vaudeville sketches is to be found in Alice Davenport's Now, which is of a highly dramatic order, after the style of Camille, with an intense plot leading up to a tragic climax. Miss Davenport as the French danseuse forced through a sense of duty to give up her lover, portrays a difficult role in a conscientious and finished manner, and is given able support by her company. Joe Watson the Hebrew monologist has a funny line of talk to hand out that keeps the audience in good humor. Hetty Urma, the dainty little English comedienne, sings and dances her way into the good graces of her auditors. Elmer Tenley has an awful experience on a crowded street car to relate. It is especially appealing to the natives of San Francisco. Some clever and rapid cartoon work is indulged in by Lightning Hopper, who as a wielder of charcoal shows marked ability. Oh You Chicken is Little Blossom Seeley with her bunch of coon songs. She certainly can shout 'em. Anyone with a fancy running to extremes will like the Marco Twins. Their act is awfully funny and they are clever, and that is the long and short of it. Moving pictures complete an entertaining show.

Pantages-Empire

A rattling good show is on tap at the Empire this week and the special engagement of La Loi Helene in her dancing act, Cleopatra's Death Dance, is a decided acquisition to the bill. While her dancing is not, literally speaking, a sensation, it could easily be made so by a little more ginger and abandon. La Loi Helene's dancing
